THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Book of Psalms, that is, the Book of Hymns or Praises of the Lord, contains the productions of different writers. These productions are called however the Psalms of David, because a great part of them were composed by him. Some of them were perhaps penned before, and some after, the time of David; but all of them by persons under the influence of the Holy Ghost, since all were judged worthy to be inserted into the canon of Sacred Writ. Ezra probably collected them into one book, and placed them in the order which they now preserve. It appears that the 150 Psalms therein contained were selected from a much greater number, which, it may be presumed, were not suggested by the Holy Spirit. The authority of those, which we now possess, is established, not only by their rank among the sacred writings, and by the unvaried testimony of every age, but likewise by many intrinsick proofs of inspiration. Not only do they breathe through every part a Divine spirit of eloquence, but they contain numberless illustrious prophecies that were remarkably accomplished, and that are frequently appealed to by the evangelical writers. The sacred character of the whole Book is established by the testimony of our Saviour and His Apostles; who in various parts of the New Testament apply the predictions of the Psalms as obviously apposite to the circumstances of their lives, and as expressly intended to describe them.

The Psalms are certainly not arranged with any regard to chronology. Nor are the titles prefixed to them always designed to point out the author, but often apply to the persons appointed to set them to musick. They likewise sometimes appear to be only names of instruments, or directions for the choice of tunes.

Moses may be considered as the first composer of sacred hymns; all nations seem afterwards to have adopted this mode of expressing their religious sentiments, and to have employed hymns in celebrating the praises of their respective objects of worship, on the idea, derived perhaps from revealed truth, that they were acceptable to the Divine nature. The composition of sacred hymns was carried to great excellence by succeeding prophets, but was improved to its highest perfection under David, who, if he did not introduce, certainly established the custom of singing them in the publick service, with alternate interchange of verse, as in our cathedral service. And the practice of Psalmody received the sanction of Christ and His Apostles, who themselves recommended the custom by their precept and example.

The version of the Psalms in our Bible, which was made by the Translators employed under King James the First, is posterior to that printed in our Prayer Books, which was executed in 1539. This last, as very excellent and familiarized by custom, was retained in the Liturgy, though, being translated chiefly from the Greek, with some variation in conformity to the Hebrew, it does not so exactly correspond with the original, as does that in our Bibles.

The interesting life of David, who was the principal composer of the Book of Psalms, is described with peculiar minuteness in the historical Books of Scripture; and many of his Psalms are so characteristick of the circumstances under which they were composed, that there cannot be a more engaging task, than that of tracing their connexion with the events of his history; of discovering the occasions on which they were severally produced, and of contemplating the feeling and descriptive sentiments which they contain. If in the successive scenes of his life we behold him active in the exercise of those virtues which his piety produced, we contemplate him in this Book of Psalms in a no less attractive point of view. We here find him a sincere servant of God, divested of all the pride of royalty; pouring out the emotions of his soul, and unfolding his pious sentiment in every vicissitude of condition. At one time we have the prayers of distress: at another, the praises and exultation of triumph. Hence are these Psalms admirably adapted to all the circumstances of life, and serve alike for the indulgence of joy, or the soothing of sorrow; they chase away despondence and affliction; and furnish gladness with the strains of holy and religious rapture. Dr. Gray.

Although David's main purpose in publishing these Divine hymns, setting them to suitable musick, and singing them in the publick worship of God, was to publish to the whole world his endless gratitude for the various and wonderful mercies of God bestowed upon him; yet had he a further, and, if possible, a nobler purpose, that of dispersing true religion throughout every part of his dominions; of inspiring the hearts of his people with a true and lively sense of gratitude to God, their Benefactor, Protector, and Saviour. David well knew, that true gratitude to God is the surest source of true religion, and of every duty enjoined by it: and that, when it is poured out for publick blessings, in which all partake, it naturally mixes with every social affection, and blends them, as it were, into its own being; and by these means becomes the very best bond of society. Therefore, by perpetually pouring out the praises of God in the most exalted and heavenly compositions, and taking all occasions to recount His endless mercies and deliverances wrought for His people from the beginning, he took the most effectual means to fill their hearts with gratitude to their great Benefactor; and, in consequence of that, to render them religiously observant of His laws; to make them humane, friendly, and affectionate to one another, and conscientiously faithful and dutiful to their sovereign. Dr. Delaney.

The Psalms are full of such exalted strains of piety and devotion, such beautiful and animated descriptions of the power, the wisdom, the mercy, the goodness of God, that it is impossible for any one to read them without feeling his heart inflamed with the most ardent affection towards the great Creator and Governour of the universe. Bp. Porteus.

The Psalms are an epitome of the Bible, adapted to the purposes of devotion. They treat occasionally of the creation and formation of the world; the dispensations of Providence, and the economy of grace; the transactions of the patriarchs, the exodus of the children of Israel; their journey through the wilderness, and their settlement in Canaan; their law, priesthood, and ritual; the exploits of their great men wrought through faith; their sins and captivities, their repentances and restorations; the sufferings and victories of David; the peaceful and happy reign of Solomon; the advent of the Messiah with its effects and consequences; His incarnation, birth, life, passion, death, resurrection, ascension, kingdom, and priesthood; the effusion of the Spirit, the conversion of the Gentiles, the rejection of the Jews; the establishment, increase, and perpetuity of the Christian church; the end of the world, the general judgment, the condemnation of the wicked, and the final triumph of the righteous with their Lord and King. These are the subjects which are presented to our imaginations. We are instructed how to conceive the subjects aright, and how to express the different affections which, when conceived aright, they must excite in our minds. In the language of this Divine Book, the prayers of the Church have been offered up to the throne of grace from age to age. And it appears to have been the manual of the Son of God in the days of His flesh; who at the conclusion of His supper is generally supposed, and that upon good grounds, to have sung an hymn taken from it; who pronounced upon the cross the beginning of the twenty-second Psalm, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" and expired with a part of the thirty-first in His mouth, "Into Thy hands I commend My spirit." Thus He, who spake as never man spake, chose to conclude His life, to solace Himself in His greatest agony, and at last to breathe out His soul, in the Psalmist's form of words rather than His own. No tongue of man, or angel, as Dr. Raymond justly observes, can convey a higher idea of any Book, and of their felicity who use it right.

Let us stop for a moment to contemplate the true character of these sacred hymns. Greatness confers no exemption from the pains and sorrows of life. This the Israelitish monarch experienced. He sought in piety that peace which he could not find in empire, and alleviated the disquietudes of state with the exercises of devotion.

His invaluable Psalms convey those comforts to others which they afforded to himself. Composed upon particular occasions, yet designed for general use; delivered out as services for Israelites under the Law, yet no less adapted to the circumstances of Christians under the Gospel; they present religion to us in the most engaging dress; communicating truths which philosophy could never investigate, in a style which poetry can never equal. Calculated alike to profit and to please, they inform the understanding, elevate the affections, and entertain the imagination. Indited under the influence of Him, to whom all hearts are open, and all events foreknown, they suit mankind in all situations, grateful as the manna which descended from above, and conformed itself to every palate. The fairest productions of human wit, after a few perusals, like gathered flowers, wither in our hands, and lose their fragrancy; but these unfading plants of Paradise become, as we are more accustomed to them, still more and more beautiful; their bloom appears to be daily heightened, fresh odours are emitted, and new sweets are extracted from them. He who has once tasted their excellencies, will desire to taste them again; and he who tastes them oftenest, will relish them best. Bp. Horne.

The Jews, at some uncertain period, divided the Book of Psalms into five sections or books, probably in imitation of the division of the Pentateuch. These divisions end respectively with the 41st, the 72d, the 89th, the 106th, and the 150th. The four first books of this division terminate with the word Amen, and with a peculiar form of doxology, or praise to God, which was probably, in each instance, added by the collector of the Book of Psalms. Our present order of the Psalms is perhaps that, in which they were sung in the Temple; and this may account for the occasional repetitions. Dr. Gray, Travell.

PSALM I.

1 The happiness of the godly. 4 The unhappiness of the ungodly.

[a] Prov. 4. 14.
‖ Or, wicked.

BLESSED [a] is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ‖ ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful.

2 But his delight is in the law of the [c] Jer. 17. 8. day and night.

3 And he shall be like a tree [c] planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not † wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper.

4 The ungodly are not so: but are [d] like the chaff which the wind driveth away.

[d] Ps. 35. 5. Isai. 17. 13.

5 Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous.

6 For the LORD knoweth the way of the righteous: but the way of the ungodly shall perish.

PSALM II.

1 The kingdom of Christ. 10 Kings are exhorted to accept it.

Psalm I. This Psalm was placed first as a preface to all the rest, being a powerful persuasive to the diligent reading and serious study of the whole book, and of the rest of the Holy Scriptures, taken from that blessedness which attends upon this study and practice. Poole.

Ver. 1. Blessed is the man &c.] In other words, Great is the happiness of that man, who hath not trod in the steps of the ungodly, or, if he hath at any time been seduced by them, did not persist, like those hardened wretches, in evil courses; much less proceed so far in his impiety, as to be one of that company who deride and scoff at religion. Bp. Patrick.

4. — like the chaff &c.] The method of winnowing their corn anciently, and as it is now practised in the East, was by throwing it up against the wind with a shovel. Dr. Shaw.

5. — shall not stand in the judgment.] That is, shall not carry their cause, but in the issue of things shall come off defeated and condemned by God and the world. Mudge. Or, shall not be able to justify themselves, or endure the wrath of the Almighty at the last day. S. Clarke.

6. — knoweth the way] Meaning, approveth the way. Dimock.

This Psalm, like the sermon on the mount, opens with a "beatitude" for our comfort and encouragement, directing us immediately to that happiness, which all mankind in different ways are seeking after. He who hath once brought himself to "delight" in the Scriptures, will find no temptation to exchange that pleasure for any which the world or the flesh can offer him. Such an one will make the oracles of God his companions by day and by night. He will have recourse to them for direction, in the bright and cheerful hours of prosperity; to them he will apply for comfort, in the dark and dreary seasons of adversity. And, by continual meditation in the Sacred Writings, he will as naturally improve and advance in holiness, as a tree thrives and flourishes in a kindly and well-watered soil. Bp. Horne.

Psalm II. This Psalm may be supposed to relate, in the first place, to David, whom God established upon the throne of Israel, notwithstanding the opposition of his enemies. It contains also an illustrious prophecy of the kingdom of Jesus Christ, which, in spite of every attempt, both of Jews and Gentiles, God has wonderfully established, even to the uttermost parts of the earth. It is appointed to be read on Easter-day, when our Lord, by His resurrection, took possession of this glorious kingdom. Travell, Bp. Patrick. The sole application of the illustrious prophecy contained in this Psalm to the Messiah was the unquestionable doctrine of the primitive Jewish church. Dr. Hales.

PSALM III.

The security of God's protection.

¶ A Psalm of David, [a] when he fled from Absalom his son.
[a] 2 Sam. 15. 13.

LORD, how are they increased that trouble me? many are they that rise up against me.
2 Many there be which say of my soul, There is no help for him in God. Selah.
3 But thou, O LORD, art a shield ‖ for me; my glory, and the lifter up of mine head.
4 I cried unto the LORD with my voice, and he heard me out of his holy hill. Selah.
5 [b] I laid me down and slept; I awaked; for the LORD sustained me.
[b] Ps. 4. 8.
6 [c] I will not be afraid of ten thousands of people, that have set themselves against me round about.
[c] Ps. 27. 3.
7 Arise, O LORD; save me, O my God: for thou hast smitten all mine enemies upon the cheek bone; thou hast broken the teeth of the ungodly.

Ver. 1. Why do the heathen &c.] That is, Why do the Jews and Heathens combine together to attempt, what they will never be able to accomplish? Travell.

2. The kings of the earth &c.] The kings and governours of the surrounding nations conspire together to oppose the decrees of Providence, and to prevent David from sitting upon the throne of Israel; in the same manner as the rulers of the Jews will conspire against Jesus Christ, the anointed Saviour. Travell.

3. Let us &c.] Let us, say they, break asunder their fetters, and cast away from us their yoke. Dr. Kennicott.

5, 6. Then shall he speak &c.] Their impious opposition will raise His just indignation, as if He had actually spoken to them from heaven, and said, Notwithstanding all your vain attempts, I have anointed David to be king over My people Israel; as in future times I will anoint One of his posterity to sit at My right hand upon the throne of glory. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

7. — Thou art my Son; &c.] These words are eminently true of Jesus the Messiah in a prophetical sense, who was invested with the royal office, when He was raised from the dead, and exalted at God's right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, Rom. i. 8. Acts xiii. 33. Green.

12. Kiss the Son,] To "kiss" a person when appointed king, was among the eastern people an act of homage. Thus Samuel, when he had anointed Saul king, "kissed him," that is, acknowledged him for his sovereign, 1 Sam. x. 1. Green. See the note on Gen. xli. 40.

"Kiss the Son," that is, submit to Him, worship and love Him; "lest He be angry," lest He turn that grace and favour which He has offered you into heavy displeasure, "and ye perish in the way," ye be suddenly cut off in the midst of your counsels. S. Clarke.

The confidence which David manifests in this Psalm, shews, in general, that attempts against the designs of God are vain; and that nothing can hurt those whom He loves, and has promised to bless. But the application which the Apostles make to our Lord of these words, "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten Thee," engages us more especially to consider this Psalm as it relates to the kingdom of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, which has been established in the world, in spite of all opposition from kings and the great men of the earth, and will subsist for ever. And since this kingdom is established among us, and we have the happiness to be Christ's subjects, let us submit ourselves to this glorious King; let us serve Him with humility and joy, and place all our trust and confidence in His favour and protection. Osterwald.

Psalm III. The title of this Psalm explains the occasion of it; and it is impossible an hymn could be composed with greater propriety, or nobler sentiments of religion, at a time when David was given over by many as absolutely lost, and his enemies thought it was beyond the power of God to save him. Dr. Chandler.

Ver. 2. — Selah.] It cannot certainly be known what is meant by this word; the most probable opinion is, that it was a note in musick. Bp. Patrick.

This Hebrew word is found seventy times in the Psalms, and three times in Habakkuk. One conjecture is, that it means "the end" or "a pause," and that the ancient musicians put it occasionally in the margin of their psalters, to shew where a musical pause was to be made, and where the tune ended. Calmet.

3. — the lifter up of mine head.] David means by this expression, that God would remove his distresses, and make him triumph over all his enemies. Dr. Chandler.

4. — out of his holy hill.] That is, out of the tabernacle or place of His religious worship, which was on Sion, called on that account His holy hill. Dr. Wells.

7. — for thou hast smitten.] The Hebrew properly means, "Thou art wont to smite," "Thou smitest continually."

— broken the teeth.] As men of violence are frequently resem-

PSALM IV.

To the chief Musician on Neginoth, A Psalm of David.

1 David prayeth for audience. 2 He reproveth and exhorteth his enemies. 6 Man's happiness is in God's favour.

[1] Or, over

HEAR me when I call, O God of my righteousness: thou hast enlarged me when I was in distress; or, have mercy upon me, and hear my prayer.

2 O ye sons of men, how long will ye turn my glory into shame? how long will ye love vanity, and seek after leasing? Selah.

3 But know that the LORD hath set apart him that is godly for himself: the LORD will hear when I call unto him.

4 Stand in awe, and sin not: commune with your own heart upon your bed, and be still. Selah.

5 Offer [2] the sacrifices of righteousness, and put your trust in the LORD.

[2] Psal. 50. 14. & 51. 19.

6 There be many that say, Who will shew us any good? LORD, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us.

7 Thou hast put gladness in my heart, more than in the time that their corn and their wine increased.

8 [b] I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for thou, LORD, only makest me dwell in safety.

PSALM V.

1 David prayeth, and professeth his study in prayer. 4 God favoureth not the wicked. 7 David, professing his faith, prayeth unto God to guide him, 10 to destroy his enemies, 11 and to preserve the godly.

bled to wild ravenous beasts, so the power or means made use of by such men to oppress others, are fitly denoted by the teeth, cheekbone, or jaws, &c.; these being the parts, whereby beasts of prey chiefly devour their prey. Hence, to break the teeth, cheekbone, &c. of an enemy, is frequently used in Scripture to denote the depriving an enemy of his power to hurt. Dr. Wells.

8. — thy blessing is upon thy people.] Rather, May Thy blessing be upon Thy people. Green.

The example of king David in this Psalm should teach us, that all our security depends upon God's protection, of which neither the power nor malice of our enemies can deprive us, if we repose our trust and confidence in Him. We should therefore pray to Him, that He would not suffer us to be misled by any worldly designs or stratagems, but that He would be our shield, our comforter, and supporter, and make the world see that salvation belongeth only to Him, and that His blessing is peculiar to His people. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm IV. When, or upon what occasion David penned this Psalm, is not certainly known, though the matter of it makes it probable, it was in the same (or the like) distress wherein he composed the foregoing. Bp. Patrick.

— chief Musician] That is, the master or director of the sacred musicians and musick of the temple: of whom see 1 Chron. vi. 31. and xv. 16. Poole.

— Neginoth.] Stringed instruments played on with a bow. Dr. Kennicott.

By these words, "To the chief Musician," &c. he seems to mean, I recommend this Psalm to the care and ordering of the master or director of the sacred musick in the temple, and him who plays most skilfully upon stringed instruments. S. Clarke.

Ver. 1. — O God of my righteousness:] O my righteous God. Bp. Hare, Edwards. Or the expression may mean, O God, who art to do me justice, to whom I apply for justice. Mudge, Merrick. O God, the witness and defender of my righteous cause. S. Clarke.

— enlarged me.] Set me free from distress. Street.

2. O ye sons of men, &c.] O ye wicked men, how long will ye defame my government? how long will ye carry on your vain attempts, and go on in lying and spreading false calumnies against me? Dr. Wells. Otherwise, by "my glory" he may mean, "God who is my glory:" for so God is called, Psalm iii. 3. and cvi. 20. David was accustomed to glory, and with good reason, on account of his steadfast worship of the true God, and of His favour towards him. This zeal for God's service exposed him to the censure of disgrace and ridicule by the wicked. Le Clerc.

4. Stand in awe, and sin not:] The rendering of the Greek is, "Be ye angry, and sin not;" that is, Though you be angry, take care you do not sin. So St. Paul (Ephes. iv. 26.) recites it. Dr. Wall.

5. Offer the sacrifices of righteousness,] That is, act righteously, which is the most acceptable sacrifice. Dr. Wells.

6. There be many &c.] This seems to relate to the righteous, who, in times of calamity and persecution, like the friends of distressed David, are tempted to despond, on seeing no end of their troubles. Bp. Horne.

—— lift thou up &c.] Manifest Thy love and favour to me and mine. S. Clarke.

7. Thou hast put &c.] Other men do not so much rejoice in their vintage and harvest, when it is most abundant, as I do in the assurance of Thy favour towards me. Bp. Hall.

We may learn from this Psalm, 1st, That however our enemies seek to oppress us, yet God, whose power no man can resist, hath chosen to Himself, and will take to His love, those who are godly, and that when they cry unto Him, He will hear them. 2dly, That we ought to "commune with our own hearts," which, in the language of Scripture, is to retreat from the world, and give ourselves up to private meditation and reflexion. And the design of this self-communion is, to restrain us from vice; to cherish and improve the seeds of virtue; to give us leisure for examining into the state of our souls; to stamp upon our hearts a love for God, and a reverence for His laws; to make us, in short, "stand in awe and sin not." 3dly, That in God alone is rest, in Him security, in Him tranquillity. We ought therefore to pray to our heavenly Father, that, amidst all the storms and troubles of this life, we may lie down and sleep in peace, looking up to Him for safety, succour, and protection. Bp. Nicholson, Bp. Porteus.

Psalm V. David most probably composed this Psalm, when he was persecuted by Saul or Absalom, and their adherents. Edwards.

— Nehiloth.] That is, organs or other wind-instruments. Dr. Wells.

6. — that speak leasing:] That make it their business to raise and disperse false and scandalous reports of me. S. Clarke.

8. Lead me, &c.] Guide me, O Lord, in the plain path of truth and righteousness, lest, if I err from it, my enemies rejoice and triumph. Travell.

9. — their throat is an open sepulchre;] They utter mischief with open mouths, gaping, like noisome tombs, to swallow up the innocent. Travell.

10. Destroy thou them.] Concerning passages of this imprecatory kind in the book of Psalms, it is to be observed, that they are not spoken of private and personal enemies, but of the opposers of God and His anointed; nor of any among these, but the irreclaimable and finally impenitent; and this by way of prediction rather than imprecation; which would appear, if the original verbs were translated, as they should be, in the future tense. The verse before us would then run thus: "Thou wilt destroy them, O God; they shall perish by their own counsels: Thou wilt cast them out in the multitude of their trangressions, for they have rebelled against Thee." Bp. Horne.

These four things are remarkable in this Psalm: 1st, The fervency and confidence with which good men call upon the Lord in their necessities. 2d, Their zeal for His service, and the joy and reverence with which they adore Him, in places set apart for publick worship. 3d, God's abhorrence and detestation of sin, and especially of pride and deceit; and the punishment reserved for the proud and unjust. And lastly, His favourable protection of all those that fear Him, and trust in Him. Osterwald.

Psalm VI. In this Psalm are described two conditions of the writer: in the first, he complains of some grievous disorder, heightened by the malicious joy of his enemies, from which he prays to be relieved; in the second, his prayer is answered, and he triumphs in the disappointment of his enemies. Mudge. This being one of the penitential Psalms, is appointed to be used on Ash-wednesday, and is suitable to the condition of those, who are any ways afflicted or distressed, in mind, body, or estate. Travell.

— Neginoth upon Sheminith,] The harp of eight strings. Bp. Patrick.

Ver. 2. — my bones are vexed.] That is, shaken, or made to tremble. Bp. Horne. My pain reaches to my bones and inward parts. S. Clarke.

3. — but thou, O Lord, how long?] But Thou, O Lord, how long wilt Thou thus afflict me? Dr. Wells.

5. For in death there is no remembrance of thee.] For the dead are utterly unable to commemorate Thy wonderful works, and propagate the memory of them to posterity. Bp. Patrick.

7. — it waxeth old] That is, dim, or is grown stiff with weeping. Bp. Wilson, Green.

8. Depart from me, &c.] Away with your idolatrous insinuations, as if the God of Israel could not deliver His servant: He hath heard his prayer, and will deliver him from death, and from your expectation of triumphing in his fall. Green.

—— ye workers of iniquity;] Ye that put your trust in idols. Bp. Wilson.

We are all God's children, and reproof and correction is as due to children from their parents, as nourishment; they cannot prosper without it: crosses and afflictions are God's chastisements, without which we cannot be, if we are His children. Therefore the pious and godly man does not, must not pray, that all things may succeed according to his own wish, and that he may know nothing but prosperity in this world: all that he prays is, that those afflictions, which he must pass through, may not fall upon him out of God's anger, and that His displeasure may not pursue him beyond that adversity. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm VII. David is said to have composed this Psalm concerning the words, or the matter of Cush the Benjamite. Whether Saul, or Shimei, or any one else, be intended under this name, it is sufficiently clear, that David had been maliciously aspersed and calumniated by such a person: and that the Psalm was written to vindicate himself from the imputation, whatever was the nature of it. Bp. Horne.

Shiggaion.] This word denotes a wandering song, or a Psalm ascribed to David, as composed by him in the time of his wanderings, when he was falsely accused by his enemies, and hunted by Saul, as a partridge on the mountains. Fenwick. Or it may mean a song expressing grief. Dr. Kennicott, Street.

Otherwise, it is thought to be the name of a certain kind of song, to the tune of which this Psalm was to be sung. S. Clarke.

Ver. 2. Lest he tear &c.] Lest mine enemy tear, &c. Green.

3. — done this;] With which I am falsely charged. Bp. Wil on.

4. If I have rewarded &c.] David probably alludes to the circumstance of Saul's life having been twice preserved by him, when he had been pressed by his attendants to embrace the opportunity of taking it away. See 1 Sam. xxiv. and xxvi. Bp. Horne.

6. — awake for me to the judgment &c.] Inflict that punishment upon mine enemies which Thou hast commanded should be inflicted upon malicious oppressors and persecutors. Dr. Clarke.

7. So shall the congregation — compass thee about:] So, by seeing justice done to me through Thy special Providence, shall the congregation of the people be induced to resort unto Thee to do them justice. Dr. Wells. "Compass Thee about" with prayer for Thy goodness to me, and for the manifold blessings they shall enjoy under my government. S. Clarke.

—— return thou on high.] When God seems to take no notice of the transgressions of men, it is as if He descended from the place of His power, and from His judgment-seat; but when He visits and judges their iniquities, He seems to elevate Himself on high, or to return to His judgment-seat. Edwards.

9. — trieth the hearts and reins.] That is, knoweth intimately the very thoughts and desires of all men. Bp. Horne.

11. God judgeth the righteous,] The meaning is, God will maintain the cause of the righteous. Dr. Wells.

12. If he turn not, he will whet &c.] If the wicked will not repent, God will whet &c. Dr. Wells. "Whet his sword," prepare and speedily execute His judgments upon him. S. Clarke.

14. Behold, he travaileth &c.] See the folly of these wicked plots and contrivances against my life, which shall all miscarry, and deceive the expectation of this wicked slanderer. Travell.

15. He made a pit,] This alludes to the method of catching wild beasts in pits covered over slightly with reeds or small branches of trees. Dr. Shaw.

We learn from this Psalm, that the wickedness of the ungodly shall come to an end; that God lets them alone, and bears with them for a time; but if they persist in their wickedness, He prepares for them the punishments they deserve, and will make the evil which they design for others fall upon their own heads. These are powerful motives to induce us to adore the justice of God: to improve by His forbearance and longsuffering; and to avoid every thing that may expose us to His vengeance. Osterwald.

Psalm VIII. The scope and meaning of this Psalm seems plainly to be this: to display and celebrate the great love of God to man, not only in his creation, but especially in his redemption by Jesus Christ; whom, as He was man, He advanced to the honour and dominion here mentioned, that He might carry on that great and glorious work. Thus Christ is the principal subject of this Psalm, of whom it is interpreted, both by Christ Himself, Matth. xxi. 16, and by His holy Apostle, 1 Cor. xv. 27. Hebr. ii. 6, 7. Poole.

In a prophetical sense, it is understood of Christ's victory over Satan. Reeves.

This Psalm is suited to the service of the Ascension-day, when we commemorate so signal a proof of the Divine love, as the exaltation of our nature, in the second Adam, to the right hand of the Majesty on high. Travell.

— upon Gittith,] Some have supposed this expression to denote, that this Psalm was to be sung to a harp which David brought with him from Gath: others, to a musical instrument used at the time of the vintage. Both may be true: the instrument bearing this name might have been used by the people of Gath; and the Jews might have adopted it from them, and afterwards it might have become the favourite instrument amidst the festivity and dances of the vintage. Street.

Ver. 2. Out of the mouth &c.] Thou art pleased to make choice of the meanest and most humble persons, and even very children in age, to sing hosannas to the Son of David, Matt. xxi. 16. to acknowledge Thy power and majesty. And this Thou hast done, that they whose pride makes them resist and despise Thee, may be thus visibly punished; and the power of the devil destroyed. Dr. Hammond.

3—6. When I consider &c.] When, on the one hand, I survey the glorious bodies in the heavens, and compare them with man, I am induced to think degradingly of him, and to wonder why he should be the object of Thy care. When, on the other hand, I consider the rank of being in which Thou at first placedst man, making him but a little below the angels, I correct myself for having made too degrading a comparison of him, and adore Thee for Thy providential care of him at present, and for the dignity to which Thou didst advance him, when Thou madest him the head of the visible creation. Green.

4. — visitest him?] With Thy presence and protection. Bp. Wilson.

The following prayer is so well adapted to the sentiments contained in this Psalm, that it may be added in the place of practical reflexion. O our God, since Thou hast been so mindful of us, never suffer us to be unmindful of Thee: since Thou hast shewed Thy mercy in visiting and redeeming us, never let us shew ourselves unthankful for this Thy visitation and redemption. Suffer us not to abuse Thy creatures which Thou hast given us for food, nor Thy gifts bestowed for clothing, nor wantonly and cruelly to make use of our dominion. But give us grace so highly to esteem Thy rich mercies, and with such temperance and sobriety to use Thy creatures, that Thy name thereby may still be more magnified, Thy bounty exalted, Thy providence more declared, Thy honour enlarged, Thy person glorified, and our souls at last saved by the merits of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Bp. Nicholson.

Psalm IX. This Psalm consists of two parts; a thanksgiving, and a prayer. Upon what particular occasion it was composed, is not known; probably, to celebrate the victories gained by David over the neighbouring nations, after God had exalted him to be king in Sion. Bp. Horne.

This and the two following are the proper Psalms appointed for the fast service on the thirtieth of January.

— Muth-labben,] Some suppose Labben to be the name of a prince or chief in the enemy's army; and Muth-labben to mean "the death of Labben," in celebration of which this Psalm may have been composed. Dimock. Or it may be the title of a tune or instrument. S. Clarke.

Ver. 3. When mine enemies &c.] Rather, It was Thou who madest my enemies turn their backs, and through the dread of Thee they fell and were destroyed. Bp. Patrick.

12. When he maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them:] When He calls His enemies to account for the blood of His people, which they unjustly shed or coveted. S. Clarke.

To "make inquisition for blood," is not to inquire after blood spilt, but to sit as inquisitor or judge on all capital crimes, where the blood of the offender is due to justice. "Them" refers to the "humble" or afflicted, at the end of the verse. Mudge.

14. — in the gates of the daughter of Zion:] That is, in the solemn assemblies of Thy people, the inhabitants of Zion. S. Clarke.

15. — in the pit] See the note on Psalm vii. 15.

Or possibly the word here means an interlude of soft whispering notes, as Selah another of bolder and louder ones. Mudge, Dr. Kennicott.

17. — into hell,] By the word "hell" in this place is meant the region of the dead; and the psalmist seems to foretell that the wicked will descend to the grave by some great and signal overthrow. Mudge, Edwards.

The Psalmist here teaches us, that God will reign for ever, and will judge the world with righteousness; that He will render to the wicked according to their works; that all those who forget Him shall perish, that He will not suffer the wicked always to prevail; that He never forsakes those that seek Him; and that the expectation of the sorrowful shall not be in vain. These are feelings which we should always retain, which should fill us with trust in His name, and strongly engage us to fear Him. Ob-servedd.

Psalm X. Some have supposed this Psalm to have been occasioned by foreign enemies making inroads into the country; and others by domestick ones in the court of Saul. Mudge, Rosenmuller.

Ver. 2. — the poor:] This word here means, the humble, the afflicted, and helpless. Bp. Wilson.

3. For the wicked boasteth &c.] The first part of this verse points out that alarming symptom of a reprobate mind, a disposition to exult and glory in those lusts which are the shame and disgrace of human nature, whether the world or the flesh be their object. The latter clause is differently rendered, as implying either that "the wicked blesseth the covetous, whom God abhorreth," or that "the wicked, being covetous, or oppressive, blesseth himself, and abhorreth the Lord." Either way, an oppressing, griping, worldly spirit is characterized, with its direct opposition to the Spirit of God, which teaches that sin is to be confessed with shame and sorrow; that in God alone man is to make his boast; and that it is more blessed to give than to receive. Bp. Horne.

5. His ways are always grievous; &c.] That is, always troublesome and injurious to all about him. S. Clarke. As for God's laws and judgments, he never lays them to heart; and he despises and contemns all his opposers. Dr. Hammond.

12. — the humble.] Or rather, the "afflicted," as in the margin. Street.

13. — Thou will not require it.] The wicked concludes from God's patience, that He will never punish him. Bp. Patrick.

15. Break thou &c.] This may be either a prayer, or a prediction, implying that the time will come, when the power of Jehovah will dash in pieces that of the enemy, by the demolition either of sin or the sinner, until wickedness be come utterly to an end, and righteousness be established for ever in the kingdom of the Messiah. Bp. Horne.

18. To judge the fatherless &c.] Thy gracious assistance shall assert the right of those who are helpless and oppressed; so that their insolent persecutors, whose sordid minds cling entirely to this world, may be prevented from doing them further mischief. Travell.

We may learn from this Psalm, 1st, That to behold the righteous cause oppressed, and good men seemingly deserted by Heaven, is apt to offend the weak, and oftentimes stagger those who are strong. 2dly, That prosperity begets presumption in the wicked; and he, who has been long accustomed to see his designs succeed, begins to think it impossible they should ever do otherwise. The longsuffering of God, instead of leading such an one to repentance, only hardens him in his iniquity. 3dly, That though "the wicked saith in his heart, Thou wilt not require it," the faithful know assuredly, that God beholds all that travail and vexation which some inflict, and others sustain, upon the earth; and that He will infallibly recompense to the former their deeds, to the latter their sufferings. Bp. Horne.

Psalm XI. This Psalm seems to have been composed by David, when, in order to avoid the evil designs of Saul, his friends advised him to flee to the mountainous parts of Judea. Edwards.

In the first verse David expostulates with his friends for advising him to fly to the mountainous parts of Judea, as the only safe retreat from Saul. In the second and third verses, he subjoins the reasons which his friends assigned for their advice. In the four last, he replies to the advice of his friends, telling them that the God of heaven, who searcheth the heart, would protect the innocent. Green.

Ver. 3. If the foundations be destroyed, &c.] When the fundamental laws of the land, such as stipulate protection to the subject, are subverted by the prince, who ought to be the guardian of them, what has the persecuted subject to trust to? or what can he do, but, as in a state of nature, fly to the fastnesses of the mountains for security? Green. Had David been guilty of any crime, he ought to have had a fair trial by the laws: but Saul tried to assassinate him, contrary to justice, and to the fundamental law of all nations. Dr. Kennicott.

4. The Lord is in his holy temple, &c.] The meaning is, that the Lord is the supreme and righteous Ruler of all affairs; that He knows the most secret designs of men, and can disappoint them. Bp. Patrick, Dr. Wells.

6. — snares.] Or, "burning coals." Bp. Horne. By this word, live coals, or simply the lightning, seems to be understood. Bp. Lowth.

—— fire and brimstone.] These terms are evidently borrowed from the history of Sodom and Gomorrah. St. John also, at the conclusion of his prophecy, Rev. xx. describing the destruction of the ungodly, refers to the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, which, as St. Jude informs us, "are set forth for an example," or figure, "suffering the vengeance of eternal fire," Jude ver. 7. Bp. Horne. They mean dreadful judgments in this world, and eternal vengeance in the world to come. S. Clarke.

—— the portion of their cup.] It being the custom, in old

PSALM XIII.

1 David complaineth of delay in help. 3 He prayeth for preventing grace. 5 He boasteth of divine mercy.

To the ‖ chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

‖ Or, overseer.

HOW long wilt thou forget me, O LORD? for ever? how long wilt thou hide thy face from me?

2 How long shall I take counsel in my soul, having sorrow in my heart daily? how long shall mine enemy be exalted over me?

3 Consider and hear me, O LORD my God: lighten mine eyes, lest I sleep the sleep of death;

4 Lest mine enemy say, I have prevailed against him; and those that trouble me rejoice when I am moved.

5 But I have trusted in thy mercy; my heart shall rejoice in thy salvation.

6 I will sing unto the LORD, because he hath dealt bountifully with me.

PSALM XIV.

1 David describeth the corruption of a natural man. 4 He convinceth the wicked by the light of their conscience. 7 He glorieth in the salvation of God.

times, to set before each guest a certain portion of liquor for his share; it is very common in Scripture to describe the different allotments, which the providence of God dispenses to good and bad men, by the image of a cup. Travell.

This Psalm furnishes us with an example of the confidence which the righteous have in the Lord their God, who is their sure refuge, even when they are in the most deplorable condition, and know not what will become of them. It also teaches us, that God has His throne in the heavens; that He sees and knows both the good and the wicked; that His soul hates those that love unrighteousness; that He will cause the fire of His vengeance to fall upon them; and, as He is perfectly just Himself, He loves justice above all things, and always favours the upright. Osterwald.

Psalm XII. This Psalm is a complaint of the corrupt manners of that age, especially, as is probable, of the court of Saul; so that it was hard to find an honest plaindealing man, in whom one might confide. Bp. Patrick.

It was probably written on the occasion of Saul's evil administration, and the persecution of David and other good men. S. Clarke.

Ver. 2. They speak vanity.] Or falsehood. Mudge.

4. Who have said, &c.] Who have said, We will prevail by false accusations, we are not afraid to speak or affirm what we please; for who can call us to account for what we say, however false it may be? Dr. Wells.

6. The words of the Lord are pure words:] The promises which God hath made to me and His people have no deceit in them, but shall certainly be fulfilled in their season. S. Clarke.

8. The wicked walk &c.] It must needs be, that wicked men should abound every where, when the worst men are exalted and preferred to places of honour and command. Bp. Hall. The vile men, whom David here complains of as advanced to power, were probably his persecutors in the days of Saul, such as Doeg, Cush, &c. Green.

For the consolation of the afflicted and poor in spirit, God hath promised in this Psalm, to "arise, and set them in safety," or place them in a state of salvation. Such all along has been His promise to the Church, which, by looking back to the deliverances wrought of old for the servants of God, is now encouraged to look forward and expect her final redemption from the scorn and insolence of infidelity. Bp. Horne.

Psalm XIII. In this Psalm David, being in danger from his enemy, entreats the Lord to deliver him, and rejoices in hopes of His salvation. Green.

Ver. 2. — shall I take counsel in my soul,] That is, Shall I be perplexed in my soul, not knowing which way to turn? Bp. Horne.

3. — lighten mine eyes, &c.] Give me wisdom to find out proper measures for my safety, and cheer my spirits; lest I die with grief, or my enemy destroy me. Dr. Wells.

4. — when I am moved.] Or overcome by them. Dr. Wells.

It is observable, that this, and many other psalms with a mournful beginning, have a triumphant ending; to shew us the prevailing power of devotion, and to convince us that prayer brings with it the comforts of heaven, and revives our weary spirits, in the gloomy seasons of sorrow and temptation. Bp. Horne.

[a] Ps. 10. 4. & 53. 1.

[a] THE fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. They are corrupt, they have done abominable works, there is none that doeth good.

6 Ye have shamed the counsel of the poor, because the LORD is his refuge.

† Heb. Who will give, &c.

7 † Oh that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! when the LORD bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad.

Psalm XIV. David here complains of the impiety and general corruption of the people who had led the Israelites into captivity; describes their terrours; and begs of God to bring back His captive people to their own land. Green.

2. The Lord looked down &c.] Contrary to the opinion of the wicked, the Lord has all along "looked down from heaven upon the children of men." Dr. Wells.

4. — eat up my people as they eat bread,] That is, cruelly devour my people without fear or remorse. Bp. Hall.

5. There were they in great fear: &c.] In the parallel place, Ps. liii. 5, after the words, "There were they in great fear," are added these, "where no fear was;" which certainly connect better with what follows, "for God is in the generation of the righteous." David is supposed to be speaking primarily of Israel's defection from him to Absalom, and here to be assigning the motive of that defection in many, namely, fear of the rebels' growing power, and distrust of his ability to protect them; which fear, he observes, was groundless, because his cause was the cause of God, who would not fail to appear in its support and vindication. Bp. Horne.

6. Ye have shamed the counsel of the poor,] Laughed at his dependence upon God. Bp. Wilson.

7. Oh that the salvation &c.] This pious wish is uttered by David, that it would please God, who dwelleth in Zion "between the cherubims," Ps. lxxx. 1, to send from thence, as from His throne, deliverance to His people; redeeming them from the oppression and captivity under which they laboured. Fenton.

The works of God are so visible to all the world, and afford such manifest indications of the being and attributes of the infinite Creator, that they plainly argue the vileness and perverseness of the Atheist, and leave him inexcusable. For it is a sign a man is a wilful perverse Atheist, that will impute so glorious a work, as the creation is, to any thing, yea, a mere nothing, (as chance is,) rather than to God. It is a sign the man is wilfully blind, that he is under the power of the devil, under the government of prejudice, lust, and passion, not right reason, that will not discern what "every one can see, what every man may behold afar off," Job xxxvi. 25, even the existence and attributes of the Creator from His works. Dr. Derham.

Psalm XV. In this Psalm the author describes a citizen of Zion; or what is necessary and requisite in the conduct and behaviour of a member of the Jewish church. Edwards. This seems to be a contrast to the preceding Psalm: it is appointed to be used on the Ascension-day, as it contains the character of one, who should be qualified to ascend into the hill, and dwell in the presence of God, whither our Saviour Christ is gone before. Travell.

Psalm XV. 1. shall abide in thy tabernacle?] Who shall be admitted to the tabernacle on Thy holy mountain? or who shall have the privilege of worshipping therein? Travell. Who shall be accounted a true member of the kingdom of grace here, and of glory hereafter? S. Clarke.

4. — He that sweareth &c.] He that promises by an oath to do a thing, and does accordingly, though it be to his own hurt, and breaks not his oath. Dr. Wells.

5. He that putteth not out his money to usury,] That is, to any poor brother Israelite, God having forbidden usury in this case: (see Deut. xxiii. 19, 20.) Dr. Wells.

— shall never be moved.] Shall never fail of God's favour. Dr. Wells.

The following prayer is a just improvement of the above Psalm:

Gracious God, who hast vouchsafed to let us know upon what conditions we may be received into Thy protection and eternal favour; give us grace to practise those virtues Thou hast enjoined us; make us to love justice in all our actions, and uprightness in all our words; make us as tender in the wrongs and injuries done to our neighbours, as if they were done to ourselves; infuse into our hearts an abomination of all vice, by how great persons soever countenanced; and a love and reverence for virtue, and of virtuous men, in how little esteem soever they are in this world: and let us do all this out of our true love of Thee, and of Thy Son Jesus Christ. Amen. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm XVI. In this Psalm David declares his full trust and confidence in God for protection and assistance; and renders Him thanks for his security in this life, and for the hopes of a happy immortality in the next. The latter part contains a clear prophecy of the resurrection of our Lord Christ, to which St. Peter and St. Paul directly apply it, Acts ii. 25. and xiii. 35. Travell.

Ver. 2. — my goodness extendeth not to thee.] Or, my good things are not needful for Thee: they would be a sacrifice of no value; else I would give them Thee. The best sacrifice I can offer to Thee is beneficence to Thy saints and servants. Green.

4. — drink offerings of blood] This alludes to sacrifices in which the blood of men was offered. Bp. Patrick. A principal ceremony is here put for the whole of idolatry. Gerard.

—— nor take up their names into my lips.] David here declares that he will have no conversation with idolaters, nor swear by the name of their gods. Bp. Wilson.

6. The lines are fallen &c.] That is, my lot and portion, or kingdom, is appointed unto me in a pleasant country. Bp. Wilson, Dr. Wells. They used with cords to measure their grounds in surveys, Amos vii. 17: and hence, by a figure, a measuring cord comes frequently to signify any space or portion of land that belongs to a person. Dr. Hammond.

7. — my reins] That is, my inward thoughts and affections. S. Clarke.

8. I have set the Lord always before me:] As my God, and my support. Green.

9. — my glory] By this word he meant his tongue. The Psalmist, as applying his own tongue to the best purpose, the praise of God, had reason to call it his glory. Merrick.

—— my flesh also shall rest in hope.] David here declares that he would lay down his body in the grave, in a certain hope of his resurrection to immortality. Bp. Hall.

10. For thou wilt not leave &c.] I know, that Thou, O God, wilt not forsake me in distress; nor even when I die, wilt Thou suffer me to remain for ever in the grave.—So also, when that Holy Person, who shall hereafter submit to death for the sake of mankind, is laid in the grave, I am well assured Thou wilt raise Him from thence, before His body be in the least corrupted. Bp. Patrick, Travell. Thou wilt not abandon my life to the grave. This may signify either, Thou wilt not suffer the grave to exert its dominion over me too soon, that is, immaturely; or, so maintain it over me too long. In the former sense David seems to have meant it of himself: in the latter it is applicable to our Lord, whom God raised up the third day, having loosed the bonds of death, because it was not possible He should be holden of it. Green.

—— thine Holy One] Meaning David in the literal sense, and in the spiritual Messiah, in whom the prophecy was fulfilled. See it applied to Him by St. Peter, Acts ii. 25, &c. Green.

We are here to observe the sentiments of the children of God, and their happiness. As to their sentiments, David teaches us, by his example, that they always trust in God; that they love and esteem the pious and virtuous above all; that they avoid the company and errours of the wicked, and adhere inviolably to the pure service of God. As to their happiness, this Psalm teaches us that it is very great; that God Himself is their portion and inheritance; that He is on their right hand that they may never be moved; that the sense of their happiness makes them rejoice and praise God continually; and that they are even convinced that God will not abandon them to the power of death. Lastly, this Psalm foretells that Christ should not see corruption, but be exalted to heaven, where He reigneth over all things, and has prepared for all true believers joys that never shall expire. Osterwald.

Psalm XVII. In this prayer David humbly represents to God his innocence in those things whereof he was accused, probably of seeking Saul's life and the kingdom; and therefore beseeches Him to grant him deliverance from his persecutors and calumniators. Bp. Patrick.

Ver. 1. — out of feigned lips.] Deceitful dissembling lips. S. Clarke.

2. Let my sentence come forth from thy presence;] Let me be tried and judged by Thee, to whom I make my appeal from the unjust accusations of men. S. Clarke.

3. — in the night;] That is, when the heart is freest from disguise. Green.

—— shalt find nothing;] Canst find in me no wicked design. Such were the appeals of David to God, for his innocence under the persecution of Saul. And what stronger appeals can be made Green. See the old translation.

8. — as the apple of the eye,] By the apple of an eye is meant its pupil. Dr. Wells. See note at Deut. xxxii. 10.

9. — who compass me about.] The allusion here is to huntsmen, who, spying game, go round to see how they may most advantageously pitch their nets to take it. Dr. Kennicott.

10. — inclosed in their own fat:] That is, bloated, and puffed up with pride. Bp. Wilson. The meaning is, that pride is the child of plenty, begotten by self-indulgence; which hardens the hearts of men against the fear of God, and love of their neighbours: rendering them insensible to the judgments of the former, and the miseries of the latter. Bp. Horne.

10, 11. They are inclosed &c.] By changing the situation of a single letter in the original, which has probably been misplaced by the copyists, these verses may be explained thus: "They draw close their cords; with their mouth they speak exultingly, We have succeeded now. They come about me, they set their eyes stooping down upon the earth." The image here is taken from hunters, and the circumstances follow very properly. They compassed him about; they inclosed him in their net; "we have succeeded at last," they said; they came round him; they stooped down and looked earnestly at him; their eyes fixed, like a lion that is just leaping at his prey. Mudge.

13. Arise, O Lord, disappoint him, &c.] The Psalmist, having characterized those who pursued after him to take away his life, now intreats God to "arise," or appear in his cause; to "disappoint," or "prevent" the enemy in his designs; and to "cast him down," to overthrow and subdue him. The next words may be thus rendered; "Deliver my soul from the wicked by Thy sword, from men by Thy hand, O Lord, from the men of the world:" the expressions, "sword, and hand of Jehovah," being frequently used to denote His power and vengeance. Bp. Horne.

— which is thy sword:] Which is the instrument Thou employest for the execution of Thy judgments. S. Clarke.

14. — whose belly thou fillest &c.] Whose bellies Thou fillest with Thy stores, or abundance of temporal blessings; whose children are fed to the full, and who leave the rest of their substance to their little ones. Green, Bp. Horne.

15. As for me, I will behold &c.] He either prays that he may keep on, or is confident that he shall keep on, in a way of righteousness, and enjoy the presence of God, and be satisfied every morning with the image or idea of God. Mudge.

— when I awake,] He appears to say this with reference to the resurrection of the just. Dr. Hammond.

The confidence with which David calls upon the Lord in this Psalm, and the hope he possessed that God would have regard to his innocence, shews the great happiness of the good; since they can in all conditions apply themselves to God with assurance, knowing that He will always be their protector. The last words of this Psalm should raise our thoughts to the desire and expectation of eternal life, which the righteous shall enjoy after the resurrection. Osterwald.

Psalm XVIII. The departure of the children of Israel from Egypt, the passage of the Red sea, and the appearance of God on mount Sinai, are subjects from which the Hebrew poets have taken the most sublime part of their imagery: and as these historical facts, and the images taken from them, have a certain connexion with each other, it often happens that more than one of them are made use of, and they are united and blended together in order to increase the dignity and grandeur of the subject; of which we have an example in this Psalm. Bp. Lowth, Street. The sublimity of the figures used in this Psalm, and the consent of ancient commentators, even Jewish as well as Christian, but above all the quotations made from it in the New Testament, prove that the kingdom of the Messiah is here pointed at, under that of David. Bp. Horne. There is no doubt that after David had first composed this Psalm, he reviewed it, and made some small alterations in it; which is the reason of the trifling differences between this Psalm as it stands here, and as it stands in 2 Sam. xxii. Dr. Wells.

5. The sorrows of hell &c.] David here means, that such sorrows as had almost brought him to the grave, compassed him about: and his enemies came on so suddenly that he had not time to escape them by flight. Dr. Wells.

—— the snares of death] These "snares" or toils "of death," or the grave, allude to the ancient manner of hunting, which is still practised in some countries, and was performed by surrounding a considerable tract of ground by a circle of nets, (compare Ps. cxl. 5,) and afterwards contracting the circle by degrees, till they had forced all the beasts of that quarter together into a narrow compass; and then it was that the slaughter began. Parkhurst.

7. Then the earth &c.] The Psalmist seems here to allude to a dreadful tempest, which fell upon his enemies, and made the very earth tremble under them. Bp. Patrick. This and the following verses are highly poetical; and must be understood to signify, that the deliverance of David was the effect of the Divine power miraculously exerted. Travell.

8. There went up a smoke out of his nostrils.] The ancients placed the seat of anger in the nose, or nostrils, because when the passion grows warm or violent, it discovers itself by the heated vehement breath which proceeds from them. This description of a smoke arising into, and a fire breaking forth from, the nostrils of God, denotes, by a poetical figure, the greatness of His anger and indignation. Dr. Chandler.

10. — he rode upon a cherub, &c.] He was attended, and as it were, carried by angels as in a chariot, and did move very swiftly; yea He did move as swift as the wind, and a rapid wind did accompany His descent. Dr. Wells.

11. He made darkness &c.] The meaning is, that He and all His heavenly attendants were surrounded with thick dark clouds. Dr. Wells.

12. — coals of fire.] The word, rendered "coals of fire," signifies living, burning coals. Where the lightning fell, it devoured all before it, and turned whatever it touched into burning embers. Dr. Chandler.

15. Then the channels &c.] This alludes to the manner of God's destroying the Egyptians by drying up the channels of the sea, that deep on which the earth is said to be founded; and so engaging them to enter into it, and then bringing the waters upon them. This poetical description is preparatory to David's deliverances which follow. Fenton.

29. For by thee &c.] Through Thee I break the troops of the enemy; through my God I leap over walls, that is, take the fenced cities of my enemies. Edwards, Bp. Wilson.

30 As for God, his way is perfect: [e] the word of the LORD is ‖ tried: he is a buckler to all those that trust in him.

31 [d] For who is God save the LORD? or who is a rock save our God?

32 It is God that girdeth me with strength, and maketh my way perfect.

33 He maketh my feet like hinds' feet, and setteth me upon my high places.

34 He teacheth my hands to war, so that a bow of steel is broken by mine arms.

35 Thou hast also given me the shield of thy salvation: and thy right hand hath holden me up, and ‖ thy gentleness hath made me great.

36 Thou hast enlarged my steps under me, that † my feet did not slip.

37 I have pursued mine enemies, and overtaken them: neither did I turn again till they were consumed.

38 I have wounded them that they were not able to rise: they are fallen under my feet.

39 For thou hast girded me with strength unto the battle: thou hast † subdued under me those that rose up against me.

40 Thou hast also given me the necks of mine enemies; that I might destroy them that hate me.

41 They cried, but there was none to save them: even unto the LORD, but he answered them not.

42 Then did I beat them small as the dust before the wind: I did cast them out as the dirt in the streets.

43 Thou hast delivered me from the strivings of the people; and thou hast made me the head of the heathen: a people whom I have not known shall serve me.

44 † As soon as they hear of me, they shall obey me: † the strangers shall ‖ † submit themselves unto me.

45 The strangers shall fade away, and be afraid out of their close places.

46 The LORD liveth; and blessed be my rock; and let the God of my salvation be exalted.

47 It is God that † avengeth me, and ‖ subdueth the people unto me.

48 He delivereth me from mine enemies: yea, thou liftest me up above those that rise up against me: thou hast delivered me from the † violent man.

49 [e] Therefore will I ‖ give thanks unto thee, O LORD, among the heathen, and sing praises unto thy name.

50 Great deliverance giveth he to his king; and sheweth mercy to his anointed, to David, and to his seed for evermore.

33. He maketh my feet &c.] He maketh me able to stand on the sides of mountains and rocks, (which were anciently used as fastnesses in time of war.) The feet of the sheep, the goat, and the hart, are particularly adapted to standing on such places. Street.

34. — so that a bow of steel &c.] Probably this sentence should be read, agreeably to some of the ancient versions, Thou makest my arms like a bow of brass. Edwards, Bp. Lowth.

The ancients had the art of giving a temper to brass which made it as hard and solid as steel; and made various kinds of weapons and armour of bronze. Calmet.

35. — thy gentleness &c.] That is, Thy kindness maketh me great. Street.

36. Thou hast enlarged &c.] David means, that God had opened a free course for him to victory and triumph, and had also endued him with strength to run that course. Bp. Horne.

40. — given me the necks of mine enemies.] The word, here translated "neck," is the back part of the neck; and therefore equivalent to back, as the Greek translates it. The passage may therefore be rendered, As for my enemies, Thou givest me their back; that is, puttest them to flight. Mudge, Bp. Lowth.

45. The strangers shall fade &c.] Foreign nations faint with fear and trembling in their strong holds. Edwards.

50. — to his anointed,] To Christ the spiritual David, and to all true Christians, which are His seed. Bp. Wilson.

From the first words of this hymn we learn, that the Divine favours and deliverances should inspire us with the most tender and sincere affection, and lead us to praise God continually. David's account of the extreme dangers he had been exposed to, and the wonderful power of God displayed in his deliverance, shews, that into whatever extremities we fall, we should never despair of God's assistance, if we fear Him; that His power is greater than man's, and that He never wants means to deliver those who hope in Him. Lastly, David's zeal, expressed in the latter verses of this Psalm, proves that it is not sufficient to praise God in private for His mercies, but we ought to proclaim His praises and lovingkindness to the utmost of our power, that His holy name may be glorified by us, and by all men. Osterwald.

Psalm XIX. This Psalm descends gradually from an opening uncommonly splendid and sublime, to a gentler and more moderate strain, and the softest expressions of piety and devotion. The whole composition abounds with great variety of both sentiment and imagery. The glory of God is demonstrated in His works both of nature and providence. The piety of it is so natural, and yet so exalted; so easy to be understood, so adapted to move the affections, that it is hardly possible to read it with any attention, without feeling something of the same spirit by which it was composed. Bps. Lowth and Sherlock.

From a citation which St. Paul hath made of the fourth verse, it appears, that, in the exposition of this Psalm, we are to raise our thoughts from things natural to things spiritual; we are to contemplate the publication of the Gospel, the manifestation of the Light of life, the Sun of righteousness, and the efficacy of evangelical doctrine. In this view the ancients have considered the Psalm, and the Church hath therefore appointed it to be read on Christmas-day. Bp. Horne.

PSALM XX.

1 The church blesseth the king in his exploits. 7 Her confidence in God's succour.

¶ To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

THE LORD hear thee in the day of trouble; the name of the God of Jacob † defend thee.

2 Send † thee help from the sanctuary, and † strengthen thee out of Zion.

† Heb. set there on an high place. † Heb. thy help. † Heb. support thee.

Ver. 2. Day unto day uttereth speech,] The return of the sun from one day unto another day tells us that there is a God; and the like return of the moon or stars, or darkness from one night unto another night, teaches us the same. Dr. Wells.

3. There is no speech &c.] They are not endowed, like man, with the faculty of speech; but they address themselves to the mind of the intelligent beholder in another, and that, when understood, a no less forcible way; the way of picture, or representation. Bp. Horne.

4. Their line is gone out &c.] Rather, Their sound is gone out into all the earth, and their report, &c. Dr. Waterland and Old Translation. The meaning is, they proclaim the Divine glory in plain and intelligible characters, to the remotest parts of the earth; as the Gospel shall be proclaimed hereafter by the preaching of the Apostles. Rom. x. 18. Travell.

—— a tabernacle for the sun.] The nuptials of the Jews, and other eastern nations, were celebrated with great magnificence and splendour. They were held under a tent, or canopy, erected for that purpose, to which custom David here alludes; as he does in the next verse to the custom of the bridegroom's going out at midnight with lamps and torches. The passage will receive great light from our Saviour's parable of the wise and foolish virgins. Dodd.

8. — pure,] The original word should be translated as it is in the Greek, "clear" or "bright." Bp. Lowth, Dr. Kennicott.

9. — clean,] That is, pure, or free from all alloy of superstition. Dr. en.

10. More to be desired &c.] The Divine law is far more precious than the richest treasures upon earth; and more delightful to him who practises it, than the most luxurious sensual pleasures. Travell.

—— and the honeycomb.] Or, as in the margin, the dropping of the honeycomb, which is the choicest part of the honey. Green.

Pliny says, "In all kinds of honey, that which flows of itself as wine and oil, and is called acetom, that is, without sediment, is most commended." And Homer mentions "honey spontaneously distilling," as peculiarly sweet. Parkhurst.

12. — his errors?] That is, sins of ignorance and infirmity; or, as it follows, those secret faults which escape our notice. Green.

13. — presumptuous sins;] Wilful and deliberate sins. Dr. Wells.

—— the great transgression.] The meaning of this expression may be, rebellion and final apostasy from God. Bp. Horne. Or, idolatry. Dr. Kennicott. Or it may be taken generally, any great transgression. Dr. Wells.

King David here mentions two principal means by which God has made Himself known to us; which are, the works of nature, and His word. Let us therefore make a good use of both these means; meditating upon the marvellous works of God, which afford us such proofs of His power and wisdom; but particularly let us apply ourselves to the reading and meditating on His word. David's high encomiums on God's word inform us, that it is a sure, evident, and unerring rule of faith and practice; that it is of infinitely more value than the most excellent things of this world; that it was given to enlighten and sanctify us, to rejoice and comfort the heart; that the fear of the Lord procures perfect happiness to those who are possessed with it, and that there is great reward in the keeping of His holy commandments. Ostervald.

Psalm XX. The first verses of this Psalm are spoken by the people, or rather the priests of the temple, upon the king's coming to offer sacrifice, before he set out upon some expedition: in the sixth, the high priest, upon seeing the sacrifice consumed to ashes, joined perhaps with the other usual signals of favour, breaks out in the expression, "Now I know," &c. The last again are spoken by the people or priests as a chorus. Madge.

This and the following are two of the Psalms appointed to be used in our Inauguration service.

Ver. 2. Send thee help &c.] Send thee help from the holy heavens, and from His sanctuary, which is a type and figure thereof; and strengthen thee out of Sion, where He hath by His command appointed the holy ark of His covenant to be placed, and from whence He gives answers and directions to all thy actions. Bp. Hall. See note at Exod. xxvi. 33.

† Heb. turn to ashes: or, make fat.

3 Remember all thy offerings, and † accept thy burnt sacrifice. Selah.

4 Grant thee according to thine own heart, and fulfil all thy counsel.

5 We will rejoice in thy salvation, and in the name of our God we will set up our banners: the LORD fulfil all thy petitions.

6 Now know I that the LORD saveth his anointed; he will hear him † from his holy heaven † with the saving strength of his right hand.

7 Some trust in chariots, and some in horses: but we will remember the name of the LORD our God.

8 They are brought down and fallen: but we are risen, and stand upright.

9 Save, LORD: let the king hear us when we call.

PSALM XXI.

1 A thanksgiving for victory. 7 Confidence of further success.

¶ To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

THE king shall joy in thy strength, O LORD; and in thy salvation how greatly shall he rejoice!

2 Thou hast given him his heart's desire, and hast not withholden the request of his lips. Selah.

3 For thou preventest him with the blessings of goodness: thou settest a crown of pure gold on his head.

4 He asked life of thee, and thou gavest it him, even length of days for ever and ever.

5 His glory is great in thy salvation: honour and majesty hast thou laid upon him.

6 For thou hast † made him most blessed for ever: thou hast † made him exceeding glad with thy countenance.

† Heb. set him to be blessings. † Heb. gladded him with joy.

7 For the king trusteth in the LORD, and through the mercy of the most High he shall not be moved.

8 Thine hand shall find out all thine enemies: thy right hand shall find out those that hate thee.

9 Thou shalt make them as a fiery oven in the time of thine anger: the LORD shall swallow them up in his wrath, and the fire shall devour them.

10 Their fruit shalt thou destroy from the earth, and their seed from among the children of men.

11 For they intended evil against thee: they imagined a mischievous device, which they are not able to perform.

12 Therefore ‖ shalt thou make them turn their † back, when thou shalt make ready thine arrows upon thy strings against the face of them.

13 Be thou exalted, LORD, in thine own strength: so will we sing and praise thy power.

PSALM XXII.

1 David complaineth in great discouragement. 9 He prayeth in great distress. 23 He praiseth God.

3. — accept] The Hebrew expression is, "turn to ashes," (see the margin;) and if we look to the period under the law, we shall find this the usual method of signifying the Divine acceptance of the sacrifice. Dr. Magee. See the note on Gen. iv. 4.

5. — in the name of our God] To the honour of God, as the conqueror.

—— we will set up our banners:] In token of triumph; which among other ways was celebrated by the setting up of banners or trophies. Poole.

9. Save, Lord: &c.] We ought to read this according to the Greek translation: O Lord, save the king; and hear us when we call. Mudge, Calmet.

It appears from this Psalm, that a nation should pray for the prince whom God hath set over them, and interest themselves in the advantages or deliverances which God grants to their governours: also that it is the favour and protection of God which makes the glory and safety of the people, and of kings; that it is to that favour, and not to their own strength and power, they are to attribute their good success; and therefore, that kings and their subjects should strive above all things to obtain the favour of God. Ostervald.

Psalm XXI. This is a Psalm of triumph and thanksgiving for victory. It is generally considered as describing, under the figure of David, the exaltation, glory, and majesty of Christ, who completely triumphed over death. The fourth, fifth, and sixth verses, are indeed particularly applicable to our blessed Redeemer. It is appointed by the Church to be used on the Ascension-day. Travell.

Ver. 3. For thou preventest him &c.] Didst crown him with manifold blessings both more and sooner than he either desired or expected. Poole.

4. He asked life of thee, &c.] David had in the days of Saul only asked for "life;" and God had given to him and his posterity, "length of days for ever and ever." Mudge.

9. Thou shalt make them &c.] The meaning is, they shall as certainly perish, as if they were cast into a fiery oven; the Lord, who is jealously incensed against them, shall utterly consume them with a sharp and unavoidable destruction. Bp. Patrick.

10. Their fruit] That is, their offspring. Green.

12. — shalt thou make them turn their back,] Or, as in the margin, Thou shalt make them a mark to shoot at. Green.

—— thine arrows] The judgments of God are called His "arrows," being sharp, swift, sure, and deadly. Bp. Horne.

From this, as from the preceding Psalm, we learn that God defends just and pious kings who call upon Him and trust in Him; whereas He throws down and destroys unrighteous princes, and especially such as oppose the establishment of His kingdom, and the designs of His providence. Ostervald.

Psalm XXII. This Psalm contains a most full and clear prophecy of our blessed Saviour's passion, and the propagation of His Gospel. It is entitled a Psalm of David; and I doubt not but that the greatest part of it related primarily to David himself: It contains a most pathetick and poetical description of his own sufferings and calamities; but expressed in such figures as were most literally fulfilled in the sufferings of Christ. Archdeacon Randolph.

It is very properly appointed to be used on Good Friday, as it contains a wonderful prophecy of our Saviour's sufferings; and He Himself repeated the first verse of it while He was hanging on the cross. Travell.

— Aijeleth Shahar.] Or, hind of the morning. The morning-hind was probably a well-known song, which gave name to a particular tune, if not instrument; not unlikely of the melancholy kind, as possibly it might describe a poor hind pursued by hunters. Mudge.

Ver. 1. My God, my God, &c.] Christ, the beloved Son of the Father, when hanging on the cross, complained in these words, that He was deprived, for a time, of the Divine presence and comforting influence, while He suffered for our sins. If the Master thus underwent the trial of a spiritual desertion, why doth the disciple think it strange, unless the light of Heaven shine continually upon his tabernacle? Bp. Horne.

—— the words of my roaring?] He means the words of his complaint. Bp. Patrick.

3. — inhabited the praises of Israel.] That is, dwellest in the tabernacle, where the praises and thanksgivings of Israel are offered to Thee for mercies granted them. Edwards, Bp. Horne.

7. All they &c.] From this verse to the twentieth, the words are prophetical of Christ, and literally fulfilled in Him. See Matth. xxvii. 39. Dimock.

12. Many bulls &c.] Mine enemies, who are as furious and formidable as the bulls fed in the rich pastures of Bashan, beset me on every side. Green. See note at Numb. xxxii. 1.

14. I am poured out like water.] He means that his flesh has no consistency, or is loose as water. Green.

15. My strength is dried up &c.] In other words, I am quite exhausted and dried up, like a piece of a broken pot: so extreme is my thirst, that I am scarce able to utter my complaints; but am just upon the point of expiring and returning to the dust of the earth. How exactly was this prophecy verified in the person of our blessed Lord, when He sweat as it were great drops of blood, and endured all the agonies of the cross! Travell.

—— my tongue cleaveth to my jaws.] Parching thirst, here expressed by the Psalmist, is one of the usual concomitants of extreme grief of mind, or torture of body. Dr. Hales.

16. For dogs have compassed me: &c.] A multitude of malicious people have beset me fiercely as dogs, and got me into their power in order to wound and destroy me. Dr. Hammond. Thus these words may be figuratively applied to David; but they were literally fulfilled in the Saviour of the world, whose feet and hands His enemies pierced through with nails on the cross. Green.

17. I may tell all my bones: &c.] The skin and flesh were distended by the posture of the body on the cross, that the bones, as through a thin veil, became visible, and might be counted; and the holy Jesus, forsaken and stript, naked and bleeding, was a spectacle to heaven and earth. Bp. Horne.

18. They part my garments &c.] This was so far true of David, that his enemies spoiled his goods, and rifled his substance. But it is particularly remarkable, that at our Saviour's crucifixion the soldiers divided His garments among them, and His coat being without seam, they would not rend it, but cast lots for it; and thus, as the Evangelists themselves tell us, this Scripture was fulfilled. Such exact agreement in these minute circumstances could not occur casually; and it carries with it a striking proof of the interposition of God, and a strong confirmation of the truth of the Gospel. Archdeacon Randolph.

21. Save me from the lion's mouth: &c.] The faith of David was as exemplary as his piety. God seems to have inspired him with a comfortable assurance that his prayers were heard. "For Thou hast heard me," says he, "from the horns of the unicorns." Archdeacon Randolph.

—— unicorns.] The animal here meant is probably the rhinoceros. It has one horn upon its nose, which is very strong, and grows to a considerable length. Green. See the note on Numb. xxiii. 22.

25. — I will pay my vows] That is, offer the sacrifice which I vowed. Mudge.

26. The meek shall eat &c.] Of this sacrifice the humble or afflicted, he says, should eat, and praise God for the mercy He had shewn to His servant. The latter part of the verse is addressed to them; "your heart shall live for ever:" take courage and fear not, God will never desert them that fear Him. Mudge.

29. All they that be fat &c.] It is here foretold that the "fat ones of the earth," the great, the opulent, the flourishing, the nobles and princes of the world, should be called in to partake of the feast, and join in the Christian worship and service. Rich, as well as poor, are invited; and the hour is coming when all the race of Adam, as many as sleep in the "dust" of the earth, unable to raise themselves from thence, quickened and called forth by the voice of the Son of Man, must bow the knee to the King Messiah. Bp. Horne, Archdeacon Randolph.

29—31. — and none can keep alive &c.] The Greek version and some other ancient versions probably give the true reading of these clauses: "My soul shall live, and my posterity shall serve God. My seed shall be reckoned to the Lord in the generation which shall come. And they shall declare His righteousness to a people which shall be born; for He, the Lord, hath done it." The words thus read and translated are a plain prophecy of the propagation of the Gospel, and calling of the Gentiles. Abp. Secker, Archdeacon Randolph.

31. — he hath done this.] That is, He hath fulfilled His promises and Divine predictions. Michaelis.

We are presented in this Psalm with a very plain prophetick description of our Lord's sufferings and profound humiliation. Here we read those very words which He uttered at His crucifixion, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" Here we see pourtrayed the insults offered to Him by the Jews while He hung upon the cross, His hands and His feet pierced, His garments divided by lot, and the principal circumstances described of His passion and death. God was pleased that all these things should be foretold by David, to the end that, when they came to pass, we might have the clearest proof of His being the true Messiah. The contemplation therefore of this Psalm ought on the one hand to strengthen our faith in Jesus the Saviour of the world; and on the other hand, to quicken our hopes in Him, while it sets before us the glory to which God has exalted Him after His sufferings, and which He now enjoys at the right hand of the Father. Osterwald.

Psalm XXIII. The sweetness of many of the Psalms in composition, sentiment, diction, and arrangement, has never been equalled by the finest productions of heathen poetry. And I must confess I never met with any image so truly pleasing and delightful, as the following description of the Deity in the character of a shepherd. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 3. He restoreth my soul:] When I am ready to faint, He refreshes me and brings me to life again. Mudge.

4. — the valley of the shadow of death,] A valley overspread with the horrours of darkness and of death. Green.

—— thy rod &c.] Thy protection will dispel all my fears. Green.

5. — thou anointest my head &c.] The overflowing of a cup, and the being anointed with sweetsmelling oils, are the usual emblems of a feast, and are made use of in Scripture as the images of plenty and prosperity. Travell.

The natural homage which such a creature as man bears to an infinitely wise and good God, is a firm reliance on Him for the blessings and conveniences of life, and an habitual trust in Him for deliverance out of all such dangers and difficulties as may befall us. The man who always lives in this disposition of mind, when he reflects upon his own weakness and imperfection, comforts himself with the contemplation of those Divine attributes which are employed for his safety and welfare. He finds his want of foresight made up by the omniscience of Him who is his support. He is not sensible of his own want of strength, when he knows that his Helper is almighty. In short, the person who has a firm trust on the Supreme Being, is powerful in His power, wise by His wisdom, happy by His happiness. He treats the benefit of every Divine attribute, and loses his own insufficiency in the fulness of Infinite Perfection. Addison.

Psalm XXIV. The bringing of the ark of God to mount Sion by David, 1 Chron. xv. gave occasion to this Psalm. The removal of the ark was celebrated in a great assembly of the people, and with suitable splendour during every part of the ceremony. The Levites led the procession, accompanied by a great variety of vocal and instrumental musick; and this ode appears to have been sung to the people when they arrived at the summit of the mountain. The opening is expressive of the supreme and infinite dominion of God, arising from the right of creation. Bp. Lowth. The ascension of our Lord into heaven is represented by the carrying of the ark up to mount Sion; and the sublime description in the four last verses, of the entrance of the King of glory, is highly applicable to Him: it is therefore appointed to be read on the Ascension-day. Travell.

Ver. 2. — he hath founded it upon the seas, &c.] He hath settled it so firmly, and established it above the waters, that they cannot overwhelm it. Bp. Patrick.

3. — who shall stand in his holy place?] Who shall serve God acceptably in the place which He hath sanctified to His service. Poole.

4. — who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity.] That is, he who hath not put his trust in false gods. Bp. Lowth.

5. — righteousness] By this word here is meant a just recompense. Bp. Wilson.

6. — thy face, O Jacob.] Or rather, as in the margin, "thy face, O God of Jacob." Bp. Hare. See the note on Psalm xvii. 15. The Israelites were required to worship at the sanctuary of God three times a year. Bp. Lowth.

7. Lift up &c.] We may now conceive the procession to have arrived at the gates of the tabernacle. While the ark is brought in, the Levites, divided into two choirs, sing alternately the remainder of the Psalm. Indeed it is not impossible that this mode of singing was pursued through every part of the ode; but towards the conclusion the fact will not admit of a doubt. Bp. Lowth. The lifting up the head is an image adapted to a portcullis; the head of which, as it is lifted, rises up conspicuous above the gate. Mudge.

We learn from this Psalm, that God, who created the earth, is the supreme and almighty King thereof, and that His glory and power ought to be celebrated for ever; also, that those only will be admitted into the presence of the Lord who walk uprightly, who are sincere and faithful in all their behaviour, who avoid fraud and deceit, who call upon the Lord and seek His face. Osterwald.

Psalm XXV. David seems to have written this Psalm after the commission of some grievous sin, or in some great distress; which brought to mind all the offences of his youth, and made him earnestly beseech God to pardon them, and to deliver him from his enemies. Travell.

Ver. 3. — let them be ashamed &c.] Pour shame upon the face of those which rise up against me spitefully, without any just cause or provocation on my part. Bp. Hall.

8. — teach sinners in the way.] That is, penitent sinners. Dr. Wells.

9. The meek will he guide &c.] He will never fail to assist and direct in the ways of virtue, those who are truly humbled before Him for their sins. Dr. Hammond.

10. All the paths &c.] They, who observe and keep His commandments, will find abundant goodness and faithfulness in the ways of the Lord, who will order all things for their good. Travell, Bp. Patrick.

12. — that he shall choose.] That he ought to choose. Dr. Kennicott.

14. The secret of the Lord &c.] The counsel and covenant of the Lord to them that fear Him, is to make known or reveal to them His will. Dr. Hammond. Or by the word "secret," may be meant, God's love and favour, which is called His "secret," Job xxix. 4. Prov. iii. 32; and that very fitly, because it is known to none but him that enjoys it. Poole.

17. The troubles of my heart are enlarged:] This should rather be translated, "Relieve the sorrows of my heart." Dr. Kennicott, Bp. Lowth.

20. — let me not be ashamed;] That is, disappointed. Bp. Wilson. Compare Job vi. 20.

21. — for I wait on thee.] For I trust in Thee. Mudge.

22 Redeem Israel, &c.] After imploring forgiveness of his sins, that the people might not be visited for his sake, and after expressing his personal penitence and sorrow, David concludes with a prayer for the deliverance of his country.

After the example of David, the pious and devout Christian, who really and in truth puts his entire confidence in God, is never weary or ashamed of that confidence. If he finds that his prayers are not so graciously heard, as that he receives all that he hath prayed for, he receives yet an unspeakable comfort by having done as he ought to do; and though he prospers not as he would wish, yet if he prays as he should, he hath made a good progress towards his own deliverance; and hath raised a good defence against any affliction that invades him: nor will he be frighted out of his innocence by the promises, or threats, or tyranny of his proud oppressors. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm XXVI. It is generally agreed, that this Psalm was composed on account of some injurious charge brought against David by some of Saul's courtiers. Dimock.

Ver. 1. Judge me,] Give sentence in my favour. Street.

2. Examine me, &c.] David here begs of God, who knew the secret thoughts of his mind, and the inclinations of his will, to search deeply into them, and prove his integrity. Bp. Patrick.

4. — vain persons,] False and treacherous persons. Bp. Patrick.

6. I will wash &c.] David means, that he would cleanse his heart and hands from all the impurity of his sins; and then that he would approach to God's altar, and offer his sacrifice. Bp. Hall.

—— wash mine hands] It was a custom among the Jews for those who brought sacrifices to be offered, to wash their hands before they laid them upon the heads of the victims. Lewis.

It was a common usage for the Jews always to wash before prayers; and the priests in particular were not to perform any office in the sanctuary, till they had poured water from the laver and washed in it. It is to this that David here alludes. Fenton.

—— compass thine altar,] Among other ceremonies connected with the feast of tabernacles, it was usual on the seventh day for the people to compass the altar seven times carrying branches in their hands, and singing hosannas. Lewis.

8. — the place where thine honour dwelleth.] That is, the tabernacle, where God had made His glory to dwell among them. Bp. Patrick.

12. My foot standeth in an even place:] That is, I stand in a sure place, so that I need not fear to fall. Bp. Wilson.

David's earnest desire to serve God in the tabernacle, should stir us up to discharge the duties of religion with the same fer-

PSALM XXVIII.

1 David prayeth earnestly against his enemies. 6 He blesseth God. 9 He prayeth for the people.

¶ A Psalm of David.

vency. But the care this pious king took to purify himself before he went unto the altar of God, should convince us, that in order to appear in the presence of God, we should be pure, and lead a holy life. Lastly, we should join with David in the prayer which he offers up to God at the end of this Psalm, and beseech Him to preserve us from being like the wicked, lest we share with them in the punishments that are prepared for them. Ostervald.

Psalm XXVII. David, being persecuted by his enemies, and in danger of his life from false witnesses, testifieth in this Psalm his entire confidence in the protection of the Almighty; beseecheth Him to continue His favour; and is persuaded He will never forsake him. Green. He probably composed it upon the occasion of Saul's persecution of him. Rosenmuller.

Ver. 2. — to eat up my flesh.] This expresses the utmost malice of his enemies, assailing him with the fury of wild beasts.

3. — in this will I be confident.] I will still have confidence in God's assistance. Dr. Hammond.

4. — that I may dwell &c.] David's prayer was, that he might perpetually attend upon the service of God, and enjoy the sweet pleasure the Lord there imparts to His people, and receive His directions from the tabernacle. Bp. Patrick.

—— the beauty of the Lord,] By "the beauty of the Lord" he means the cheering countenance of God, whose presence was more conspicuously manifested in His temple. Estmarin.

5. — pavilion.] The word, here translated "pavilion," signifies originally a shepherd's cot or shed, made of the boughs and branches of trees: and is applied to any habitation, provided it be private; as a lion's den, a king's palace; and also to the holy tabernacle, as it is in this place. When therefore David says, that God should "hide him in His pavilion," he means that God would keep him as safe, as any one should be, whom a king should receive into his tent, so that his enemies would not dare to hurt him. Rosenmuller.

—— in the secret of his tabernacle] That is, in as safe a place as the Holy of Holies, which is called God's secret, Ezek. vii. 22. Poole.

8. — Seek ye my face;] These are words which his heart dictated as from God. Mudge.

—— Thy face, Lord, will I seek.] I will apply to Thee by prayer. Bp. Wilson.

10. When my father and my mother &c.] Should all earthly dependences fail me, the Lord would take me under His care. Bps. Wilson and Patrick.

12. — false witnesses are risen up &c.] As this passage is strictly prophetical of the Messiah, much light is thrown on it from Mark xiv. 56. Dr. Kennicott.

13. — in the land of the living.] In this present life. Bp. Patrick.

In this Psalm we are to remark, 1st, That those who fear God and trust in Him, are never afraid of men; but are calm and unshaken, even when reduced to the most deplorable condition. 2dly, That the most inestimable advantage, and the greatest consolation we can enjoy in this world, is, to meet often in the house of God, there to praise and adore Him, and to receive the testimonies of His favour. 3dly, That when God does incline our hearts to seek His face, we should improve the mercy, and not slight the gracious invitation. Ostervald.

Psalm XXVIII. In this Psalm David intreats God to defend him from the malice and artifice of his heathen enemies, and from the judgments that should fall upon them. He then praises God for the care He had taken of him, trusts in His assistance, and prays for the prosperity of the Israelites. Green.

‖ Or, to bring forth young. ‖ Or, every whit of it uttereth, &c.

Ver. 1. — then that go down into the pit.] Those that are abandoned to destruction. Bp. Patrick.

3. Draw me not away with the wicked,] Cast me not off with them. Bp. Wilson.

4, 5. Give them according &c.] In these verses, as indeed in most of the imprecatory passages, the imperative and the future tenses are used promiscuously; "Give them — render them — He shall destroy them." If therefore the verbs in all such passages were uniformly rendered in the future, every objection against the scripture imprecations would vanish at once, and they would appear clearly to be what they are; namely, prophecies of the Divine judgments, which were afterwards to take place. Bp. Horne.

8. The Lord is their strength, &c.] It is the Lord who gives courage and strength to His servants, and protects him whom He hath appointed king over His people. Bp. Patrick.

A prayer collected out of the above Psalm: O heavenly Father, we humbly beseech Thy goodness, when we cry unto Thee, to hear our supplications; for if Thou turn away Thine ear, and neglect to give us audience in these our pressures and afflictions, the men of Thy hand will prevail against us, and bring down our life into the pit. We acknowledge before Thee that our ways have been perverse, our works wicked, and the imagination of our hearts only vain and evil continually: yet, O Lord, we desire to be holy; render therefore unto us, not according to our deserts, but according to Thy great mercies. Bp. Nicholson.

Psalm XXIX. In this Psalm the supreme dominion of God, and the awfulness of His power, are demonstrated from the tremendous noise, and the astonishing force of the thunder, which the Hebrews, by a bold but very apt figure, denominated "the voice of the Most High." It is enough to say of it, that the sublimity of the matter is perfectly equalled by the unaffected energy of the style. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 2. — worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness.] In other words, Worship ye the Lord in that beautiful and glorious sanctuary, where He exhibits His presence to His people. Bp. Hall. See the margin.

3. The voice of the Lord is upon the waters:] That is, the thunder, called here the voice of the Lord, is upon the waters collected in the clouds. Green.

5. — the cedars of Lebanon.] See note at 1 Kings v. 6.

6. He maketh them also to skip &c.] This description is figurative and poetical. The figures are rather too strong for a modern language; but they are agreeable to that of the Hebrews, in which they have a singular beauty. Calmet.

7. — the flames of fire.] That is, the flashes of lightning. Mudge.

8. — the wilderness of Kadesh.] The wilderness of Kadesh was part of that wilderness through which the Israelites passed in their way to Canaan. See Numb. xiii. 26. Bp. Horne. It was the frontier of Idumea and Paran. Calmet.

9. The voice of the Lord maketh the hinds to calve,] The terrour of this voice causeth the hinds to cast their calves for fear. Bp. Hall.

—— and discovereth the forests: and in his temple &c.] The storm strips the trees of their leaves, and opens the recesses of the forest. Travell.

While His temple remaineth unshaken by these tempestuous blasts, and all His pious worshippers there securely sing the praises of His glorious majesty and power. Bp. Patrick.

Other commentators explain this difficult verse differently: The voice of Jehovah maketh the oaks to tremble; and maketh bare the trees of the woods. Bp. Lowth, Abp. Secker.

And in His temple every thing proclaimeth His glory. By "His temple" may be meant the heavens. Bp. Hare.

The practice of the great duty of praising God for His works, and for His mercies, will preserve in our souls a constant and lively sense of His glorious perfections; which will be a means of making us truly religious, and will make all other religious duties easy and pleasant to us. His almighty power will make us dread offending Him; the sense of our dependence upon Him, and His continual care over us, will incline us to love Him with all our heart and soul; and the grateful remembrance of His past mercies will make us put our whole trust in Him for the time to come. Bp. Wilson.

Psalm XXX. This Psalm of David is plainly expressive of his gratitude to God for delivering him from his foes, and rescuing him from his distresses. And as it appears, 2 Sam. v. 11. and 1 Chron. xiv. 1, that Hiram, king of Tyre, sent materials and workmen to build an house for David about the time when the Lord had confirmed him king over Israel, I apprehend that this hymn might have been composed on that occasion. Street.

A Psalm and Song at the dedication &c.] An ode on taking possession of the house built for David. Street.

Ver. 3. O Lord, thou hast brought &c.] When I was just at the point of death, Thou hast preserved me from the very brink of the grave. Travell.

4. — give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness.] The meaning is, Celebrate His holy name. Green.

5. — in life:] Life is often put for a long and happy time, as in Psal. xxxiv. 12; and for an eternal and immortal duration, 2 Tim. i. 10. Jam. i. 12. Poole.

6, 7. And in my prosperity &c.] There should not be a full stop at the end of the sixth verse; but after the words "stand strong" in the seventh. The word rendered "prosperity" denotes peace and tranquillity, arising from an affluent prosperous condition. When God had settled him quietly on the throne, he thought all his troubles were over, and that he should enjoy uninterrupted happiness; that God had "made his mountain so strong, that it should never be moved;" that is, had placed him secure from all danger. Dr. Chandler.

7. — thou didst hide &c.] He means, that when God withdrew His protection, displeased with his presumption, and the security he had fondly promised himself, he was immediately disturbed by fresh troubles, and his dream of uninterrupted tranquillity vanished. Dr. Chandler.

9. What profit is there &c.] What service, said I, can I do Thee, when I am dead? Shall my ashes be able to please Thee, or to declare the truth of Thy promises. Bp. Patrick.

This religious song of thanksgiving is particularly adapted to persons who have escaped great danger. Those whom God has thus delivered ought to celebrate His goodness, and invite all men to celebrate it with them. But above all, we ought to take notice of the instructions here given us concerning the usefulness of afflictions. Even the best of men sometimes forget themselves in prosperity: but God makes use of adversity to inspire them with a holy fear, to bring them to a sense of their duty, and to oblige them to have recourse to Him; and then He is reconciled and hears their cry, changing their sorrow into joy, and their complaints into songs of praise. Oderveld.

Psalm XXXI. David being pursued by his enemies, probably in his retreat from Keilah, 1 Sam. xxiii. intreats the Lord in this Psalm to deliver him. He then returns thanks that his prayers are heard. Green.

Ver. 3. — for thy name's sake lead me.] The Psalmist here beseeches God to glorify Himself, by guiding his steps so that he might escape the danger which threatened him. Bp. Patrick.

[b] Luke 23. 46. 5 [b] Into thine hand I commit my spirit: thou hast redeemed me, O LORD God of truth.

6 I have hated them that regard lying vanities: but I trust in the LORD.

7 I will be glad and rejoice in thy mercy: for thou hast considered my trouble; thou hast known my soul in adversities;

8 And hast not shut me up into the hand of the enemy: thou hast set my foot in a large room.

9 Have mercy upon me, O LORD, for I am in trouble: mine eye is consumed with grief, yea, my soul and my belly.

10 For my life is spent with grief, and my years with sighing: my strength faileth because of mine iniquity, and my bones are consumed.

11 I was a reproach among all mine enemies, but especially among my neighbours, and a fear to mine acquaintance: they that did see me without fled from me.

12 I am forgotten as a dead man out of mind: I am like † a broken vessel.

13 For I have heard the slander of many: fear was on every side: while they took counsel together against me, they devised to take away my life.

14 But I trusted in thee, O LORD: I said, Thou art my God.

15 My times are in thy hand: deliver me from the hand of mine enemies, and from them that persecute me.

16 Make thy face to shine upon thy servant: save me for thy mercies' sake.

17 Let me not be ashamed, O LORD; for I have called upon thee: let the wicked be ashamed, and ‖ let them be silent in the grave.

18 Let the lying lips be put to silence; which speak † grievous things proudly and contemptuously against the righteous.

19 [c] Oh how great is thy goodness, which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee; which thou hast wrought for them that trust in thee before the sons of men!

[c] Isai. 64. 4. 1 Cor. 2. 9.

20 Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of man: thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues.

21 Blessed be the LORD: for he hath shewed me his marvellous kindness in a ‖ strong city.

22 For I said in my haste, I am cut off from before thine eyes: nevertheless thou heardest the voice of my supplications when I cried unto thee.

23 O love the LORD, all ye his saints: for the LORD preserveth the faithful, and plentifully rewardeth the proud doer.

5. Into thine hand I commit my spirit:] David, in his distresses, might by these words express his resignation of himself and his affairs into the hands of God: but it is certain, that Christ actually did expire upon the cross with the former part of this verse in His mouth, Luke xxiii. 46. Bp. Horne.

—— thou hast redeemed me,] David means, that it was God who had often rescued him out of his difficulties. Bp. Patrick.

8. — in a large room.] In a place of liberty. Green.

9. — mine eye is consumed &c.] My eyes are wasted with weeping, and my whole frame is in a manner destroyed. Travell.

15. My times are in thy hand:] He declares his assurance that his life was not subject to the will of his enemies, but was at the disposal of God. Bp. Patrick.

22. — nevertheless] Notwithstanding my fears and want of faith. Bp. Wilson.

23. — plentifully rewardeth the proud doer.] Will fully punish in due time the insolent oppressor. Dr. Wells, Bp. Wilson.

The considerations that make the soul cheerful in the hour of affliction, are, that God is merciful; that as He is not ignorant, so neither is He unmindful of our troubles: that He is a friend, who "knows" us in adversity, no less than in prosperity: that He hath not subjected us to the necessity of being overcome by our spiritual enemies; but hath, "with the temptation, made a way for us to escape." Bp. Horne.

Psalm XXXII. It is generally supposed that David wrote this Psalm after the pardon he obtained for his adultery with Bathsheba, and his murder of Uriah. Rosenmüller. This being a penitential Psalm, is appointed for Ash-Wednesday. Travell.

— Maschil.] This word seems to signify, as in the margin, a Psalm of instruction or recollection. The Psalms which have this title are generally of a moral nature, and are designed to convey some salutary advice, (as this, ver. 8.) and to dispose the mind to attention and reflexion. Mudge.

Ver. 3. When I kept silence.] While I neglected to confess my sin I had no rest; my mind and conscience persecuted me day and night. Bp. Wilson.

4. — my moisture is turned &c.] The following description of a Syrian summer, by Dr. Russel, is the most beautiful comment that can be met with on this passage: "From the end of May (if not sooner) not so much as one refreshing shower falls, and scarce a friendly cloud appears to shelter from the excessive heat of the sun, till about the middle of September. The verdure of the spring fades before the middle of May; and before the end of that month the whole country puts on so parched and barren an aspect, that one would scarce think it capable of producing any thing, there being but very few plants which have vigour enough to resist the extreme heat. Harmer.

6. — in the floods &c.] That is, when calamities (which are here represented under the image of floods of water) are sent abroad into the world, they shall not come near the good man. Green.

7. — thou shalt compass me about &c.] Thou shalt give me occasion to sing and Thee many songs of deliverance. Dr. Wells.

8. I will instruct thee &c.] Hearken then unto me, thou that art in search of godly wisdom: I will give thee counsel, and direct thee to the wisest and safest course of life; I will have thee continually under my care and inspection. Bp. Patrick, Wessely.

9. — lest they come near unto thee.] The rendering should be, agreeably to some of the ancient versions, "else they will not come near thee." Dr. Hammond, Green.

11. Be glad in the Lord.] It seems probable that this verse ought to be the first of the following Psalm. Bps. Lowth and Hare, Dr. Kennicott.

Outward calamities, and inward pangs of conscience, are the strokes of God's hand, designed to humble the sinner, and lead him to confession; and in the infliction of these, such severity is sometimes necessary, that the patient is brought to death's door, before a turn can be given to the disease: but the pain of a blow upon an ulcerated part, however exquisite, is well compensated if, by promoting a discharge, it effect a cure. Encouraged, by the example and declaration of David, to hope for mercy on confession of sin, it is foretold in this Psalm, that humble penitents shall be led to make their prayer unto God in the acceptable time, and in the day of salvation, while He "may be found;" that so they may be forgiven, and preserved from great and overwhelming calamities; from the fears of death, and the terrours of judgment. Bp. Horne.

Psalm XXXIII. This Psalm is an acknowledgment of the great power, and wisdom, and goodness of God in His works of creation and providence: wherein all are obliged to sing praises to His name, and faithfully to serve and depend on Him. Dr. Hammond. It was probably composed on the occasion of some special benefit received from God. Reeves.

Ver. 2. — with harp: — with the psaltery.] The harp among the Jews was played upon with a bow; the psaltery with the fingers. Rosenmüller. He mentions these instruments, because they were used in the publick worship and praises of God in the tabernacle. Poole.

— with the psaltery and an instrument of ten strings.] This should be rendered as it is in the Greek, "on the ten-stringed lute." Green.

8. — a new song;] The "new song" shews the Psalm to be composed upon a new occasion. This appears likewise from the tenth verse, which speaks of some grand defeat given to the projects of the heathen. Mudge.

4. — all his works &c.] That is, all His works are done agreeably to His word or promises. Dr. Wells.

22.—according as we hope in thee.] We desire Thy mercy on no other terms, and in no other degree, but in proportion to the sincerity of our trust. Dr. Kennicott.

This Psalm engages us to make these reflexions: 1. That it is a duty highly reasonable, as well as delightful, to praise God; but that none but upright men can discharge it in a becoming manner. 2. That we ought to praise God, because He has created the world by His almighty power, and because He governs it wisely and justly by His providence. 3. That if it was a great advantage to the Israelites to be the people whom God had chosen for His inheritance; the favour which God has vouchsafed us, in admitting us into His church, and entering into covenant with us, is a still more glorious privilege. 4. That God has a perfect knowledge of all that passes in the world, that He sees all the thoughts and actions of men; the recollection of which should engage us to walk before Him in holiness and righteousness. Lastly, we should observe that the true way to have God our friend, is to trust in Him, to fear Him, and without ceasing to apply to Him for mercy. Osterwald.

Psalm XXXIV. The title informs us, that this Psalm was composed by David when he was sent away from Abimelech on his feigning himself mad. See 1 Sam. xxi. 13. But the name there given to the king of Gath is Achish. Hence Dr. Kennicott conjectured, that Abimelech was the common title of the king of Gath, (as Pharaoh of Egypt,) and Achish his particular name. Street. This Psalm, which was perhaps composed for the use of those who resorted to David, contains the noblest encouragements to piety and virtue, from an assurance, that all such as are so devoted are the immediate care of almighty God; as all those of a contrary character are His abhorrence, and the sure marks of His vengeance. And surely this Psalm, considered in this light, is one of the noblest, the best-turned, and best-judged, and best-adapted compositions that ever were penned. Dr. Delaney. It should be remarked, that the twentieth and twenty-first verses are of particular importance, as containing the famous prophecy, that "not a bone of the Just One (Messiah) should be broken:" John xix. 36. Dr. Kennicott.

Ver. 5. They looked unto him, &c.] The Greek, and other ancient versions, render this verse, "Come unto Him, and be enlightened; and let not your faces be ashamed." Dr. Wall.

—— and were lightened: &c.] The meaning is, that the humble looked unto God for David's protection, and received that light, that is, that comfort and joy from Him upon his return in safety, which diffused itself throughout their whole hearts; so that "their faces were not ashamed," or, as the word signifies, "not put to the blush for shame," by being disappointed as to their hope on his account. Dr. Chandler.

vation vouchsafed to the faithful, is here signified; whether we suppose that by "the angel of Jehovah," is meant the presence of Christ in the church militant; or the ministration of created spirits to the heirs of salvation, as in the case of Elisha, 2 Kings vi. 17. Bp. Horne.

21. — shall be desolate.] This should be rendered with the Chaldee Paraphrase, "shall be condemned to die." Green, Rosenmüller.

This Psalm is among the noblest and most edifying: David here teaches us, both by his instructions and example, that when God grants us any favour, we should not only thank Him for it, but invite other men to praise Him with us; that the Lord never fails to hear and deliver those who call upon Him in their distress; that His eyes are always over the righteous, whom, if exposed to many misfortunes, He delivers at the last; whereas He sets His face against the wicked for their destruction. Osterwald.

He who seeketh the Lord shall find Him; and he who hath found Him, can want nothing. Faith, hope, charity, temperance, purity, patience, and contentment, are the true riches; and the lack of them the poverty most to be dreaded. Moreover, God is never wanting to provide for His servants, what He seeth needful and best in matters temporal. Bp. Horne.

Psalm XXXV. This Psalm, from the contents of it, seems to have been composed by David when he was persecuted by Saul, and falsely accused by Doeg, and others of his enemies; from whom he begs of God for deliverance. Edwards. This Psalm, though in some measure applicable to David, the author of it, is more strictly so to Jesus. See John xv. 25. Dimock.

Ver. 2. — shield and buckler,] The word, here rendered "shield," seems to denote the lesser kind of shield; and that translated "buckler," the great shield. Edwards.

4. Let them be confounded &c.] Concerning this and the like imprecations, which may seem strange and severe, it must be considered, 1. That they did not proceed from any passionate or revengeful spirit in David towards his enemies; from which how free he was, appears not only from his own words here, ver. 12, 13, 14, but from the whole course of his life, and the frequent instances mentioned in his history of his meek and merciful carriage to his enemies when they were in his power. These imprecations, therefore, proceeded from his zeal for God, and for piety and justice; to which they shewed themselves to be constant and implacable adversaries: and by the direction of the prophetical Spirit of God, wherewith he was endued; which Spirit did exactly know the condition of his enemies; and that those, against whom they were levelled, were hardened and incurable. 2. That they contain nothing but a prayer to God, that He would accomplish His own threatenings, and execute His own law of retaliation, of "eye for eye, and tooth for tooth;" and so bring upon them the evils which they designed against him. Which also was of great and good use, both to glorify God's justice, and to warn and reform other sinners by the terrour of their example. 3. That they may be taken only for predictions. Poole. See the note on Psalm v. 10.

6. Let their way be dark &c.] So that none of them may be able to escape on account of the darkness and slipperiness of their way: but that all of them may be easily overthrown by the pursuing angel. Rosenmüller.

PSALM XXXVI.

1 The grievous estate of the wicked. 5 The excellency of God's mercy. 10 David prayeth for favour to God's children.

7. — in a pit,] See the note on Psalm vii. 15.

10. All my bones shall say,] By this figure David means to declare, that he would praise God with all the strength of his body, as well as power of his soul. Dr. Wells.

11, 12. False witnesses — spoiling of my soul.] This was never more literally true of David, than it was of the holy Jesus, when, standing before Pontius Pilate, He received no other return from the Jews for all the gracious words which He had spoken, and all the merciful works He had done among them, than that of being slandered and put to death. Bp. Horne.

12. — to the spoiling of my soul.] Attempting to rob me of my life. Green.

13. — my prayer returned &c.] The meaning seems to be, My prayer returned with blessings on my own head. Merrick. The sentence may perhaps be better explained thus, "My prayer rested or settled in my bosom;" that is, I was never without a prayer for them in my breast. Mudge, Dr. Kennicott. The Hebrews used various attitudes in prayer; the one here alluded to was that used in great grief, at which time they prayed with the head inclined on the bosom. Rosenmuller.

15. — and I knew it not;] This may mean, that the perfidy of his enemies was unknown to him; he suspected no such thing from them. Rosenmuller.

16. With hypocritical mockers &c.] Together with these were profane flatterers and buffoons; and their rage against me was as violent as if they could have devoured me. Bp. Patrick. Or the passage should perhaps rather be rendered, "They vilified me with profane scoffs and taunts; and ceased not to gnash upon me with their teeth." Edwards, Green.

17. — my darling from the lions.] Deliver my dear and precious life from these cruel and brutish enemies. Bp. Hall.

19. — that hate me without a cause.] This is applied to Christ by Himself, John xv. 25. Bp. Wilson.

21. — our eye hath seen it.] They openly avow that they themselves have been eyewitnesses of my treasonable practices. Dr. Wells. Or the meaning may be, We have seen what we wished; we have had our will. Green.

24. Judge me,] Vindicate me. Green.

What David in this Psalm says against his enemies, must not be misunderstood. Nor must we believe that we are allowed to wish evil to those who do evil to us, or to rejoice when that evil happens to them. We are to consider, that the enemies of David were enemies to God Himself; and that David, being a prophet, and having an express promise of the Divine assistance, might denounce destruction to them: but, in his heart, he did not wish it to befall them, and he was even afflicted at the evil which did befall them, as he himself testifies in this Psalm. Observald.

¶ To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David the servant of the LORD.

THE transgression of the wicked saith within my heart, that there is no fear of God before his eyes.

3 The words of his mouth are iniquity and deceit: he hath left off to be wise, and to do good.

[b] Prov. 16. 3. Matth. 6. 25. 1 Pet. 5. 7.

Psalm XXXVI. There are three parts of this Psalm: the first, in which the author describes the treacherous and false contrivances of wicked men: the second is the address of the good man to God, in which he acknowledges all those attributes, which are the support of righteous men, to be infinite and boundless; and from thence his assurance of being supported: the last, as the consequence of this, represents the downfall of the wicked. Mudge.

Ver. 1. The transgression of the wicked &c.] The transgressions of a bad man shew plainly, in the apprehension of a good one, that the former is destitute of the true fear of God. Abp. Secker. Or differently, thus; "The wicked man, according to the wickedness of his heart, saith, There is no fear of God before mine eyes." Bp. Lowth.

Or this passage may be rendered, with some ancient versions; "The wicked man hath an oracle of rebellion in his heart." The wicked man hath no regard to the oracles of God; he hath one in his heart which dictates nothing but rebellion. Mudge, Green.

2. — he flatteth himself &c.] He soothes himself in his own conceit, and cunningly imagines that he shall not be discovered: yet at length shall his iniquity come to light, and make him hateful to all men. Bp. Patrick.

5, 6. Thy mercy, O Lord, &c.] This passage is truly sublime. Here the mind of the Psalmist seems to exert its utmost faculties in vain to describe the attributes of God, whose unparalleled magnitude mocks its feeble endeavours; and to this end it employs the grandest imagery that universal nature can suggest: and yet this imagery, however great, proves totally inadequate to the purpose. Bp. Lowth.

8. — the fatness of thy house,] By this expression is meant all God's blessings, both temporal and spiritual. Bp. Hall.

9. — in thy light shall we see light.] The images of light and darkness are commonly made use of in all languages to imply or denote prosperity and adversity, agreeably to the common sense and perception which all men have of the objects themselves. But the Hebrews employ those figures more frequently, and with less variation than other people. Bp. Lowth.

10. — thy righteousness] Rather, Thy beneficence or bounty. Street.

11. — remove me.] Or cause me to fall. Dr. Wells.

12. There are the workers &c.] The expression used in the original, represents strongly before the eyes the sudden downfall of the wicked. Upon the very spot where they practise their treachery, they receive their downfall. Mudge.

We have here represented to us the behaviour of wicked men, who fear not God, and sooth themselves in their sins, instead of hating them; and the very different conduct of the righteous, who adore the justice of God, and are grateful for His favours. The use we should make of this Psalm is, to avoid the sentiments of the wicked, and to cleave to God by a sincere love and holy fear; to the end that we may rejoice in Him with the righteous, and say with David, "O God, how excellent is Thy lovingkindness!" Osterwald.

Psalm XXXVII. In this Psalm David seems to intend to prevent the scandal or offence against religion, which might be taken from observing the wicked in prosperity, and the godly under affliction. Dr. Wells. He may be supposed speaking to himself, or exhorting others to trust in God from his own example. Dimock.

Ver. 1. Fret not thyself &c.] In other words, Be not vexed at the prosperity of the wicked, neither be provoked by it to accuse the providence of God, nor wish thyself in their situation. Bp. Patrick.

5. Commit thy way &c.] We are exhorted here to commend our honest designs to God, and to leave the event to Him, in full confidence that He will direct it for the best. "Travell, Bp. Patrick.

12. — gnasheth upon him &c.] Could even tear him with his teeth. Bp. Wilson.

13. The Lord shall laugh &c.] The Lord, who takes notice of all his secret plots, shall laugh him to scorn; for, howsoever the foolish wicked man flatters himself in the conceit of his safety, yet the all-wise God sees that his destruction is at hand. Bp. Hall.

18. The Lord knoweth &c.] The actions of good men are seen, and will not fail of being rewarded by God; not only with the comforts of this life continued to them and their posterity, but with a never-failing possession in heaven. Dr. Hammond.

20. But the wicked shall perish, &c.] They shall vanish away into smoke; as the fat of lambs, which is laid upon the altar in sacrifice, so shall they be suddenly consumed. Bp. Hall.

27. — dwell for evermore.] "Dwell in the land for ever."

That is, enjoy a long and prosperous life in the land, with great tranquillity and peace. Bps. Hare and Patrick. Thou shalt never be exiled from the land which God hath given thee. Beaumillon.

33. The Lord will not leave &c.] God will find means to clear his innocence, though he be pronounced guilty by his enemies. Dr. Wells.

—— nor condemn him.] Nor suffer him to be condemned. Edwards.

35. — like a green bay tree.] This should rather be rendered, as in the margin, "like a flourishing tree in its native soil." Green.

The original simply signifies, "a native tree;" a tree growing in its native soil, not having suffered by transplantation: such a tree spreads itself luxuriantly. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

36. Yet he passed away, &c.] Yet, firm as he seemed to stand, he vanished on a sudden like a cloud: I looked about for him, to see whether he might not, like a tree, be transplanted to some other spot; but there was no such man to be seen. Bp. Patrick.

37 Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace.

38 But the transgressors shall be destroyed together: the end of the wicked shall be cut off.

39 But the salvation of the righteous is of the LORD: he is their strength in the time of trouble.

40 And the LORD shall help them, and deliver them: he shall deliver them from the wicked, and save them, because they trust in him.

PSALM XXXVIII.

David moveth God to take compassion of his pitiful case.

¶ A Psalm of David, to bring to remembrance.

O LORD, rebuke me not in thy wrath: neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure.

2 For thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me sore.

3 There is no soundness in my flesh because of thine anger; neither is there any † rest in my bones because of my sin.

4 For mine iniquities are gone over mine head: as an heavy burden they are too heavy for me.

5 My wounds stink and are corrupt because of my foolishness.

6 I am ‖ troubled; I am bowed down greatly; I go mourning all the day long.

7 For my loins are filled with a loathsome disease: and there is no soundness in my flesh.

8 I am feeble and sore broken: I have roared by reason of the disquietness of my heart.

9 LORD, all my desire is before thee; and my groaning is not hid from thee.

10 My heart panteth, my strength faileth me: as for the light of mine eyes, it also † is gone from me.

11 My lovers and my friends stand aloof from my † sore; and ‖ my kinsmen stand afar off.

12 They also that seek after my life lay snares for me: and they that seek my hurt speak mischievous things, and imagine deceits all the day long.

13 But I, as a deaf man, heard not; and I was as a dumb man that openeth not his mouth.

38. — the end of the wicked shall be cut off.] They and their posterity shall be destroyed. Dr. Hammond.

The design of this whole Psalm is, to convince men of the justice of God's dealings with all His people; to persuade them not hastily to conclude or judge of the ways of Providence, but to wait to see the end: not to depend upon their own reason, but to apply to God for light and satisfaction; for human reason being too short to pass judgment upon the ways of an infinitely wise and just God, would only lead men into doubts and fears, and rash censures of His providence. Bp. Wilson.

The "meek," mentioned at ver. 11, are they, who bear their own adversities, and the prosperity of their enemies, without envy, anger, or complaint. For these there is a possession in the kingdom and city of the Prince of "peace," which "the Lord the righteous Judge shall give them at that day." "Blessed are the meek," saith that Lord and Judge Himself, "for they shall inherit the earth," Matth. v. 5. In the mean time, they, and they only, possess the present earth, as they go towards the kingdom of heaven, by being humble, and cheerful, and content with what their good God has allotted them. They have no turbulent, repining, vexatious thoughts that they deserve better; nor are vexed, when they see others possessed of more honour, or more riches, than their wise God has allotted for their share. But they possess what they have with a meek and contented quietness; such a quietness as makes their very thoughts pleasing, both to God and themselves. Bp. Horne.

Psalm XXXVIII. This is another of those Psalms, which are called penitential, and therefore applicable to Ash Wednesday: it was composed by David under some great affliction and anguish of mind. It is not certain whether he here describes the state of his mind under various images, chiefly borrowed from bodily diseases and pains; or whether he was actually afflicted with sickness: very probably he was suffering from both. His complaints strongly express the anguish he felt from the conviction of his sinfulness, the displeasure of God, the coldness of his friends, and the insults of his enemies. He humbly supplicates the pardon of God, confesses his guilt, and, with patience and resignation, declares his hope and confidence to be only in the Divine favour. Travell.

— to bring to remembrance.] That is, either that by this humble and mournful prayer he might prevail with God to remember and pity him; for now He seemed quite to have forgotten him; or that, by reviewing this Psalm afterwards, he might call to mind his former danger and misery, and God's wonderful mercy in delivering him from them; which all are too apt to forget. And that others also might remember and consider what God had done for him; first in chastening, and then in restoring him: and might make use of his example for their benefit. Poole.

Ver. 2. — thine arrows &c.] The arrows, and the hand of God, are His judgments on sin; those internal pangs which pierce the soul, and those external afflictions which weigh down the spirits. Bp. Horne.

4. For mine iniquities are gone over mine head:] That is, my sins have brought so many evils upon me, that they overwhelm me like a flood. Bp. Patrick.

5. — because of my foolishness.] Meaning, the affliction had been justly brought upon him by his sin foolishly committed. Bp. Hall.

9. — all my desire is before thee;] That is, Thou knowest all my wants. Dr. Wells.

11. My lovers and my friends &c.] This passage is very similar to the words of Job xix. 13, and following verses, in which he complains of being deserted by his friends and companions; many other parts of this Psalm are also like the words and circumstances of Job. Rosenmüller.

13. — heard not; &c.] The meaning is, that he took no notice of their designs; only in a patient and humble silence commended himself to the care of God. Bp. Hall.

This Psalm offers to our consideration these three things: 1. It represents to us the sentiments of a penitent sinner, humbled under the load of his sins, and a sense of the Divine displeasure: these sentiments are expressed in this prayer; "O Lord, rebuke me not in Thy wrath: neither chasten me in Thy hot displeasure."

14 Thus I was as a man that heareth not, and in whose mouth are no reproofs.

15 For ‖ in thee, O LORD, do I hope: thou wilt ‖ hear, O LORD my God.

16 For I said, Hear me, lest otherwise they should rejoice over me: when my foot slippeth, they magnify themselves against me.

17 For I am ready † to halt, and my sorrow is continually before me.

18 For I will declare mine iniquity; I will be sorry for my sin.

19 But mine enemies † are lively, and they are strong: and they that hate me wrongfully are multiplied.

20 They also that render evil for good are mine adversaries; because I follow the thing that good is.

21 Forsake me not, O LORD: O my God, be not far from me.

22 Make haste † to help me, O LORD my salvation.

2. What is said in this Psalm is very proper for the instruction and consolation of those who are afflicted with pains and diseases, or in any other manner: David teaches them by his own example to look upon the evils that befall them, how severe soever they be, as a just correction for their sins; and to ask God pardon for them. 3. If they suffer by the malice and injustice of men, they should imitate David in his humility, patience, and meekness; and wait with resignation till God, who never forsakes the innocent, is pleased to deliver them. Osterwald.

Psalm XXXIX. The foundation of this Psalm is much the same with the foregoing: the author laboured under some great illness; he knew it due to his sins; he was afraid therefore to speak in the presence of the wicked, lest he might say any thing of which they might take advantage: at last, however, he could hold no longer, but bursts forth into an acknowledgment of the weakness and vanity of man in the hands of God; confessing that, whatever he might think heretofore, he has now no longer any expectation but from God, whom therefore he supplicates for mercy. Mudge. This Psalm is with the utmost propriety appointed by our Church to be used at the burial of the dead, as a funeral is indeed the best comment upon it. Bp. Horne.

— Jeduthun.] Jeduthun is mentioned as a singer in 1 Chron. xxv. 3. This Psalm was perhaps composed by David to be sung by that Jeduthun. Street.

Ver. 2. I was dumb &c.] I refrained from speaking what was good; from giving God the glory with relation to my illness, by acknowledging His greatness and justice, and the nothingness and sinfulness of man.—This seems to shew that the reason why he would not speak at all before his enemies was, because he did not care to give them an occasion of triumph, as he must by acknowledging his own weakness and sin: but he could not bear this restraint; it grew worse and worse, and therefore he burst out, &c. Mudge. There is a time to keep silence, because there are men who will not hear; there are tempers savage and sensual as those of swine, before whom the treasures of heavenly wisdom are not to be cast. This consideration stirreth up fresh grief and trouble in a pious and charitable heart. Bp. Horne.

4. Lord, make me to know &c.] Teach me, O Lord, to consider my end, and what is the measure of my days, that I may be sensible how short my life is. Green.

5. — mine age is as nothing before thee:] That is, my age is as nothing in Thy sight; or, when compared with Thy duration. Green, Merrick.

6. — in vain:] In the pursuit of transitory things. Bp. Wilson.

7. — what wait I for?] What can I depend on for happiness? Bp. Wilson.

—— my hope is in thee.] I will not impatiently desire any thing in this world: but my hope is in Thee, as the only true and lasting good. Dr. Wells.

8. — the reproach of the foolish.] That is, a matter of scorn and insult to the sneerer and atheist, who is the fool described by the Psalmist; and who is indeed eminently so above all others. Mudge.

11. — thou makest his beauty to consume away &c.] See the note on Job iv. 19.

Such as have formed themselves to feel the impressions of resignation are in proportion superiour to all difficulties. Their spirits are calm; and, instead of plunging into deeper distresses and even guilt, as the impatient do, they find their way, if any one can be found, out of every perplexity. By excluding eager hopes and high desires of earthly good, this pious principle excludes also jealous envy, keen resentment, tormenting fears, bitter disappointments, and final dislike of every thing. He that gives himself up into the hands of God, with unfeigned approbation of the Divine conduct in whatever may befall him, will act as he ought on all emergencies, with uprightness and alacrity, with courage and honour; will suffer with a composed and even temper; will thus give testimony to the efficacy of religion, and vindicate the dispensations of Providence to mankind. Abp. Secker.

Psalm XL. In this Psalm David thankfully acknowledges God's goodness to him, in delivering him from some special and imminent danger. He then declares his resolution to serve God faithfully and cheerfully, by fulfilling His will to the utmost of his power, and by teaching it to others. He commends himself to God's merciful Providence, beseeching Him to finish what He had begun, by continuing to be his deliverer. The circumstance of three verses of this Psalm, being quoted in the tenth chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews, proves that they are a direct prophecy of Jesus Christ, who only could fulfil the will of God completely, and who came into the world for that very end; as well as to declare His righteousness to the great congregation of the whole world. This application of the Psalm makes it highly suitable to Good Friday. Travell.

Ver. 2. He brought me up &c.] David means, that God delivered him, when he was fallen into such deep distress, that he was quite unable to help himself. Bp. Patrick.

3. — shall see it,] Shall see this great deliverance. Dr. Wells.

4. — respecteth not the proud, &c.] The proud and those who incline to lies are, on one side, the haughty daring atheists, who laugh at all application to any power above; and on the other, those who put their confidence in idol superstitions, which are all lie and deceit. Mudge.

6. — mine ears hast thou opened:] This phrase seems to signify, the fitting and disposing the ear to hear God's will. It is remarkable, that the Greek version, as well as the quotation from it in Heb. x. 5, instead of the phrase, "Mine ears hast Thou opened," reads, "A body hast Thou prepared me;" intimating the great superiority of Christ's death to the sacrifices of the law. Travell, Edwards.

—— burnt offering and sin offering hast thou not required.] That is, considered independent of that holiness of life, without which sacrifice never could have been acceptable to a holy and righteous God. Dr. Magee.

7. — Lo, I come: &c.] Lo, I come to make an offering of myself by a sincere obedience unto Thee; as Christ will also actually do, by offering up His body to be a sacrifice for the sins of the world: In the volume of the book of the law it is thus written, or required of all truly religious persons, particularly of kings, and so of me in both respects, to be careful to offer a due obedience to Thy will, as well as to legal sacrifices. Dr. Wells.

—— in the volume] Or "roll," of the book. See Jer. xxvi. 2, &c. It is well known that the ancient Jewish books did not, like ours, consist of distinct leaves bound together; but were, as the copies of the Pentateuch used in the Jewish synagogues still are, long scrolls of parchment, rolled upon two sticks, with the writing distinguished into columns. Parkhurst.

9. I have preached &c.] I have proclaimed Thy mercy and goodness to me before Thy people, in their full assemblies. Bp. Patrick.

12. — mine iniquities] He means the evils which his iniquities had brought upon him. Bp. Hall. By this expression, as relating to Christ, is meant, the iniquities of mankind which He had taken upon Himself. Bp. Wilson.

The Church, like her Redeemer, is often poor and afflicted in this world, but Jehovah thinketh upon her, and is solicitous for her support; she, as weak and defenceless, but Jehovah is her help and her deliverer. With such a Father, and such a Friend, poverty becometh rich, and weakness itself strong. In the mean time, let us remember, that He who once came in great humility shall come again in glorious majesty. "Make no long tarrying, O our God." Bp. Horne.

14 [b] Let them be ashamed and confounded together that seek after my soul to destroy it; let them be driven backward and put to shame that wish me evil.

15 Let them be desolate for a reward of their shame that say unto me, Aha, aha.

16 Let all those that seek thee rejoice and be glad in thee: let such as love thy salvation say continually, The LORD be magnified.

17 But I am poor and needy; yet the LORD thinketh upon me: thou art my help and my deliverer; make no tarrying, O my God.

We learn from the third verse of this Psalm, that though an exemption from sorrow and sickness is not promised to the children of God, yet strength and comfort are given unto them from above, to support and carry them through their trials; and they who, in the days of their health, have by their alms given rest to the bodies, or by their counsels restored peace to the consciences, of others, shall have the bed of pain made easy under them, by the hand of their heavenly Father. Bp. Horne. The end of the first Book of Psalms.

Psalm XLII. This Psalm was most probably composed by David, when he was driven by Absalom from Jerusalem. Dr. Wells. The author of this elegant complaint, exiled from the temple, and from the publick exercise of his religion, to the extreme parts of Judea, persecuted by his numerous enemies, and agitated by their reproaches, pours forth his soul to God in this tender and pathetick composition. The ardent feelings of a devout heart are admirably expressed, while the memory of former felicity seems to aggravate his present anguish. The extreme anxiety of a mind, depressed by the burden of sorrow, and yet at the same time impatient under it; overcome by an accumulation of evils, yet in some degree endeavouring to resist them, and admitting, through the dark cloud of affliction, a glimmering ray of hope and consolation, is finely depicted. Bp. Lowth.

— the sons of Korah.] These were probably an eminent order of singers in the house of God. See 1 Chron. ix. 19. and xxvi. 1. Poole.

2 My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God: when shall I come and appear before God?

11 Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God.

PSALM XLIII.

1 David, praying to be restored to the temple, promiseth to serve God joyfully. 5 He encourageth his soul to trust in God.

JUDGE me, O God, and plead my cause against an ‖ ungodly nation: O deliver me † from the deceitful and unjust man. ‖ Or, unmerciful. † Heb. from a man of deceit and iniquity.

2 For thou art the God of my strength: why dost thou cast me off? why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy?

3 O send out thy light and thy truth: let them lead me; let them bring me unto thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles.

4 Then will I go unto the altar of God, unto God † my exceeding joy: yea, upon the harp will I praise thee, O God my God. † Heb. the gladness of my joy.

5 a Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope in God: for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God. a Ps. 42. 5, 11.

Ver. 3. My tears have been my meat day and night,] He means that his grief at his forced absence from God's house was so great, that he was obliged to vent it by tears continually. Dr. Wells.

4. When I remember &c.] I pour out my soul within me while I call to mind these things; how I went to the tabernacle, walking in solemn pace to the house of God, amidst the multitude keeping holyday, with the voice of praise and thanksgiving. Green.

5. — for I shall yet praise him &c.] This passage should be read as it is in the last verse of this and of the next Psalm. Bps. Hare and Lowth.

6. — from the hill Mizar.] The word "Mizar" signifies little. It might be the name of some hill beyond Jordan, or possibly some little hill now in view. The general sense of the verse is, "I will remember Thee, whatever dangers surround me, and whithersoever I am driven." Archdeacon Randolph.

7. Deep calleth unto deep.] That is, one calamity invites and brings on another. Rosenmüller.

There is no metaphor more frequent in the sacred poems, than that by which sudden and great calamities are expressed under the figure of a deluge of waters. This metaphor seems to have been remarkably familiar to the Hebrews, as if directly taken from the nature and state of their country, which was subject to sudden and heavy floods. Bp. Lowth.

10. As with a sword &c.] The reproaches of my enemies are as cutting as a sword. Bp. Patrick.

11. — the health of my countenance.] The Restorer of my drooping spirits. Bp. Wilson.

In the first verse of this Psalm, the thirst, which the "hart" experienceth, when chased in sultry weather over the dusty plains, is set before us as a representation of that ardent desire after the waters of eternal comfort, which the temptations, the cares, and the troubles of the world, produce in the believing soul. Bp. Horne.

By due reverence and affection to God's worship, and to His church, we bring ourselves by degrees to that true and entire love of God Himself, to which so many pretend, and so few attain; to that high value and estimation of Him and of His presence, that we really contemn and despise all the pleasure and profit of this world, and the world itself, for interposing and obstructing our immediate resort to His heavenly mansion. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm XLIII. This Psalm, in all probability, was composed by the same author as the former, and upon the same occasion. Bp. Patrick. Nothing can be imagined more natural to a man of David's character, and under the circumstances in which he was placed, than that solemn appeal to the Divine justice, against a vile son, and a wicked people, with which this Psalm begins; or the earnest supplication for relief and restoration which follows it; or that lively expression of hope, and confidence in the Divine protection, which concludes it. Dr. Delaney. More than thirty manuscripts confirm the opinion of Bp. Lowth, that this and the preceding are one Psalm. Street.

Ver. 3. O send out &c.] In other words, O let Thy gracious favour, and the truth of Thy promises, be my sure guide to conduct me to Thy holy mountain, where Thou hast fixed Thy dwellingplace. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

We learn from this Psalm, that if the prophet begged of God to deliver him from the malice of his enemies, it was chiefly with a view to return to the tabernacle, that he might praise God and express his joy, love, and gratitude. And the complaint and sighs which he uttered, because he could not come into the house of God, should engage those who have the liberty to serve God in religious assemblies, gladly to improve so inestimable a blessing. Osterwald.

Psalm XLIV. This Psalm appears to have been composed at a time when the Jewish state suffered grievously from their enemies, and many were carried into captivity; though the state itself still subsisted, and the publick worship of God was maintained. It is not unlikely that Hezekiah was the author of it; and that perhaps, soon after the blasphemous message of Rabshakeh, 2 Kings xviii. 13, &c. Mudge.

11. Thou hast given us &c.] Like sheep for the slaughter. Green.

12. Thou sellest thy people &c.] That is, Thou permittest them to be held cheap and vile, and to be sold into slavery by their enemies, for little or nothing; a situation far more to be dreaded than the sword of the executioner. Bp. Horne.

14. Thou makest us a byword &c.] A proverb of wretchedness among the heathen, who shook their heads at them in mere contempt and derision. Bp. Patrick.

15, 16. My confusion is &c.] I am confounded with the continual marks of our disgrace, and am so ashamed, that I am unwilling to shew my face: nor do I hear any thing but reproachful words against us, and blasphemy against Thee, O God; such is the insolence of the enemy, and so insatiable is his revenge. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

19. — in the place of dragons,] That is, in the wilderness; in a wild desolate place, where were serpents and other noxious animals. The inspired author seems here to refer to some former distress of the Jewish nation. Edwards.

—— covered us with the shadow of death.] That is, deprived us of all hope of escaping from our misery. Rosenmuller.

22. Yea, for thy sake &c.] But our sufferings for the truth testify our fidelity to Thee; for it is our perseverance in religion which daily exposes us to the horrours of death. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

25. — our soul is bowed down &c.] The weight of our misery is so great, that it hath sunk us into this dejected condition, so that we have no strength left to help ourselves. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

Like the Israelites of old, we should in our afflictions comfort ourselves with the consideration of the goodness of the Lord, and Psalm XLV. This is a very remarkable Psalm, supposed to have been originally written on occasion of Solomon's marriage with the daughter of Pharaoh king of Egypt. But indeed many of the expressions in it are of so exalted a nature, that they can not with any propriety be applied to any one but our Saviour; so that it may well be said, as our Lord doth in another case, "Behold, a greater than Solomon is here!" Accordingly it has been generally understood to be a prophetical song, foretelling the marriage of Christ with His spouse the Church. St. Paul (Hebr. i.) expressly applies the sixth and seventh verses of this Psalm to our Saviour. It is very properly appointed to be used on Christmas-day, when we commemorate His actual coming into the world. Travell.

— Shoshannim,] By this term we may understand all those instrument- which had six strings. Bp. Patrick.

Ver. 1. My heart is inditing &c.] My heart is full and ready to overflow with an important and glorious subject, which I have meditated, and am ready to utter in honour of king Solomon; who is but a shadow of that great King whom we expect. Travell.

— a ready writer.] That is, a well-instructed writer; a writer prepared and ready, by a perfect knowledge of the subject he undertakes to treat. Bp. Horsley.

2. Thou art fairer &c.] Thou, O king, art lovely above all other persons, thy speech is most acceptable and persuasive, because the Lord loves thee, and has poured His choicest blessings upon thee: yet do these but faintly represent the eternal blessings, which He will bestow on that great King, who shall be "in favour with God and man," and who shall make all men "wonder at the gracious words which proceed out of His mouth." Bp. Patrick.

3. Gird thy sword &c.] Put on thy royal ornaments, and the ensigns of thy power, that thou mayest appear with such splendour and majesty, as may serve for an emblem of that sovereign authority, in which the Lord of all the world shall hereafter appear among men. Bp. Patrick.

4. And in thy majesty &c.] May thy kingdom be every way so prosperous, by promoting all manner of virtue among thy subjects, and by terrifying thy enemies, that it may prove a lively emblem of the happy government of the Lord Christ: whose kingdom shall prevail over all, when He goes forth, like a great conqueror in His triumphal chariot, not to enslave men's persons, but to settle the true faith among them; to make them humble and meek, just and charitable: and for the accomplishing of this glorious work, Thy mighty power, O Lord, shall instruct Thee to perform miraculous and amazing things. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

5. Thine arrows are sharp &c.] Thy power shall be sufficient to subdue thy greatest enemies; so shall the grace of Christ be mightily successful in bringing the Gentile world into subjection to His kingdom. Dr. Hammond.

6. Thy throne, O God, &c.] The kingdom of the Messiah is never to have an end. And herein is Solomon a type of Him: the kingdom of Judah, now settled on him, shall endure till the time of the Messiah's coming, and entering on His immutable kingdom. Dr. Hammond.

7. Thou lovest righteousness, &c.] Thou, O Christ, lovest righteousness and hatest iniquity; therefore God the Father hath advanced Thee above all angels and men, and exalted Thee to reign for ever at His own right hand. And herein also was Solomon a type of the Messiah, whose preference of wisdom to wealth was highly rewarded by God, beyond all other men. Dr. Hammond.

8. All thy garments &c.] Thy wedding garments, worn by thee on this joyful occasion, scatter through the royal apartments, richly inlaid with ivory, a fragrance of the sweetest perfumes: in like manner shall the heavenly graces of Christ be diffused, as a sweet odour over His faithful servants. Travell.

— myrrh, and aloes, and cassia,] Perhaps these were the drugs, with which the oil for the anointing the kings of Israel and Judah was prepared. Two of them, the myrrh and cassia, are the same with those from which the oil for the consecration of Aaron and his sons was commanded to be made. See Exod. xxx. 23, 24. Street.

9. Kings' daughters &c.] Thy court was attended by kings' daughters; and next to thyself was placed the royal bride, clad in garments embroidered with gold: an image of Christ's spouse, the Church, which shall hereafter "sit" with Him "in heavenly places," (Ephes. ii. 6.) arrayed in the garments of righteousness and salvation. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

10. Hearken, O daughter, &c.] Understand, and consider seriously, O royal bride, the happiness of being married to such a prince; and let not the thoughts of thy own country and family dwell too much upon thy mind: in like manner must the true Christian, when brought to Christ, renounce the world, and even his dearest connexions, for His sake. *Bp. neighbouring city of Tyre shall come and bring presents; the most powerful among them shall solicit thy favour; as the kings of the earth shall hereafter bring their glory and honour into the church. Rev. xxi. 24. Bp. Patrick.

13. The king's daughter &c.] The bride of our prince is no less adorned with all excellent qualities of mind, than her body is with rich and splendid attire: so the ornaments of those that are born of God in the Christian church shall not be so much "that outward adorning of wearing of gold, as the hidden man of the heart, which is in the sight of God of great price;" 1 Pet. iii. 3, 4. Bp. Patrick.

14. She shall be brought &c.] She shall be brought home unto the king with magnificent pomp, in embroidered raiment; and the virgins, that attend upon her, shall accompany her: in like manner shall Christ receive His spouse the Church, adorned with a robe of righteousness; and all they, who in after-ages shall be acknowledged by Christ as His disciples, shall altogether form one glorious train of attendants. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

16. Instead of thy fathers &c.] And may this be the happy fruit of thy marriage, that, instead of thy royal ancestors in Egypt, thou mayest be the mother of children, who shall be rulers in all countries subject to king Solomon: so shall the Church continually bring forth children unto Christ, "whom He shall make kings and priests unto God; and they shall reign on the earth;" Rev. v. 10. Travell.

17. I will make thy name &c.] By this song I will make thy name to be mentioned with honour throughout all ages, which shall celebrate thy praise, as long as the world shall last: and much more shall the name of Christ, and His blessed union with His Church, be celebrated with perpetual praises. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

Aswe are not apt to consider Christ Himself aright, and thereby may probably fail in prescribing good rules to ourselves for the performance of our duty to Him, so we have as little regard what service we are to do, and what reverence we are to pay to that dear spouse of His, the Church: many too superstitiously contracting all their devotion to her ivory palaces, and to her raiment of needlework, to outward forms and ceremonies, and to the pomp of Divine worship, without much considering the inward operation and effect of religion; and others as licentiously and profanely, under pretence of being "all glorious within," contemn all outward preparation for, and ornament of, God's service; and because Christ's Church consists of the multitude of believers, and that He looks principally upon the heart as the seat of religion, they will allow Him no other temple to be served in, and believe both churches and priests of no use to the exercise of their devotion. Whereas, though the "king's daughter be all glorious within, her clothing is" likewise to be "of wrought gold;" inward sanctity appears the more beautiful, for the outward decency and lustre that attends it. And Christ Himself, though He expects and requires the duty of the heart, and to be served by all persons, and in all places, yet He reserves some offices in His service for a peculiar people, more particularly dedicated to it, and vouchsafes more especially to reside in those places which are more solemnly dedicated to, and consecrated for, His worship. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm XLVI. This appears to be a thanksgiving Psalm for some victory or deliverance. Street. Probably it may have been composed in the reign of Jehoshaphat. See 2 Chron xx. Rosenmüller.

— for the sons of Korah, A Song upon Alamoth.] The word Alamoth has by some been understood to specify the musical instrument, which was used to accompany the singing of the Psalm. But it also signifies virgins or maidens. The meaning of the title therefore may be, "An ode by the sons of Korah together with virgins." Street.

Ver. 3, 4. Though the waters &c.] The sense is, Though the numerous forces which are come up against Jerusalem should, like a tempestuous sea, roar and rage, and threaten her with utter destruction; yet the small forces that guard her, which for their stillness may be compared to the soft flowing stream of Siloah, shall by the help of her God protect her. Green.

6. The heathen raged, &c.] How concise and energetick are these expressions of the Divine power! Bp. Horne.

— he uttered his voice,] Alluding to the demonstration of God's power visibly exerted in the cause of Israel—and the inhabitants of the earth melted, as it were, with fear. Rosenmüller.

9. — he burneth the chariot &c.] Alluding to the heathen custom of burning the arms of those they had conquered, in honour of their gods, and as a sign of peace. Bp. Lowth.

10 Be still, and know that I am God: I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth.

PSALM XLVII.

The nations are exhorted cheerfully to entertain the kingdom of Christ.

‖ Or, of. ¶ To the chief Musician, A Psalm ‖ for the sons of Korah.

O CLAP your hands, all ye people; shout unto God with the voice of triumph.

2 For the LORD most high is terrible; he is a great King over all the earth.

3 He shall subdue the people under us, and the nations under our feet.

4 He shall choose our inheritance for us, the excellency of Jacob whom he loved. Selah.

5 God is gone up with a shout, the LORD with the sound of a trumpet.

6 Sing praises to God, sing praises: sing praises unto our King, sing praises.

‖ Or, every one that hath understanding. 7 For God is the King of all the earth: sing ye praises ‖ with understanding.

8 God reigneth over the heathen: God sitteth upon the throne of his holiness.

9 ‖ The princes of the people are gathered together, even the people of the God of Abraham: for the shields of the earth belong unto God: he is greatly exalted.

‖ Or, The voluntary of the people are gathered unto the people of the God of Abraham.

PSALM XLVIII.

The ornaments and privileges of the church.

¶ A Song and Psalm ‖ for the sons of Korah. ‖ Or, of.

GREAT is the LORD, and greatly to be praised in the city of our God, in the mountain of his holiness.

2 Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King.

3 God is known in her palaces for a refuge.

4 For, lo, the kings were assembled, they passed by together.

5 They saw it, and so they marvelled; they were troubled, and hasted away.

6 Fear took hold upon them there, and pain, as of a woman in travail.

7 Thou breakest the ships of Tarshish with an east wind.

8 As we have heard, so have we seen in the city of the LORD of hosts, in the city of our God: God will establish it for ever. Selah.

10. Be still, and know &c.] In this verse there is a change of person; and Jehovah Himself is introduced, as commanding the world to cease its opposition, to own His power, and to acknowledge His sovereignty over all the kingdoms of the nations. Bp. Horne.

As we are continually beset by troubles, either bodily or spiritual, so we continually stand in need of a city of refuge and strength, into which we may flee and be safe. Religion is that city, whose gates are always open to the afflicted soul. We profess to believe this: do we act agreeably to such profession? Bp. Horne.

Psalm XLVII. This Psalm was probably composed and sung on occasion of bringing the ark, either into the tabernacle on mount Zion by David, or thence into the temple by Solomon. And the ark being a type of Christ, as mount Zion was of heaven, the carrying of the ark up to that mount may be considered as a type of Christ's ascension into heaven: and accordingly this Psalm is appointed by the Church to be used on Ascension-day. Dr. Wells, Travell.

Ver. 4. He shall choose &c.] Or, He hath chosen the good land of Canaan to be our inheritance. Dr. Wells.

—— the excellency of Jacob.] Meaning the land of Israel. Mudge.

5. God is gone up &c.] The ark, which is the emblem of the special presence of God, is gone up into the holy place on mount Zion with a shout of joy and praise. Dr. Wells. This carrying up of the ark mystically represents Christ's ascension into heaven, as may be gathered by comparing this with Eph. iv. 8, where the like words, uttered concerning the ark upon the same occasion, Psalm lxviii. 18, are directly applied to Christ's ascension. Poole.

9. The princes of the people &c.] This verse plainly describes the kings of the Gentiles as according to the Church, as becoming with their subjects, through faith, "the people of the God of Abraham," and a part of the sacred flock. Bp. Horne.

This Psalm should excite us to praise God, and to celebrate His glory with holy transports, as He is the King of the whole earth, and deserves the adoration of all men; but above all, because He has chosen us to be His people and His inheritance. But we should also apply this Psalm to the times of the Gospel, and especially to our Lord's ascension to the glory of His kingdom, and to the happiness which the several nations of the earth now enjoy in being accounted the people of God. Osterwald.

Psalm XLVIII. This Psalm is appointed by our Church to be used on Whit-Sunday, because, under images taken from the earthly city Jerusalem, are celebrated the glory, the beauty, and the strength of the Christian Church, that city and temple of Messiah. Bp. Horne.

Ver. 1. — the mountain of his holiness.] That is, mount Zion, the holy spot which He has set apart for the place of His worship. Dr. Wells, Travell.

2. — the joy of the whole earth.] The joy of all the land of Judah then, and afterwards of the whole earth: because the law was to come out of Zion. Bp. Nicholson.

—— on the sides of the north.] On the north side. Old Translation.

3. God is known &c.] God has made Himself known in her towers to be our defence. Edwards.

5. They saw it, &c.] The meaning is, that when the kings of neighbouring countries had united together and marched their forces against it, they were astonished at its strength and beauty; and, being seized with sudden amazement, they made haste to escape. Travell.

7. Thou breakest the ships &c.] The meaning evidently is, that as the east wind shatters in pieces the ships of Tarshish, so the Divine power struck the heathen kings with terrour and astonishment. Bp. Horne.

8. As we have heard, &c.] In other words, What we have

9 We have thought of thy lovingkindness, O God, in the midst of thy temple.

10 According to thy name, O God, so is thy praise unto the ends of the earth: thy right hand is full of righteousness.

heard from them of old time, we have now seen verified with our own eyes, in the salvation of this holy city, which is the city of the God of the armies of heaven, and which we trust He will protect in future ages. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

10. According to thy name, &c.] Wherever Thy name is known and Thy works are declared, there, O Lord, shall Thy praises be extended over all the world; and the righteousness of Thy judgments shall be everywhere acknowledged. Travell.

11. — the daughters of Judah] All the lesser cities of Judea. Bp. Wilson.

13. Mark ye well her bulwarks, &c.] Observe the outworks, and consider all the stately buildings, and mark how entire they are, and unhurt by the enemies' attacks; that the memory of so great a blessing may be recorded to future generations. Bp. Patrick. Travell.

The reflexion we are to make upon this Psalm is, that the Church has often been attacked by the kings and nations of the world, who had conspired together to destroy it; but that God has always watched over it, and rendered the conspiracies of its enemies vain, and turned them to their own confusion. This Psalm assures us, that the Church is the dearest thing to God upon earth; that He dwells in the midst of it; that He encompasses it with His protection; and that He will always support it. These promises are still better suited to the Christian than to the Jewish Church, and ought to convince us of our happiness, in being members of Christ's Church, and to fill all sincere Christians with steadfast hope and confidence in God. Ostervald.

Psalm XLIX. The object of this very difficult Psalm seems to be, to expose the folly of those who place a confidence in their power and wealth, when, after all, neither of those can ransom their souls from death and their bodies from the tomb; while the author professes himself to believe, that God will redeem his soul from the power of the grave. Street.

Ver. 3. My mouth shall speak &c.] I am going to utter things of most important concern, even weighty matters, which my heart has deeply pondered. Travell.

I will speak such things as shall teach men to be truly wise, and to judge and determine prudently in all things. Rosenmüller.

4. I will incline mine ear &c.] I myself will diligently attend to the lesson I am going to unfold, and the important instruction shall be accompanied with the melody of musick. Travell.

5. Wherefore should I fear &c.] Why should I give way to fear and despondency in the time of calamity, when the wickedness of my wealthy and powerful adversaries compasses me about, to supplant and overthrow me? Bps. Horne and Lowth.

— of my heels] Rather, "of my supplanters;" "of those who endeavour to supplant me." Parkhurst.

7. None of them &c.] None of them, with all his wealth and power, can save his dearest friend from the grave, or preserve him alive when God calls him. Bp. Patrick.

8. (For the redemption &c.] The redemption of a man's life is too difficult and precious a thing for a man to undertake; so that it must ever be a vain attempt. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

11. Their inward thought is, &c.] Nevertheless, worldly-minded men secretly please themselves with the hopes, that their habitations and estates shall continue in their family from age to age; they indulge themselves in the idea of an imaginary immortality, by giving their own names to their lands. Travell.

13. This their way is their folly:] The practice of labouring to acquire wealth and greatness, which be of no service after death, is doubtless a folly; but it is a folly, which, like many others, is at once blamed and imitated. Bp. Horne.

14. Like sheep &c.] They must, like sheep driven to the slaughter, become the prey of death, and go in crowds to the grave: and then the just, whom they insulted, shall triumph over them in that glorious dawn of the resurrection; their faded beauty shall moulder away in the silent habitation of the grave. Travell.

15 But God will redeem my soul † from the power of ‖ the grave: for he shall receive me. Selah.

18. Though while he lived &c.] While men enjoy all the pleasures which their riches afford them, they call themselves the only happy people: and whoever follows their steps will be sure to have the praise of wicked and foolish people. Bp. Wilson.

20. Man that is in honour, &c.] That man who lives in outward honour, and yet wants true wisdom and understanding to know God and himself, lives and dies like a beast. Bp. Hall.

Let us seriously lay to heart, that our time in this world is but a short eve to an everlasting holiday; and that the world itself is but a barren, steep, and stormy passage, to the most fertile and pleasant land that ever was inhabited; where, if we have behaved ourselves well in the way, more glorious mansions are prepared for us, than the greatest monarch of the earth was ever in possession of: let us in our daily morning prayers humbly and earnestly beseech God to root out of our hearts all those immoderate desires and inclinations towards the pomp and pleasures of this life, which intoxicate us, and we shall be ashamed all the day after to entertain any of those proud, and covetous, and ambitious thoughts, that are so contrary to our prayers; and so, by devoutly wishing to be what we ought to be, we shall grow fixed and steady, and superiour to those vain temptations. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm L. This Psalm sets forth, that the Divine favour is not to be conciliated by sacrifices, or by any of the external rites and services of religion, but rather by sincere piety, and by the devout effusions of a grateful heart: and yet, that even these will not be accepted without the strictest attention to justice, and every practical virtue. It consists therefore of two parts: in the first, the devout but ignorant and superstitious worshipper is reproved; and in the second, the hypocritical pretender to virtue and religion. Each part of the subject, if we regard the imagery and diction only, is treated rather with variety and elegance, than with sublimity; but if the general effect, if the plot and machinery of the whole be considered, scarcely any thing can appear more truly magnificent.

God is here introduced as entering upon a solemn and publick action or pleading before the whole world, against His disobedient people. He summons all mankind, from east to west, to be present to hear His appeal; and the solemnity is held on Zion, where He is attended by the same terrible pomp that accompanied Him on mount Sinai. Bp. Lowth.

— Asaph.] Whether this Asaph was the Levite who lived in the same age with David, or some other prophet in aftertimes, cannot be certainly determined. Bp. Patrick.

Ver. 1. The mighty God, &c.] That is, The decree is gone out from God the Father, touching the calling of all nations by God the Son.

2. Out of Zion,] As God in a special manner was present here in His tabernacle, so shall the Son of God, in fulness of time, be visibly present in that place, and thence give His commission to reveal the Gospel to all nations. Fenton.

4. He shall call to the heavens &c.] The heavens and the earth are invoked as witnesses, which is a pompous form of expression common with the Hebrew writers: "He shall call the heavens from on high; and the earth to the judgment of His people." Bp. Lowth.

5. Gather my saints &c.] He shall say, Bring those men before Me, whom I have separated to Myself to be a holy nation, and who have made a solemn agreement with Me, confirmed by the blood of sacrifices. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

8. I will not reprove thee &c.] It is not for any defect in thy external and ceremonial service of sacrifices and other appointed offerings that I complain of thee: these have been performed with scrupulous exactness. Travell.

9—12. I will take no bullock] The Jewish folly of doating on the legal offerings, as things in themselves acceptable to God, and conferring justification on man, is reproved in these verses, from the consideration, that the various animals slain in sacrifice were long before, even from the creation of the world, the sole right and property of Jehovah; which, therefore, He needed not to have required at the hands of His people; nor would He have done so, but for some further end and intent signified and represented by such oblations. tent was, Christians know; and Jews formerly did know. Learn we hence, not to dream of any merit in our works and services; since God has a double claim, founded on creation and redemption, to all we have, and all we are. Bp. Horne.

14. Offer unto God thanksgiving; &c.] God here declares, that the sacrifice which is truly acceptable to Him is a heart thankful for all the blessings He has bestowed; and the faithful performance of all the vows and promises which have been made to Him. Bp. Patrick.

21. These things hast thou done, &c.] All this wickedness hast thou committed, and I have forborne to punish thee; but My forbearance, instead of leading thee to amendment, has made thee consider Me, either as ignorant of thy wickedness, or inclined to evil like thyself: but I will now rebuke thee sharply for it, and set all thy evil deeds in order before thine eyes. Bp. Patrick.

23. Whoso offereth praise.] This verse sums up the two principal points of charge. "I look upon him only as the man who truly honours Me, that offers before Me a grateful heart; and none but the man that sets himself to order his life aright shall ever find protection and blessing from God." Mudge.

The duty of praise is the end of our being, and the very rule and law of our nature. It is the most excellent part of our religious worship, enduring to eternity after the rest shall be done away. It recommends itself to us by several peculiar properties and advantages; as it carries more pleasure in it than all other kinds of devotion; as it enlarges and exalts the several powers of the mind; as it breeds in us an exquisite sense of God's honour, and a willingness to promote it in the world; as it teaches us to be humble and lowly ourselves, and yet preserves us from base and sordid flattery, from bestowing mean and undue praises upon others. Bp. Atterbury.

Psalm LI. No one can read this Psalm of David, but must see all the characters of true repentance in the person who wrote it, and the marks of the deepest sorrow and humiliation for the sins of which he had been guilty. How earnestly does he plead for mercy, and acknowledge his unworthiness! How ingenuous the confessions he makes of his offences! How heavy the load of guilt which oppressed him! The smart of it pierced through his very bones, and the torture he felt was as if they had been broken and crushed to pieces. Dr. Chandler. This Psalm is inserted in the Commination service, and so is used with the other penitential Psalms in the service on Ash Wednesday.

Ver. 2. Wash me throughly &c.] The soul, that is sensible of her pollution, fears she can never be sufficiently purified from it; and therefore prays yet again and again, continually, for more abundant grace, to make and to keep her holy. Bp. Horne.

5. — I was shapen in iniquity; &c.] I derive from my parents an original corruption, and a natural proneness to evil. Travell. This corruption is here only alleged as the cause of transgressions, not as their excuse; seeing that, the greater our danger of falling, the greater should be our care to stand. Bp. Horne.

6. Behold, thou desirest truth &c.] The force of "behold" is, "It is too plain; I feel it but too sensibly: the punishment I suffer is evidence sufficient, that Thou art not contented with a superficial appearance of goodness: Thou lovest truth and sincerity in the bottom of the heart." God was now teaching him this, by the correction He made him suffer. The punishment in-

18 Do good in thy good pleasure unto Zion: build thou the walls of Jerusalem.

19 Then shalt thou be pleased with the sacrifices of righteousness, with burnt offering and whole burnt offering: then shall they offer bullocks upon thine altar.

PSALM LII.

1 David, condemning the spitefulness of Doeg, prophesieth his destruction. 6 The righteous shall rejoice at it. 8 David, upon his confidence in God's mercy, giveth thanks.

¶ To the chief Musician, Maschil, A Psalm of David, [a] when Doeg the Edomite came and told Saul, and said unto him, David is come to the house of Ahimelech.

WHY boastest thou thyself in mischief, O mighty man? the goodness of God endureth continually.

2 Thy tongue deviseth mischiefs; like a sharp rasor, working deceitfully.

3 Thou lovest evil more than good; and lying rather than to speak righteousness. Selah.

4 Thou lovest all devouring words, ‖ O thou deceitful tongue.

5 God shall likewise † destroy thee for ever, he shall take thee away, and pluck thee out of thy dwelling place, and root thee out of the land of the living. Selah.

6 The righteous also shall see, and fear, and shall laugh at him:

'flicted tended to give him a right understanding of things, and to work it deep into him. Mudge.

7. Purge me with hyssop, &c.] As the priest is wont to denote unclean persons to be cleansed, by sprinkling them with water mixed with the ashes of an heifer, which sprinkling was performed with a bunch of hyssop; so be Thou pleased to absolve me from the guilt of the great sins I have been guilty of, and restore me to Thy former favour. Dr. Wells.

8. Make me to hear &c.] Renew the joy of my heart, in the comfortable assurance of Thy forgiveness; that so my soul, which is now dejected and justly grieved for my sin, may find cause of rejoicing in Thee. Bp. Hall.

11. Cast me not away &c.] The soul that is truly penitent dreads nothing but the thought of being rejected from the "presence," and deserted by the "Spirit" of God. This is the most deplorable effect of sin; but it is one that in general, perhaps, is the least considered and regarded of all others. Bp. Horne.

12. — and uphold me with thy free spirit.] He prays to be preserved and continued in a state of salvation by the Spirit of God, which might enable him to act as became a prophet and a king, free from base desires and enslaving lusts. Bp. Horne.

14 Deliver me from bloodguiltiness,] Deliver me from the punishment due to this crying sin, the murder of a trusty servant, and of several of my servants; 2 Sam. xi. 17. Bp. Patrick.

16. — thou desirest not sacrifice;] This is not to be understood absolutely and universally, as appears from ver. 19, but comparatively. See the note on Psalm xl. 6. Poole.

18. — build thou the walls of Jerusalem.] Be favourable to Jerusalem, and let its walls, which I have begun to build, 2 Sam. v. 9, be perfectly finished; 1 Kings iii. 1. Bp. Patrick.

19. — sacrifices of righteousness,] That is, such sacrifices as are offered with true piety of heart. Rosenmüller.

From the third verse of this Psalm, we should learn to correct a propensity in the human mind, which is very general and very natural, yet, at the same time, unfavourable in a high degree to the Christian character; namely, that when we look back upon our lives, our recollection dwells too much upon our virtues; our sins are not, as they ought to be, before us; we think too much of our good qualities, or good actions, too little of our crimes, our corruptions, our fallings off and declensions from God's laws, our defects and weaknesses. But this is not the true Christian disposition, and it is dangerous to our salvation. We ought rather to let our "sins be ever before us," our omissions, deficiencies, failures, our irregularities of heart and affection, our vices of temper and disposition. These are the things which should occupy our attention, this should be the bent and direction of our thoughts, for they are the thoughts which will bring us to God evangelically. Archdeacon Paley.

Psalm LII. The occasion of this Psalm is to be found in 1 Sam. xxii. where we read, that Doeg, in order to ingratiate himself with Saul, discovered to him those who were confederate with David, particularly Ahimelech: and afterwards, at the desire of Saul, murdered the priests of the Lord. Travell.

Ver. 1. Why boastest thou &c.] The Psalmist thought it strange that any man should value himself for being able to do mischief, when God esteemed it His glory to do good. In vain did Doeg the Edomite boast himself in the mischief he had done, by massacring the innocent priests and their families; since "the goodness of God," which is unchangeable, had decreed the preservation of David. Bp. Horne.

4. — devouring words,] That is, such as are mischievous, and by which the innocent may be destroyed. Rosenmüller.

6. The righteous also shall see, &c.] All good men shall re-

9 I will praise thee for ever, because thou hast done it: and I will wait on thy name; for it is good before thy saints.

PSALM LIII.

1 David describeth the corruption of a natural man. 4 He convinceth the wicked by the light of their own conscience. 6 He gloryeth in the salvation of God.

[a] Psal. 14. 1, &c. & 10. 4.

THE [a] fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. Corrupt are they, and have done abominable iniquity: [b] there is none that doeth good.

[b] Rom. 3. 10.

2 God looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand, that did seek God.

3 Every one of them is gone back: they are altogether become filthy; there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

4 Have the workers of iniquity no knowledge? who eat up my people as they eat bread: they have not called upon God.

5 There † were they in great fear, where no fear was: for God hath scattered the bones of him that encampeth against thee: thou hast put them to shame, because God hath despised them.

6 † Oh that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! When God bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad.

PSALM LIV.

1 David, complaining of the Ziphims, prayeth for salvation. 4 Upon his confidence in God's help he promiseth sacrifice.

¶ To the chief Musician on Neginoth, Maschil, A Psalm of David, [a] when the Ziphims came and said to Saul, Doth not David hide himself with us?

SAVE me, O God, by thy name, and judge me by thy strength.

2 Hear my prayer, O God; give ear to the words of my mouth.

3 For strangers are risen up against me, and oppressors seek after my soul: they have not set God before them. Selah.

4 Behold, God is mine helper: the LORD is with them that uphold my soul.

5 He shall reward evil unto † mine enemies: cut them off in thy truth.

† Heb. those that observe me.

6 I will freely sacrifice unto thee: I will praise thy name, O LORD; for it is good.

mark the righteous judgment of God, and shall be confirmed in their fear of offending Him; they shall deride thy folly and disappointed ambition, and shall say; &c. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

8. But I am like &c.] As for me, notwithstanding his crafty designs against me, I am, in comparison of him, in a flourishing condition; my unchangeable trust in the goodness of God shall make me grow and increase, like a fruitful olive tree in the courts of God's house. Travell.

9. — for it is good before thy saints.] That is, it is a goodly thing, it carries a good appearance, it looks well before the friends of God, to see me praising Him, and putting my trust in Him. Mudge.

It very much concerns us to follow the wise man's counsel, and "to weigh our words in a balance, and make a door and bar for our mouth;" Eccles. xxviii. 25. If licentious and unbridled thoughts will, in spite of all our watches and guard, steal into our hearts, let us be sure that no unruly words break out of our mouth; and if, in the variety of our language and expressions, some inconsiderate, rash, and imprudent words escape from us, at least let them not be malicious and detracting words, to wound the credit and good name of our neighbours: let us inform and instruct the weak without insolence, and reprove and advise the wilful without bitterness; let us do all good offices towards advancing the reputation of those who desire to advance God's glory and the publick peace, and all charitable offices towards those who are in misery and distress, by what means soever they fell into it; let us endeavour to strengthen all men with our mouth, and that our speech may drop upon them: and then God will bless and protect, and prosper us, against all the violence and all the calumnies which aim at our destruction. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm LIII. This Psalm of David was composed by him at first, as it stands Psalm XIV. and on the rebellion of Absalom. But probably upon the new revolt made presently after the death of Absalom, by the Israelites that followed Sheba, David made two or three variations in Psalm XIV. and so used it upon this new occasion. Dr. Wells.

— Mahalath,] This word probably denotes some kind of musical instrument, but of what kind it is difficult now to determine. Rosenmuller, Edwards.

5. — for God hath scattered the bones] God hath destroyed him who thought to oppress thee, O my soul, and his bones lie scattered on the ground. See 2 Sam. xx. 6—22. Bp. Patrick.

Psalm LIV. This Psalm was composed by David at a time of his great distress, and seasonable deliverance afforded him by God, when, hiding himself in the wilderness of Ziph, the Ziphites made discovery to Saul, and he went with forces to seek him, but gave over the pursuit, by reason of the Philistines invading his land. See 1 Sam. xxiii. 14. to the end. Dr. Hammond. The application to Christ and to Christians is plain and easy; for which reason our Church hath appointed this Psalm to be read on Good Friday. Bp. Horne.

— Neginah,] See the note upon the title to the fourth Psalm. Ver. 1. — judge me] Do me justice. Green.

3. For strangers are risen up against me,] The Ziphites, though David's countrymen, acted the part of "strangers," or "aliens," in seeking to deliver him up to his unjust and cruel enemy. Bp. Horne.

— — they have not set God before them.] They have cast off all regard to His presence and authority, and all fear of His judgments. Poole.

6. I will freely sacrifice unto thee:] I will sacrifice to Thee a voluntary oblation. Dr. Hammond.

The prayers of great men in distress, and their thanksgivings

7 For he hath delivered me out of all trouble: and mine eye hath seen his desire upon mine enemies.

PSALM LV.

David in his prayer complaineth of his fearful case. 9 He prayeth against his tormentors, of whose wickedness and treachery he complaineth. 16 He comforteth himself in God's preservation of him, and confusion of his enemies.

To the chief Musician on Neginoth, Maschil, A Psalm of David.

GIVE ear to my prayer, O God; and hide not thyself from my supplication.

2 Attend unto me, and hear me: I mourn in my complaint, and make a noise;

3 Because of the voice of the enemy, because of the oppression of the wicked: for they cast iniquity upon me, and in wrath they hate me.

4 My heart is sore pained within me: and the terrors of death are fallen upon me.

5 Fearfulness and trembling are come upon me, and horror hath † overwhelmed me.

6 And I said, Oh that I had wings like a dove! for then would I fly away, and be at rest.

7 Lo, then would I wander far off, and remain in the wilderness. Selah.

8 I would hasten my escape from the windy storm and tempest.

9 Destroy, O Lord, and divide their tongues: for I have seen violence and strife in the city.

10 Day and night they go about it upon the walls thereof: mischief also and sorrow are in the midst of it.

11 Wickedness is in the midst thereof: deceit and guile depart not from her streets.

12 For it was not an enemy that reproached me; then I could have borne it: neither was it he that hated me that did magnify himself against me; then I would have hid myself from him:

13 But it was thou, † a man mine equal, my guide, and mine acquaintance.

14 † We took sweet counsel together, and walked unto the house of God in company.

15 Let death seize upon them, and let them go down quick into ‖ hell: for wickedness is in their dwellings, and among them.

16 As for me, I will call upon God; and the Lord shall save me.

17 Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud: and he shall hear my voice.

18 He hath delivered my soul in peace from the battle that was against me: for there were many with me.

19 God shall hear, and afflict them, even ‖ he that abideth of old. Selah. ‖ Because they have no changes, therefore they fear not God.

† Heb. a man according to my mind.

‖ Or, with whom also there be no changes, yet they fear not God.

after great deliverances, have always been matter of uncommon delight to curiosity, and men of serious and religious spirits. Nor does the glory of any great man ever shine out to their eyes in half the lustre, as when they behold him upon his knees, lifting up his eyes, or stretching out his hands to heaven, or, what is yet greater, prostrating himself before it, in humiliation and acknowledgment. Then is the hero seen in all his dignity! Dr. Delaney. The royal Prophet here teaches us by his example that prayer should always be our refuge in time of danger; that, even when men have conspired our ruin, if we call upon God with a pure heart, He will protect us; and that, when He has granted our prayers, we ought to bless Him with all our soul. Ostervald.

Psalm LV. It is generally imagined that David composed this Psalm, when he was forced to flee suddenly from Jerusalem, on the breaking out of Absalom's rebellion, and the treachery of his principal counsellor Ahithophel, of whom he complains bitterly in the fourteenth verse. Travell.

Ver. 2, 3. Attend unto me, &c.] Attend unto me, and answer me, while in my complaint I weep and cry aloud, because of the insults of the enemy, and the oppression of the wicked: for they lay iniquity to my charge, and bear me a violent hatred. Green.

4. — the terrors of death are fallen upon me.] That is, I am brought to the very brink of destruction. Bp. Wilson.

8. I would hasten my escape &c.] I would hasten away to shelter myself from this fierce persecution, which like a sudden storm threatens utterly to destroy me. Bp. Patrick.

9. Destroy, O Lord, &c.] In these words, David beseeches God to divide, confound, and bring to nought, the counsels of an iniquitous faction; for so in the history we find him saying, "O Lord, I pray Thee, turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness;" 2 Sam. xv. 31. Bp. Horne.

10. Day and night they go &c.] The "violence and strife," mentioned at the conclusion of the preceding verse, are here described as going their rounds, like an armed watch upon the walls, to guard rebellion, which had taken up its residence in the heart of the city, from the attacks of loyalty, right, and justice, driven with the king beyond Jordan. Bp. Horne.

12—14. For it was not &c.] The many aggravating circumstances of Ahithophel's treason against David, and that of Judas against Christ, are here strongly marked. The treachery of pretended friends is generally to the Church, as it was to her Lord, the beginning of sorrows. Ingratitude, malice, and falsehood, are ingredients that must always meet in the composition of a traitor. Bp. Horne.

15. Let death seize &c.] Let a sudden and unexpected death overwhelm them. Rosenmüller. Or, this passage may be considered as a prediction (see the note on Psalm v. 10.) of the tragical fate of Ahithophel, and of those who followed Absalom. The sudden destruction of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, who, for stirring up a rebellion against Moses and Aaron, "went down alive into the pit," seems here alluded to. Bp. Horne.

18. — many with me.] Namely, God and His holy angels. Dr. Wells.

19. — Because they have no changes, &c.] They experience no change of fortune, and therefore will not fear God. Green. Or, 20 He hath put forth his hands against such as be at peace with him: † he hath broken his covenant.

21 The words of his mouth were smoother than butter, but war was in his heart: his words were softer than oil, yet were they drawn swords.

22 ‖ Cast thy ‖ burden upon the LORD, and he shall sustain thee: he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved.

* Psal. 37. 5. Mat. 6. 25. Luke 12. 22. 1 Pet. 5. 7.

23 But thou, O God, shalt bring them down into the pit of destruction: † bloody and deceitful men † shall not live out half their days; but I will trust in thee.

PSALM LVI.

1 David, praying to God in confidence of his word, complaineth of his enemies. 9 He professeth his confidence in God's word, and promiseth to praise him.

¶ To the chief Musician upon Jonath-elem-rechokim, ‖ Michtam of David, when the † Philistines took him in Gath.

‖ Or, a golden Psalm of David. † 1 Sam. 21. 11.

BE merciful unto me, O God: for man would swallow me up; he fighting daily oppresseth me.

† Heb. Mine observers.

2 † Mine enemies would daily swallow me up: for they be many that fight against me, O thou most high.

3 What time I am afraid, I will trust in thee.

4 In God I will praise his word, in God I have put my trust; I will not fear what flesh can do unto me.

5 Every day they wrest my words: all their thoughts are against me for evil.

6 They gather themselves together, they hide themselves, they mark my steps, when they wait for my soul.

7 Shall they escape by iniquity? in thine anger cast down the people, O God.

8 Thou tellest my wanderings: put thou my tears into thy bottle: are they not in thy book?

9 When I cry unto thee, then shall mine enemies turn back: this I know; for God is for me.

10 In God will I praise his word: in the LORD will I praise his word.

11 In God have I put my trust: I will not be afraid what man can do unto me.

12 Thy vows are upon me, O God: I will render praises unto thee.

13 For thou hast delivered my soul from death: wilt not thou deliver my feet from falling, that I may walk before God in the light of the living?

PSALM LVII.

1 David in prayer fleeing unto God complaineth of his dangerous case. 7 He encourageth himself to praise God.

Because there is no reformation in them, neither do they fear God. Stuet, Archdeacon Randolph.

20. He hath put forth &c.] This perfidious traitor hath basely lifted up his hands to injure those who were at peace and friendship with him: he hath broken his promise and oath of fidelity. Bp. Patrick, Teavell.

21. — drawn swords.] That is, pernicious in their design and consequences. Poole.

22. Cast thy burden &c.] The conclusion of the whole matter is, that amidst all dangers and adversities, whensoever they oppress us, we are to put our full trust and confidence only in His mercy, who delivered David, and the Son of David, out of all their troubles. Bp. Horne.

The distresses and dangers to which we are subject are hardly remediable, when they who by intimate conversation know our nature, and to whom we have communicated our purposes, counsels, and designs, prove treacherous and false to us, and concur with the envy and malice of our enemies; and as the danger is then almost inevitable, so the grief and agony that attends it is sharper and more troublesome than the danger; it bereaves us of that composure, and temper, and serenity of mind, which usually relieves us in all other accidents. But our comfort is, though we are least able to help ourselves in such exigencies, and against such distresses, we have an Helper, if we call faithfully upon Him who sees the pangs we suffer, the agony and fear we endure, and hears the just voice of our lamentations. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm LVI. — Jonath-elem-rechokim,] That is, the silent dove afar off. David thus styles himself on account of his being at that time in a far country. Dr. Wells. Or, these words may be the name of some well known song, to the musick of which this is directed to be sung. Mudge.

Ver. 1. — he fighting &c.] He is daily fighting against me, that he may crush me. Green.

4. In God I will praise his word,] By the assistance of God I shall be enabled to praise Him for the performance of His promises. Bp. Patrick.

8. Thou tellest my wanderings:] David's whole life, from his victory over Goliath till the death of Saul, was continually spent in wandering from place to place. Dr. Chandler.

— put thou my tears into thy bottle:] This expression seems to intimate, that the custom of putting tears into the lacrymal urns, so well known among the Romans, was more anciently in use among the Hebrews. These urns were of different materials; some of glass, some of earth; they were also of various forms or shapes. They were placed on the sepulchres of the deceased, as a memorial of the distress and affection of their surviving relations and friends. The meaning therefore of the expression, "put Thou my tears into Thy bottle," will be, "let my distress, and the tears I have shed in consequence of it, be ever before Thee; excite Thy kind remembrance of me, and plead with Thee to grant me the relief I stand in need of." Dr. Chandler, Calmet.

12. Thy vows are upon me, O God:] That is, I am bound by vows to Thee.

13. — will not thou deliver my feet from falling,] This should be rendered as it is in the Liturgy, "and my feet from falling."

By the example of David we are here taught, that, to whatever extremity the children of God are brought, and when even force and artifice are employed against them, they are not moved; that, so firm is their trust in God, they do not fear what man can do unto them; and that even before their deliverance they rejoice in the Lord, and pay to Him their vows and thanksgivings. Ostervald.

PSALM LVIII.

1 David reproveth wicked judges, 3 describeth the nature of the wicked, 6 devoteth them to God's judgments, 10 whereat the righteous shall rejoice.

¶ To the chief Musician ‖ Al-taschith, Michtam of David. ‖ Or, Destroy not, A golden Psalm of David.

7 Let them melt away as waters which run continually: when he bendeth his bow to shoot his arrows, let them be as cut in pieces.

8 As a snail which melteth, let every one of them pass away: like the untimely birth of a woman, that they may not see the sun.

9 Before your pots can feel the thorns, — Al-taschith.] "Destroy not," seems to be the beginning of a song, to the musick of which this Psalm is directed to be sung. Mudge.

Ver. 2. — God shall send forth &c.] God, by His deliverance of me, shall manifest His lovingkindness, and the truth of His promises. Travell.

4. My soul is among lions: &c.] I am beset by cruel and bloody enemies, whose hearts are inflamed with deadly malice against me; even men given over to wickedness, whose mouths are full of mischievous slanders and reproaches, wherewith they endeavour to wound me to the death. Bp. Hall.

8. Awake up, my glory; &c.] Awake, O my tongue, awake; I will also awake early the psaltery and harp. Green.

10. — thy mercy is great &c.] Thy mercy and truth extend over the whole universe. Travell.

Though we may not be exposed to dangers like those of David formerly, and therefore cannot apply to ourselves all we read in this Psalm, we may nevertheless from hence conclude, in general, that in our necessities we should draw nigh to God, being fully persuaded that He will not fail to send us help from heaven, and deliver us. Ostervald.

Psalm LVIII. A Psalm of David, wherein he reproves the judges, the princes of Saul's court, for passing an unrighteous sentence upon him, probably, as guilty of seeking Saul's life; and begs of God to defeat their unjust attempts to destroy him, and openly to shew Himself the Protector of the innocent. Green.

Ver. 1. Do ye indeed speak &c.] O ye assembly of princes and rulers, have you pronounced a righteous sentence against me, and judged me uprightly according to your consciences? Bp. Patrick, Travell.

3. The wicked are estranged &c.] Such is their wickedness, that they were depraved from the very womb; going astray as soon as they could go; and telling lies as soon as they could speak. Travell.

4, 5. — like the deaf adder &c.] Allusion is here made to that sort of serpents, which, according to some naturalists, were able to make themselves deaf, in order to resist the effect of charms employed for the purpose of lulling them asleep and taking them. The meaning is, these incorrigible persons resolve never to hearken to any thing which may induce them to quit their evil ways. Dr. Hammond. The notion of charming serpents with certain sounds, or by uttering particular words, was formerly extremely general, and still prevails over many parts of Barbary. Dr. Shaw.

7. Let them melt &c.] Let them fall away one from the other till they come to nothing, as waters, which not being contained within any vessel or bank, run continually, and spread themselves further and further, till they are all lost or sucked up into the earth. Dr. Wells.

8. As a snail which &c.] As a snail, which melts or spends itself the further it goes, so let every one of them that are my enemies pass away, or miscarry in their designs. Dr. Wells.

9. Before your pots &c.] Perhaps these words should rather be translated, "Before your pots can feel the thorns, the tempest

7 Behold, they belch out with their mouth: swords are in their lips: for ᵇ who, say they, doth hear?

ᵇ Psal. 10. 11. & 73. 11. & 94. 7.

8 But thou, O LORD, shalt laugh at them; thou shalt have all the heathen in derision.

12 For the sin of their mouth and the words of their lips let them even be taken in their pride: and for cursing and lying which they speak.

13 Consume them in wrath, consume them, that they may not be: and let them know that God ruleth in Jacob unto the ends of the earth. Selah.

14 And at evening let them return; and let them make a noise like a dog, and go round about the city.

15 Let them wander up and down † for meat, ‖ and grudge if they be not satisfied.

† Heb. to eat. ‖ Or, if they be not satisfied, then they will stay all night.

16 But I will sing of thy power; yea, I will sing aloud of thy mercy in the morning: for thou hast been my defence and refuge in the day of my trouble.

17 Unto thee, O my strength, will I sing: for God is my defence, and the God of my mercy.

shall bear them away." Briars and thorns, when set on fire, are frequently applied in Scripture to represent the rage of the wicked; violent, yet impotent, and of no long continuance. They are applied also to the wicked themselves, as useless and unprofitable, proper objects of God's wrath, to be burned up or driven away by the wind. Both these ideas seem to be joined in the above verse. Bp. Lowth.

10. — the vengeance:] The just judgment of God upon wicked men. Bp. Wilson.

— he shall wash &c.] This is an allusion to a great conqueror, who dips his feet in the blood of his enemies as he passes over their carcases. Bp. Patrick.

In general, we see here that all those who harden themselves in their evil ways, without hearkening to the voice of God, are threatened with His vengeance. We learn also from this Psalm, that though the wicked prosper, and good men are afflicted for a while, yet they will always have reason to acknowledge, "that there is a reward for the righteous, and that there is a God who judgeth the earth." Osterwald.

Psalm LIX. ver. 5. — awake to visit &c.] ª Awake to punish all those wretches, who, though they call themselves Thy people, yet are as wicked as even the heathen: be not merciful in sparing longer any such notoriously wicked transgressors. Dr. Wells.

6. They return at evening: &c.] The messengers of Saul, coming after David in the evening, besetting his house, and blocking up the approaches to it, are here compared to a set of hungry dogs in quest of their prey. Bp. Horne. See note on ver. 14.

7. Behold, they belch out &c.] Behold, their hearts are full of malice, which bursts out at their mouths in open threats to kill me; for, Who, say they, shall call us to account for it? Bp. Patrick.

9. Because of his strength &c.] It is probable that the beginning of this verse should be the same with that of verse 17. Bp. Lowth.

10. — shall prevent me:] That is, shall make way for my timely escape. Dr. Wells.

11. Slay them not, &c.] Do not utterly destroy them, lest my countrymen lose the remembrance of it: but let them remain a just monument of Thine anger. Travell.

14. — like a dog, &c.] Dogs are found in great numbers in the cities of the East, and crowd the streets. They do not appear to belong to any particular persons, as our dogs do, nor to be fed distinctly by such as might claim some interest in them, but get their food as they can. Harmer.

15. — and grudge if they be not satisfied.] And murmur because they are not satisfied. Dr. Chandler. See the margin.

Nothing gives us such support, and administers such confidence and courage to expect a deliverance from God Almighty out of any persecution or danger that invades us, as the consciousness of innocence. Not that we may conclude, that guiltless men cannot be oppressed, even to the loss of their lives, as well as their fortunes; or, that evil men cannot prevail against those who are less evil than they: we may not only be very innocent in those particulars of which we are condemned and brought into misery, but therefore condemned, because we are known to be innocent; and yet we may be guilty enough in other particulars, to deserve a greater punishment and misery than we undergo: and since every sin is in opposition to God's will and directions, it is His usual method to punish sinners by others who are most opposite to the sins they practised. Our deliverance therefore may be for a time deferred, till the fire of adversity hath well purged the dross and corruption which our prosperity had contracted, and we shall then find, that our constancy and patience in suffering hath made God propitious to us, and provided a crown of glory for our reward. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm LX. — Shushan-eduth,] The meaning of this word is quite uncertain.

— to teach;] Either, that David might teach posterity what things he had done; or, implying that this Psalm was given to the chief musician, that he might teach the inferiour ones. Rosenmuller.

— Aram] The Syrians; so called, because they were the descendants of Aram the son of Shem, Gen. x. 22. Poole.

— naharaim] Those Syrians that lived between the two rivers Tigris and Euphrates. Bp. Patrick.

— Aram-zobah,] Those Syrians that lived adjoining to the former, in that part of Syria called Zobah, 2 Sam. viii. 5. Bp. Patrick.

— when Joab returned, &c.] See 1 Kings xi. 15, 16.

Ver. 2. Thou hast made the earth to tremble; &c.] These expressions are figurative, and allude to the convulsions of the state, which had lately happened in the war between the house of Saul and David. Street.

3. Thou hast shewed &c.] Thou hast inflicted grievous punishments upon us. Bp. Patrick.

—— thou hast made us to drink &c.] Thou hast filled us with no less horrour and trembling, than men who are intoxicated with strong and stupifying drink. Poole.

4. Thou hast given a banner &c.] But now, Thou hast granted the desires of Thy faithful servants according to Thy promise; Thou hast united them under me their king, to whom they should all repair as soldiers do to their standard. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

6. — in his holiness;] In His sanctuary. Mudge.

—— I will divide Shechem, &c.] The valley of Succoth lay on the east side of Jordan in the tribe of Gad; and so probably did the Shechem here mentioned. At this time they both seem to have been in the hand of the enemy; and David declares here, that, as soon as he had taken them, he would divide them among his own people. Green.

7. Gilead is mine, &c.] Gilead is on my side, and Manasseh is on my side; Ephraim is the helmet of my head; Judah is my sceptre. In this verse the tribes are mentioned, which would accompany him in this expedition. Gilead, as it is here distinguished from Manasseh, must mean the tribe of Gad, which was a very warlike tribe. Ephraim seems to have been fixed upon for his helmet to protect his head, as being the most numerous and warlike tribe. Green.

—— lawgiver;] Or rather, sceptre; the word in the original signifies a ruler's staff, or some ensign of authority. Judah was another very warlike tribe. The patriarch Jacob conveys his prophecy of him under the image of a lion couching upon a sceptre, whom none dare rouse up, Gen. xlix. 9, 10. Here David speaks of this tribe as his sceptre, as the support of his crown and royal dignity. Green.

8. Moab is my washpot; &c.] Meaning, I will reduce these my enemies to the vilest servitude: I will treat Moab as my washpot; I will use the Edomites as slaves, holding forth my shoes that they may pluck them off. Bp. Patrick, Poole.

—— Philistia, triumph thou because of me.] That is, receive me as thy conqueror with demonstrations of joy.

9. Who will bring me &c.] Bozrah, the capital of Idumea, or Edom, was a fortified town, situated on a rock, deemed impregnable. See Obadiah ver. 3. Considering therefore the strength of the adversary, David, by this question, acknowledgeth his own impotency, and the need he had of superiour aid in order to achieve this important conquest. Bp. Horne.

As David in this Psalm celebrates the power and goodness of God, who had assisted His people, and given them the victory over their enemies; so should we learn, that the strength and assistance of man is under all circumstances but vanity, and that there is none but the Lord who can help and deliver us in our distress, and in whom we may safely and perfectly confide. Otervald.

3 For thou hast been a shelter for me, and a strong tower from the enemy.

4 I will abide in thy tabernacle for ever: I will ‖ trust in the covert of thy wings. Selah.

5 For thou, O God, hast heard my vows: thou hast given me the heritage of those that fear thy name.

6 † Thou wilt prolong the king's life: and his years † as many generations.

Psalm LXI. ver. 2. From the end of the earth] Meaning, probably, from the remotest part of Judea. Merrick.

—— the rock that is higher than I.] Or, the rock which is too high for me; that is, to a place of safety, which, as without Thee, I am not able to reach, so there my enemies may not be able to approach me. Edwards, Bp. Patrick.

4. — for ever:] As long as I live. Dr. Wells.

5. For thou, O God, &c.] The "vows" of David, made during his banishment, were heard, and he was restored to the possession of his kingdom, in that land which God had given to His people for an heritage. Bp. Horne.

6. — and his years as many generations.] He thus speaks, partly, because his kingdom was not like Saul's, a matter of one age, expiring with his life, but established to him and his descendants: and partly, because Christ, who was to spring from him, should actually in His own person possess the kingdom for ever. Poole.

7. — O prepare &c.] O let Thy goodness and faithfulness ever defend him. Bp. Patrick.

It is a great comfort in all our afflictions and calamities, that He, who is best able to succour and deliver us, is always within the reach of our cry; and though He sits above the cherubim, hears perfectly every groan and prayer we pour out to Him from the lowest dungeon of our prison. Let our enemies cast us as deep as they please into bondage, He will both see and hear us, if we pray to Him with that fervour and devotion with which we ought; and He will interpose some shelter and protection between us and the malice and power of our enemies, till He thinks fit to make our deliverance perfect and complete, Lord Clarendon.

Psalm LXII. — Jeduthun,] See the note on the title of the thirty-ninth Psalm.

Ver. 3. How long will ye imagine &c.] The prophet expostulates in this verse with his enemies, for continually plotting against him, and foretels that their destruction will happen suddenly and irresistibly, like the downfal of a wall that is in a tottering state, or a stone fence, the parts of which are not cemented together. Bp. Horne.

9. Surely men of low degree &c.] A reason is here assigned why we should at all times "trust in God;" namely, because there is nothing else in which we can trust, which will not in the end deceive us. Weighed in the "balance" of heaven, the power of man to save is less than nothing. Bp. Horne.

10—12. Trust not in oppression, &c.] These three verses are directed to oppressors, not to be too eager after ill-gotten power or riches, nor to place their trust in them, since there are two things confessedly against them, the power and the goodness of God; by which He will be able and willing to do justice to all mankind, to protect His friends, and defeat their enemies. Mudge.

The comforts which David had found, he exhorteth others to seek, in faith and prayer; in such a faith, as fixeth itself on God, when the whole world is against it; and such prayer, as poureth forth all the desires of the soul into the bosom of the Almighty. How often, in repeating the Psalms, do we declare, that "God is our refuge;" yet how very seldom do we recur to Him, as such, in the hour of temptation! Bp. Horne.

PSALM LXIII.

1 David's thirst for God. 4 His manner of blessing God: 9 His confidence of his enemies' destruction, and his own safety.

¶ A Psalm of David, when he was in the wilderness of Judah.

O GOD, thou art my God; early will I seek thee: my soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee in a dry and † thirsty land, † where no water is;

† Heb. weary. † Heb. without water.

2 To see thy power and thy glory, so as I have seen thee in the sanctuary.

3 Because thy lovingkindness is better than life, my lips shall praise thee.

4 Thus will I bless thee while I live: I will lift up my hands in thy name.

5 My soul shall be satisfied as with † marrow and fatness; and my mouth shall praise thee with joyful lips:

6 When I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches.

7 Because thou hast been my help, therefore in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice.

8 My soul followeth hard after thee: thy right hand upholdeth me.

9 But those that seek my soul, to destroy it, shall go into the lower parts of the earth.

† Heb. They shall make him run out like water by the hands of the sword.

10 † They shall fall by the sword: they shall be a portion for foxes.

11 But the king shall rejoice in God; every one that sweareth by him shall glory: but the mouth of them that speak lies shall be stopped.

Psalm LXIII. In this Psalm the royal prophet, an exile in the wilderness, expresses most elegantly the sentiments of tenderness and love. Bp. Loweth.

— when he was in the wilderness of Judah.] He went through that wilderness when he fled from Absalom. Dr. Wells.

Ver. 1. — in a dry and thirsty land,] Probably this should be rendered, as in the Syriack version, "as a dry and thirsty land." Bp. Secker. Bp. Hare.

2. To see thy power &c.] My chief desire is, that I may be restored again to worship Thee before the ark of Thy presence, where Thy glorious Majesty resides among us. Travell.

4. — I will lift up &c.] That is, in prayer and thanksgiving to Thy Divine Majesty. Dr. Wells.

5. My soul shall be satisfied &c.] The greatest dainties cannot give so much satisfaction to the hungry, as I shall enjoy from the employment of singing Thy praises. Bp. Patrick. Travell.

8. — follow th hard after thee:] Cleaveth unto Thee. Green.

9. — the lower parts of the earth.] That is, the grave. Bp. Hall.

10. — a portion for foxes.] See note at Judg. xv. 4.

11. — every one that sweareth by him] That is, every one who invokes His name, worships Him, and makes Him the object of religious reverence and fear; all which is implied in swearing, as an oath is an immediate appeal and solemn act of worship to God. Rosenmiller, Poole, Merrick.

So soon as religion gains that hold and that possession of the heart, which it must do to become the means of our salvation, it enters our thoughts very frequently. We "remember God upon our bed, and meditate on Him in the night watches." Would we therefore know whether we have made, or are making, any advances in Christianity or not? These are the marks which will tell us. Do we think more frequently about religion than we used to do? Do we cherish and entertain these thoughts for longer continuance than we did? Do they interest us more than formerly? Do they sink deeper? If we perceive this, then, we perceive a change, upon which we may ground our hopes and expectations; if we perceive it not, we have cause for very afflicting apprehensions, that the power of religion hath not yet visited us, cause for deep and fervent intercession with God for the much wanted succour of His Holy Spirit. Archdeacon Paley.

Psalm LXIV. This Psalm was most probably composed by David when he was persecuted by Saul and his associates; from whom he begs of God to protect him; and afterwards foretels the sudden destruction should sooner or later fall upon them. Edwards. This is one of the Psalms appointed for the service of Thanksgiving on the fifth of November.

Ver. 1. — at the perfect:] David thus calls himself, because he was perfectly innocent of what they laid to his charge. Bp. Patrick.

—— suddenly] That is, when he is not aware. Green.

6. They search out &c.] They are ingenious in devising wickedness, and contriving means of executing their bad purposes.

8. So they shall make &c.] They shall cause the mischief of the tongues to fall upon themselves. Green.

9. — shall fear, and shall declare the work of God:] Shall dread the righteous judgments of God, acknowledging it to be His peculiar work of vengeance that befalls them. Dr. Hammond.

PSALM LXIV.

1 David prayeth for deliverance, complaining of his enemies. 7 He promiseth himself to see such an evident destruction of his enemies, as the righteous shall rejoice at it.

¶ To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

HEAR my voice, O God, in my prayer: preserve my life from fear of the enemy.

2 Hide me from the secret counsel of the wicked; from the insurrection of the workers of iniquity:

3 ª Who whet their tongue like a sword, and bend their bows to shoot their arrows, even bitter words:

ª Psal. 11. 2.

4 That they may shoot in secret at the perfect: suddenly do they shoot at him, and fear not.

5 They encourage themselves in an evil ‖ matter: they commune † of laying snares privily; they say, Who shall see them?

‖ Or. speech. † Heb. to hide snares.

6 They search out iniquities; ‖ they accomplish † a diligent search: both the inward thought of every one of them, and the heart, is deep.

‖ Or. we are consumed by that which they have throughly searched. † Heb. a search searched.

7 But God shall shoot at them with an arrow; suddenly † shall they be wounded.

8 So they shall make their own tongue to fall upon themselves: all that see them shall flee away.

9 And all men shall fear, and shall declare the work of God; for they shall wisely consider of his doing.

10 The righteous shall be glad in the LORD, and shall trust in him; and all the upright in heart shall glory.

5 By terrible things in righteousness wilt thou answer us, O God of our salvation; who art the confidence of all the ends of the earth, and of them that are afar off upon the sea:

6 Which by his strength setteth fast the mountains; being girded with power:

7 Which stilleth the noise of the seas, the noise of their waves, and the tumult of the people.

8 They also that dwell in the uttermost parts are afraid at thy tokens: thou makest the outgoings of the morning and evening ‖ to rejoice.

10 Thou waterest the ridges thereof abundantly: ‖ thou settlest the furrows thereof: † thou makest it soft with showers: thou blessest the springing thereof.

‖ Or, thou causest rain to descend into the furrows thereof. † Heb. thou dissolvest it.

11 Thou crownest † the year with thy goodness; and thy paths drop fatness.

† Heb. the year of thy goodness.

12 They drop upon the pastures of the wilderness: and the little hills † rejoice on every side.

† Heb. are girded with joy.

13 The pastures are clothed with flocks; the valleys also are covered over with corn; they shout for joy, they also sing.

PSALM LXVI.

1 David exhorteth to praise God, 5 to observe his great works, 8 to bless him for his gracious benefits. 12 He voweth for himself religious service to God. 16 He declareth God's special goodness to himself.

¶ To the chief Musician, A Song or Psalm.

† Heb. all the earth.

MAKE a joyful noise unto God, † all ye lands:

2 Sing forth the honour of his name: make his praise glorious.

Diligently to mark, and carefully to treasure up in our minds the special providences of the Almighty, is the way to preserve and nourish our faith and hope in Him: it furnishes the grounds of our thankfulness and praise; it stirs up our finest feelings and very best affections towards Him, holy joy, humble reverence, and hearty love; it supports us under all our sufferings, and affords us comfort in all our sorrows. Bp. Horne.

Psalm LXV. This Psalm is a thankful commemoration of God's mercies and deliverances; written probably on the occasion of His restoring plenty, after the three years' famine, 2 Sam. xxi. Dr. Hammond. How graceful and animated is that rich and flourishing picture of nature which is exhibited in this Psalm: when the prophet, with a fertility of expression correspondent to the subject, praises the beneficence of the Deity in watering the earth and making it fruitful! Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. Praise waiteth &c.] It becomes us, O God, to praise Thee in Thy sanctuary, and to pay the vows which we made unto Thee in the time of our distress. Bp. Patrick.

4. Blessed is the man &c.] How happy is the man whom Thou hast chosen, and called to the privilege of being continually employed in Thy service! they, who enjoy this privilege, have abundant satisfaction in those blessings which are dispensed to them from Thy holy habitation. Travell.

5. By terrible things] "O God of our salvation, Thou in Thy righteousness answerest us by doing awful things: Thou art the confidence of the remotest parts of the earth and the sea." By "terrible" or "awful things" are meant the works of God's providence, mentioned in the following verses. Green.

8. They also that dwell] The meaning is, that the most distant and barbarous people behold the signs of God's power and goodness with wonder and amazement. Travell.

—— the outgoings &c.] The successive courses of the morning and evening; or of the sun and moon, which go forth at those times, thereby making the morning and evening; both of which are said to rejoice poetically, because they give men occasion of rejoicing. Poole.

9. — the river of God,] The clouds, those reservoirs of water which are opened and shut at God's pleasure, are here called "the river of God;" by showers from which He refresheth the earth. Green.

10. — thou settlest the furrows thereof:] See the margin.

11. — and thy paths] God is here represented as going the circuit of the heavens, as making the clouds His chariot. See Job xxii. 14. and Psalm civ. 3. Dr. Kennicott.

The happy effects of God's visiting the earth with rain, are vallies covered with corn, verdant meads, and thriving flocks. All these ideas, in the prophetical Scriptures, are frequently transferred to the times of refreshment and consolation, of peace and fruitfulness, in the church; which breaks forth into joy, in the one case, as the world is always ready to do in the other. Manifold and marvellous, O Lord, are Thy works, whether of nature, or of grace; surely in wisdom and lovingkindness hast Thou made them all; the earth, in every sense, is full of Thy riches? Bp. Horne.

Psalm LXVI. This Psalm is a solemn invocation to all the world to celebrate the wonderful works of God, as well in the general course of His providence, as for His miracles in favour of the Israelites. Travell. It is introduced in our Forms of Prayer to be used at Sea, as a thanksgiving after a storm.

Ver. 2. — make his praise glorious.] That is, shew forth His praise with due honour and glory. Bp. Hare.

3 Say unto God, How terrible art thou in thy works! through the greatness of thy power shall thine enemies ‖ † submit themselves unto thee.

4 All the earth shall worship thee, and shall sing unto thee; they shall sing to thy name. Selah.

5 Come and see the works of God: he is terrible in his doing toward the children of men.

6 He turned the sea into dry land: they went through the flood on foot: there did we rejoice in him.

7 He ruleth by his power for ever; his eyes behold the nations: let not the rebellious exalt themselves. Selah.

Psalm LXVII. This Psalm seems to allude to, or rather to foretel, the incarnation of Christ, and the calling of the Gentile when all the nations of the earth should partake of the heavenly blessing, and become the servants of the Lord. Travell. It forms a part of our Evening Service, to be read occasionally after the second lesson; and is also introduced into the Marriage Service.

vants of one Master, and the children of one Father, be indulgent to one another's infirmities, and compassionate to one another's weakneses. This is the way to make "the earth yield her increase," such an increase as God takes delight in, an increase of Christian conversation, of brotherly affection, of knowledge, of humility, of justice and of charity, and of all those graces which will prevail with Him to shower down all temporal blessings in this world, and to afford an assurance of eternal in the world that is to come. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm LXVIII. The occasion of this Psalm was most probably the removing the ark to mount Zion by David; or rather it might be composed soon after that transaction, and with reference to it. In the mystical sense, (which is authorized by St. Paul, Eph. iv. 8.) it refers to the ascension of Christ into heaven, and His session at the right hand of the Father, with the consequent formation and preservation of His church, and the destruction both of His own enemies and those of the church. But almost every part of this noble poem is involved in an impenetrable darkness. It would otherwise have afforded a singular example of the true sublime; the scattered rays of which, breaking forth with difficulty through the thick clouds which surround it, we yet behold with a mixture of admiration and pleasure. Bp. Lowth. It is appointed to be used on Whit-Sunday.

6. God setteth the solitary &c.] God provides for those that are destitute, and settles them in comfortable habitations; He releases the miserable captives from slavery and oppression, but those who are obstinate and rebellious He punishes by want and scarcity. *Bp. magnificence of Jehovah's appearance on mount Zion as a mighty Conqueror of the enemies of His people, riding upon the cherubim, as in a triumphal chariot, with all the hosts of heaven, as it were, in His retinue. Bp. Horne.

18. Thou hast ascended &c.] Thou, O God, hast now taken possession of Thy holy mountain, and hast given us the victory over our enemies, whom by Thy aid we have carried away captive in great numbers, and have distributed their spoils among the people, yea, even among those who have transgressed Thy laws; and Thou, O Lord, shalt now have a fixed habitation in this sacred place. So shall Christ hereafter ascend up to heaven, and take possession of His glorious kingdom, having led captive His conquered enemies, sin and death; and there He shall receive those precious gifts and graces of the Spirit, which He shall bestow upon His followers, even upon such as had before violated His laws, and rebelled against Him: thus shall the Lord God dwell in their hearts, and make His abode with them, Eph. iv. 8. Travell.

20. — the issues from death.] This should be translated, agreeably to the version of the Seventy, "the passages to death," the ways by which death goes out upon men to destroy them. Dr. Hammond, Bp. Louth.

22. The Lord said, &c.] Jehovah had promised to repeat in Israel, by David, His glorious acts; to work as signal victories and deliverances for His people, as He had formerly done in the field of Bashan, and at the Red sea, when they saw their enemies dead at their feet. Bp. Horne.

24. They have seen thy goings,] Thy triumphal procession and solemn entry into the sanctuary. Abp. Secker, Green.

26. — even the Lord, &c.] The "fountain of Israel" is the same with the "stock, or family of Israel." See Isa. xlviii. 1. The sense of this clause therefore is, "Bless the Lord, ye who are sprung from the stock of Israel." Bp. Horne.

27. There is little Benjamin &c.] The literal rendering of this verse is, "There is little Benjamin their ruler, the princes of Judah their council, the princes of Zebulun, and the princes of Naphtali." In this enumeration of the tribes of Israel, that were present at the removal of the ark, four only are mentioned; Benjamin and Judah, who dwelt nearest to the city of David; Zebulun and Naphtali, who were farthest distant from it; to shew, as Dr. Chandler observes, the unanimity of the whole nation, and of all the tribes far and near, in attending this solemnity, to testify their willing acknowledgment of David for their king, and the city of David for their capital, and where all the great solemnities of religion should be performed, and their annual festivals continually celebrated. Benjamin, though the youngest tribe, is named first, and called the "ruler," because from that tribe sprang Saul, the first king of Israel. Upon David's accession to the crown, Judah became the royal tribe, and supported the throne by its counsels. Zebulun and Naphtali were tribes of eminent learning and knowledge. See Gen. xlix. 21. Judg. v. 14. Bp. Horne.

28. Thy God hath commanded thy strength.] This is an acknowledgment that all the power and strength of the kingdom of Israel was from God. Bp. Nicholson.

29. Because of thy temple &c.] David foretels, that on the establishment of the church and worship at Jerusalem, the kings of the Gentiles should come, and make their oblations at the temple of God; which happened in his days, and those of his son Solomon, as an earnest and figure of that plenary accession of the kings of the earth to the Church of Christ, which was to take place in the latter days, under the Gospel. See 2 Sam. viii. 9—11. 1 Kings v. 1. x. 1, 24. 2 Chron. ix. 23. Isa. lx. 3, 6. Matth. ii. 11. Rev. xxi. 24. Bp. Horne.

30. Rebuke the company of spearmen, &c.] This verse literally translated runs thus: "Rebuke the wild beast of the reeds, the congregation of the mighty among the calves of the nations, skipping, or exulting, with pieces of silver; scatter the people that delight in war." By the "wild beast of the reeds," is to be understood the Egyptian power, described by its emblem the crocodile, or river-horse, creatures living among the reeds of the Nile. The "calves of the nations" signify the objects of worship among the Egyptians, their Apis and Osiris, &c. around which the "congregation of the mighty" assembled. And by their skipping with or "exulting in pieces of silver," may either be meant their dancing at their idolatrous festivals, with the tinkling instruments, called "sistra," which might be made of silver; or else it may imply their "glorying in pieces of silver," or in their riches. The whole verse is a prayer of the prophet to this effect, that it would please God to bring down and overthrow the strength, the pride and the idolatry of Egypt, that ancient adversary and oppressor of Israel. Bp. Horne.

33. — send out his voice,] That is, in thunder. Green.

We learn in general from this Psalm, that God has at all times displayed His power in favour of His people, by protecting them against their enemies, and showering down His mercies upon them. This He has done for the Christian church, as well as for the children of Israel: and what is said in this Psalm of the protection God vouchsafed to Zion against the assaults of the neighbouring nations, should convince us that the church shall always subsist, in spite of all the attempts of the world and the devil. Osterwald.

Psalm LXIX. The application of many passages of this Psalm to our Lord, made by Himself and His apostles, as well as the appointment of the whole by the Church to be used on Good Friday, direct us to consider it as highly prophetical of our Saviour's sufferings; and indeed many of the expressions are such as were more literally fulfilled in Jesus Christ than in David; who, both in his sufferings and in his advancement after them to a kingdom, was an eminent type or pattern of our Saviour. Travell, Bp. Horne.

5. O God, thou &c.] Thou, O God, who art privy to my follies, and from whom none of my sins can be concealed, Thou knowest that I never did them any injury. Travell.

9. For the zeal &c.] My zeal for Thy honour and service is that which made my enemies endeavour to take away my life; and their blasphemies against Thee moved my indignation as much as if they had been against myself. So was the Lord Christ disowned by His brethren, His zeal for God's glory deeply affected Him, and the reproaches which were levelled against God He felt as if aimed at Himself. Dr. Wells, Travell.

Patrick.* In addition to what has been said on the subject of imprecations, in the note upon Psalm v. 10, it may be remarked, that this and the following verses to the twenty-ninth inclusive, are strictly prophetical of the wretched condition of the Jews, after their rejection of the Messiah, and the destruction of their city and temple. See Rom. xi. 9, 10. Travell.

26. — they talk to the grief] Rather, agreeably to the version of the Seventy, "they add to the pain." Bp. Hare, Mudge.

If we are persecuted without a cause by our enemies, and our persecution be the sharper, for our zeal and affection to God's service, and our constancy to our true religion, and made so much the more intolerable by the derision, and scorn, and reproaches, we see wickedly and profanely cast upon religion; and if all these calamities befall us for other men's sakes, so that we bear the punishment of their faults, and of offences which we have not committed; we come the nearer to the sufferings of our Saviour Himself, which is a great honour and glory to us; and if we do imitate His meekness, and humility, and patience, in the bearing of them, thus so far imitating Him as He hath put it into our power to do; we shall be sure of such a reward, it may be, reparation in this world, as shall be more than proportionable to the affliction we have undergone. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm LXX. The words of this Psalm occur, without any material variations, in Psalm xl. ver. 13. to the end. The reader is therefore referred thither for an explanation. It is thought to have been taken by David from the other Psalm, and a little altered, in order to be used by him constantly, during his distress by Absalom's rebellion. Dr. Wells.

Psalm LXXI. This Psalm was probably composed by David on occasion of Absalom's rebellion, which was a great affliction to him in his declining age. Travell. It is introduced into our service for the Visitation of the Sick, as the greatest part of it is prayeth for perseverance. 19 He praiseth God, and promiseth to do it cheerfully.

1023. [a] Psal.31.1. IN [a] thee, O LORD, do I put my trust: let me never be put to confusion.

2 Deliver me in thy righteousness, and cause me to escape: incline thine ear unto me, and save me.

† Heb. Be thou to me for a rock of habitation. 3 † Be thou my strong habitation, whereunto I may continually resort: thou hast given commandment to save me; for thou art my rock and my fortress.

4 Deliver me, O my God, out of the hand of the wicked, out of the hand of the unrighteous and cruel man.

5 For thou art my hope, O Lord GOD: thou art my trust from my youth.

6 By thee have I been holden up from the womb: thou art he that took me out of my mother's bowels: my praise shall be continually of thee.

7 I am as a wonder unto many; but thou art my strong refuge.

8 Let my mouth be filled with thy praise and with thy honour all the day.

9 Cast me not off in the time of old age; forsake me not when my strength faileth.

† Heb. watch, or, observe. 10 For mine enemies speak against me; and they that † lay wait for my soul take counsel together, 11 Saying, God hath forsaken him: persecute and take him; for there is none to deliver him.

12 O God, be not far from me: O my God, make haste for my help.

13 Let them be confounded and consumed that are adversaries to my soul; let them be covered with reproach and dishonour that seek my hurt.

14 But I will hope continually, and will yet praise thee more and more.

15 My mouth shall shew forth thy righteousness and thy salvation all the day; for I know not the numbers thereof.

16 I will go in the strength of the Lord GOD: I will make mention of thy righteousness, even of thine only.

17 O God, thou hast taught me from my youth: and hitherto have I declared thy wondrous works.

† Heb. unto old age and grey hairs. 18 Now also † when I am old and grey-headed, O God, forsake me not; until I have shewed † thy strength unto this generation, and thy power to every one that is to come.

19 Thy righteousness also, O God, is very high, who hast done great things: O God, who is like unto thee!

20 Thou, which hast shewed me great and sore troubles, shalt quicken me again, and shalt bring me up again from the depths of the earth.

21 Thou shalt increase my greatness, and comfort me on every side.

† Heb. with the instrument of psaltery. 22 I will also praise thee † with the psaltery, even thy truth, O my God: unto thee will I sing with the harp, O thou Holy One of Israel.

23 My lips shall greatly rejoice when I sing unto thee; and my soul, which thou hast redeemed.

24 My tongue also shall talk of thy righteousness all the day long: for they are confounded, for they are brought unto shame, that seek my hurt.

PSALM LXXII.

proper for a dying person, to express his trust in God, the want of His help, &c. Bp. Wilson.

Ver. 1. In thee, O Lord, &c.] The promises of salvation are made to those, who, renouncing all confidence in the world, "trust" in God alone for it. For this reason the Psalmist so often begins his prayer with a declaration of his faith, which is to the soul in affliction, what an anchor is to a ship in distress. Bp. Horne.

2. Deliver me in thy righteousness,] A second argument here used is the "righteousness" of God, who cannot but be faithful and just to His own gracious word. Bp. Horne.

7. I am as a wonder unto many;] That is, My deplorable miseries have made many consider me as a prodigy of wretchedness. Travell.

20. Thou, which hast shewed &c.] Great and numberless as my distresses have been, I have ever found relief from Thy goodness; and I doubt not that Thou wilt again draw me out of this extreme danger, which has brought me to the brink of the grave. Travell, Bp. Patrick.

We may learn from hence, 1st, That those who trust in God are never confounded; and that they may betake themselves to Him under all their wants, with a perfect assurance of His help; but that this confidence cannot be well grounded, unless they have the same pious sentiments that David discovers in this Psalm. 2dly, As this prince, for his comfort and encouragement to praise God, called to mind the favours he had received from Him in time past, so should we preserve the remembrance of the mercies God has vouchsafed us from our youth, and through the whole course of our lives. 3dly, It is the duty of those who have been exposed to great afflictions, and whom God has happily delivered, to join with this holy prophet in admiring and celebrating His great goodness towards them. Ostervald.

Psalm LXXII. David seems to have composed this Psalm on his having appointed Solomon to be his successor. Travell.

This Psalm describes, in the most beautiful imagery, and most lively colours, the peaceful glories of the Messiah's future reign; His righteousness, or impartial administration of justice; the universal homage and worship to be paid to Him; the perpetuity of His dominion, "whose name shall endure for ever," "in whom mankind shall be blessed, and whom all nations shall call blessed."

1015 GIVE the king thy judgments, O God, and thy righteousness unto the king's son.

2 He shall judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with judgment.

3 The mountains shall bring peace to the people, and the little hills, by righteousness.

4 He shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor.

5 They shall fear thee as long as the sun and moon endure, throughout all generations.

6 He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass: as showers that water the earth.

7 In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace † so long as the moon endureth.

† Heb. till there be no moon.

8 He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth.

9 They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him; and his enemies shall lick the dust.

10 The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents: the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts.

11 Yea, all kings shall fall down before him: all nations shall serve him.

12 For he shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also, and him that hath no helper.

13 He shall spare the poor and needy, and shall save the souls of the needy.

14 He shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence: and precious shall their blood be in his sight.

15 And he shall live, and to him † shall be given of the gold of Sheba: prayer also shall be made for him continually; and daily shall he be praised.

† Heb. one shall give.

16 There shall be an handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountains; the fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon: and they of the city shall flourish like grass of the earth.

17 His name † shall endure for ever: † his name shall be continued as long as the sun: and men shall be blessed in him: all nations shall call him blessed.

† Heb. shall be. † Heb. shall be as son to continue his father's name for ever.

18 Blessed be the LORD God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things.

19 And blessed be his glorious name for ever: and let the whole earth be filled with his glory; Amen, and Amen.

20 The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended.

PSALM LXXIII.

1 The prophet, prevailing in a temptation, 2 sheweth the Magnificent predictions, utterly inapplicable to Solomon, but truly characteristick of Christ. Dr. Hales.

In this Psalm there is such a variety and beauty of imagery, such a splendour of diction, such elegance in the composition, that I believe it will be impossible in the whole compass of literature, sacred or profane, to find such an union of sublimity with sweetness and grace. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. Give the king thy judgments,] That is, cause him to govern the kingdom according to Thy precepts. Rosenmiller.

—— the king — the king's son.] The king and the king's son are the same person, a character that belongs to none before Solomon, who was the first prince in Israel that was at the same time king and son of a king. Mudge.

3. The mountains shall bring &c.] In other words, Peace, manifested by its consequence, plenteousness, shall be upon the mountains and little hills of Judea, by means of that righteous judgment, which Solomon will execute in the land. Bp. Horne.

5. They shall fear thee &c.] His righteous administration shall redound to his everlasting honour, and shall gain him the esteem and reverence of his people, through all generations: so that he shall be a lively emblem of the great King, Christ Jesus, whose dominion shall endure as long as the world remaineth. Travell, Bp. Patrick.

8. He shall have dominion &c.] "From sea to sea," that is, with reference to the Messiah, over all the earth.

9. They that dwell &c.] The most barbarous nations shall do him homage, and his enemies shall be constrained to prostrate themselves at his feet with the most abject submission. Travell.

10. — Tarshish] For Tarshish, see note at 1 Kings x. 22.

—— Sheba — Seba] For the former, see the note on 1 Kings x. 1; the latter was also probably in Arabia Felix. Consult the "map of the world" for their probable situations.

14. He shall redeem &c.] He shall preserve them from being ruined either by the deceitful wiles or violent attacks of their enemies; nor shall he, to gratify his own ambition, be prodigal of their precious lives. So shall the Saviour of the world redeem the souls of His people from their most cruel enemies, sin and death; and so valuable in His sight shall their blood be, that He shall shed His own for it! Bp. Patrick, Bp. Horne, Travell.

16. There shall be an handful &c.] The country shall be so fruitful in his days, that even a handful of corn, sown upon the lofty hills, shall produce a crop that shall shake with a loud noise, like the cedars upon mount Lebanon: and the people in the city shall be fruitful and populous, like the innumerable blades of grass in a field, which the Lord hath blessed. Such, under the reign of the Messiah, shall be the amazing increase of the word, when sown in hearts that before were barren; such the astonishing multiplication of citizens in the Christian church. Travell, Bp. Horne.

20. The prayers of David &c.] Meaning perhaps, that this is the end of the first collection of Psalms that was made, probably under Solomon, for the service of the temple. Michaelis.

As most of the things mentioned in this Psalm agree more perfectly to the kingdom of our Lord than to that of Solomon, since Jesus Christ was to be that glorious King, who was to bring the most distant people into subjection, whose kingdom was to last to the end of the world, and under whose government men were to enjoy complete happiness, and be filled with the choicest blessings of heaven; we have therefore here the description of our own happiness, which should put into our own mouths the praises with which David concludes this hymn, "Blessed be the Lord God," &c. Ostervald.

The end of the second Book of Psalms.

Psalm LXXIII. This Psalm, and several which follow, were composed by Asaph; they are chiefly filled with sad and melancholy complaints. Travell. Who this Asaph was is uncertain. Some have thought it was Asaph the singer, who was famous in occasion thereof, the prosperity of the wicked. 13 The wound given thereby, diffidence. 15 The victory over it, knowledge of God's purpose, in destroying of the wicked, and sustaining the righteous.

David's days. But it seems more probable that it was Asaph the seer, who lived in the days of Hezekiah; 2 Chron. xxix. 30. Dr. Wells.

Ver. 2. But as for me, &c.] Yet, notwithstanding my conviction of this truth, my faith in the Divine goodness began to stagger, and I was in danger of falling into a state of distrust and infidelity. Travell, Bp. Patrick.

4. For there are no bands in their death:] They are in no peril of death. Old Translation.

6. Therefore pride &c.] Among men who have not the love of God in their hearts, or His fear before their eyes, pride and oppression are the offspring of worldly prosperity. Bp. Horne.

——— as a chain:] Alluding to the prevailing custom of wearing collars or chains on their necks. See Cant. iv. 9. Bp. Horne. See notes on Job xxix. 14.

7. Their eyes stand &c.] Their very countenance expresses the proud swelling of their hearts, which are puffed up by such a constant state of prosperity, even beyond their own sanguine expectations. Travell.

8. They are corrupt, &c.] They are so corrupt, that they mock at the rules of justice, and defy those who would oppose them: they haughtily claim to themselves an exemption from the laws of God and man. Travell.

9. They set &c.] They blaspheme the God of heaven, and calumniate His servants on earth. Green.

10. Therefore his people &c.] Therefore God's people falleth off to them, and from thence they reap no small advantage. Green. This passage is extremely difficult: according to our old translation, the sense of the ninth and tenth verses may possibly be, They presume to scan the mysterious ways of Heaven with as much clearness and precision as they affect to display in judging of human affairs. This raises their credit in the opinion of ignorant people, which they are sure to turn to their own advantage. Travell.

11—14. — How doth God &c.] The whole of this seems to be the reflexion of God's people on the apparent prosperity of the wicked, and the despairing inference they drew from it: it was so contrary to the usual face of things under the Mosaick dispensation, and to all they had been taught to expect, that it tempted them to doubt even the first principles of all religion. Dr. Kennicott.

15. If I say, &c.] But, if I persevere in such discourse, and speak like these men, I shall betray the cause of all those who are Thy true children, O God. Travell.

17. Until I went &c.] Until I applied to Thee by prayer and meditation on Thy word. See Ps. lxxvii. 13.

20. As a dream &c.] Their prosperity is but as a dream when one awaketh; so, O Lord, when Thou seest fit to punish them, Thou shalt cause all their glory and prosperity quickly to vanish. Dr. Wells.

21. — I was pricked in my reins.] I was deeply wounded with disquieting thoughts and tormenting passions, envy, sorrow, and anger. Poole.

23. Nevertheless I am continually with thee:] Notwithstanding these foolish thoughts, I am under the care of Thy good providence. Bp. Patrick.

27 For, lo, they that are far from thee shall perish: thou hast destroyed all them that go a whoring from thee.

28 But it is good for me to draw near to God: I have put my trust in the Lord GOD, that I may declare all thy works.

27. — thou hast destroyed &c.] Thou hast destroyed those who, forsaking Thy service, have devoted themselves to the worship of other gods. Bp. Patrick. See the note on Exod. xxxiv. 16.

This Psalm teaches us how we ought to judge of the prosperity of the wicked and the afflictions of the righteous. We ought never to believe that wicked men, who live in mirth and plenty in this world, and who enjoy all their wishes, are truly happy, or that the righteous, because they are afflicted, serve God in vain. Asaph has taught us, that to resist this temptation we must meditate upon the word of God, and the ways of Providence: then we shall find that the felicity of worldly men is vain, and of short duration; and that they are set in slippery places, from whence they fall suddenly. Ostervald.

Psalm LXXIV. This Psalm was occasioned by the desolation of Jerusalem and the temple, and the rest of the country of Judea, made by Nebuchadnezzar, or the Babylonish forces. Dr. Wells.

Ver. 2. — the rod of thine inheritance,] The "tribe" or portion of thine inheritance," as in the margin. Bp. Horne. See the note on Jer. x. 16.

3. Lift up thy feet &c.] God is represented as having withdrawn Himself, and departed afar off; He is therefore entreated to return without delay, to view the long lasting desolations of the once highly-favoured city, and the ravages made by enemies in the sanctuary. Bp. Horne.

4. Thine enemies roar &c.] That is, they send up shouts of triumph in those places where Thy people used to praise Thy name. Bp. Patrick.

—— they set up their ensigns for signs.] They erect their standards in token of victory. Bp. Patrick.

5, 6. A man was famous &c.] It was formerly thought an employment of much honour, to cut down and prepare trees for the building of Thy holy sanctuary. But now every man thinks himself most deserving, that can do the greatest havock in Thy temple. Bp. Hall.

9. We see not &c.] We see not any token of Thy divine presence with us, nor is there so much as a prophet to give us advice or comfort, or to tell us when these calamities will have an end. Travell.

11. — pluck it out of thy bosom.] That is, Exert Thy power again for the destruction of Thy enemies. Travell. The hand, when unemployed, was usually inserted in the folds of the garment on the bosom. See note at Ps. lxxix. 12.

13. — thou brakest &c.] Thou didst confound the great and mighty enemies of Israel, in the Red sea. Bp. Hall.

—— dragons] See the note on Psalm xliv. 19.

14. Thou brakest the heads &c.] "Leviathan" stands for Pharaoh, or the Egyptian power, represented by the Egyptian animal, the crocodile. The "heads" of leviathan are the princes of Egypt, the leaders of the Egyptian armies. And the "people inhabiting the wilderness," to whom they were given for a prey, are the wild beasts haunting the deserts. Bp. Horne.

17. — borders of the earth:] The boundaries of the earth, so that the sea cannot overwhelm them. See Jer. v. 22. Job xxxviii 8, 11. Rosenmiller.

This Psalm engages us to make these four principal reflexions: 1. That the Church has been in all ages exposed to persecution; and therefore we ought not to wonder, if the Christian Church has been, and still is, sometimes persecuted. 2. That as God, to punish the Jews for their abuse of His service, suffered them to be led into captivity; for the same reasons He has often delivered His church into the hands of persecutors, with a design to try it, and to purify it. 3. When God appears the most provoked with His people, He does not quite forsake them, but always remembers His covenant, and delivers them at last. 4. As the prophet was grieved for the calamities of the Jews, and prayed for their restoration, so Christians ought to be sensibly affected with the misfortunes of the church, and to pray continually for its deliverance and prosperity. Calmet.

Psalm LXXV. It is not improbable that this Psalm was composed by Asaph on the destruction of the Assyrian army under Sennacherib. Travell.

Ver. 2. When I shall receive &c.] The first verse is spoken by many persons; here the speaker is one, and that one is plainly a ruler, who promises that when he shall have "received the congregation," or, as some render it, "when he shall have gotten an appointed, or fit time, or season," that is, when he shall be established in power and authority, at a fit time and place, he will "judge uprightly, and introduce a thorough reformation into the kingdom." Bp. Horne.

3. The earth and all &c.] In this verse seem to be the words of God in answer, that "Now the time was come for Him to do justice, and therefore the earth melted before Him:" this it might well do, as "He had first set up the pillars of it:" it stood firm only by His order, and therefore must be dissolved when He pleased. Mudge, Dr. Kennicott.

3. — Lift not up the horn:] Behave not yourselves so insolently. Bp. Wilson.

5. Lift not up &c.] For illustrations of this expression, see the note at 1 Sam. ii. 1. To which may be added, with a view to the particular phrase here employed, that "the crooked manner in which the Abyssinians hold the neck, when this ornament is on their forehead, for fear it should fall forward, seems to agree with what the Psalmist calls 'speaking with a stiff neck,' for it perfectly shews the meaning of speaking with a stiff neck, when you hold the horn on high, or erect, like the horn of an unicorn." Bruce.

6. For promotion cometh neither &c.] That is, success and advancement come not from any earthly quarter, but from God.

8. For in the hand &c.] As the choicest of heavenly blessings are frequently in Scripture represented by the salutary effects of wine, so from the noxious and intoxicating qualities of that liquor, when drunk strong, and in too large a quantity, is borrowed a most tremendous image of the wrath and indignation of Almighty God. Bp. Horne.

—— it is full of mixture;] See the note from Bp. Lowth on Isa. i. 22.

This Psalm especially instructs us, that it is God who establishes and strengthens kings, and gives peace to their dominions; and that it is the duty of kings and princes, and in general of all magistrates, to exercise justice, to restrain the wicked and the proud, and to protect the innocent. Calmet.

Psalm LXXVI. This is a song of triumph on God's deliverances of Jerusalem from a powerful army which threatened the destruction of it, probably the army of Sennacherib. Green.

Thou, even thou, art to be feared: and who may stand in thy sight when once thou art angry?

Thou didst cause judgment to be heard from heaven; the earth feared, and was still,

When God arose to judgment, to save all the meek of the earth. Selah.

Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee: the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain.

Vow, and pay unto the LORD your God: let all that be round about him bring presents †unto him that ought to be feared.

† Heb. to fear.

He shall cut off the spirit of princes: he is terrible to the kings of the earth.

PSALM LXXVII.

The psalmist sheweth what fierce combat he had with diffidence. 10 The victory which he had by consideration of God's great and gracious works.

¶ To the chief Musician, to Jeduthun, A Psalm ‖ of Asaph.

‖ Or, for Asaph.

I CRIED unto God with my voice, even unto God with my voice; and he gave ear unto me.

In the day of my trouble I sought the LORD: † my sore ran in the night, and ceased not: my soul refused to be comforted.

† Heb. my hand.

I remembered God, and was troubled: I complained, and my spirit was overwhelmed. Selah.

Thou holdest mine eyes waking: I am so troubled that I cannot speak.

I have considered the days of old, the years of ancient times.

I call to remembrance my song in the night: I commune with mine own heart: and my spirit made diligent search.

Will the LORD cast off for ever? and will he be favourable no more?

Is his mercy clean gone for ever? doth his promise fail † for evermore?

† Heb. to generation and generation.

Hath God forgotten to be gracious? hath he in anger shut up his tender mercies? Selah.

And I said, This is my infirmity: but I will remember the years of the right hand of the most high.

I will remember the works of the LORD: surely I will remember thy wonders of old.

I will meditate also of all thy work, and talk of thy doings.

Thy way, O God, is in the sanctuary: who is so great a God as our God!

Thou art the God that doest wonders:

Ver. 4. — than the mountains of prey.] Mountains often stand for great princes; and this may be a figurative expression for mighty conquerours who ravage the earth.

5. The stouthearted &c.] The mighty warriors that came up against Jerusalem are spoiled, and have slept the sleep of death; neither were any of those great champions able to resist the destroying angel. Bp. Hall.

10. Surely the wrath &c.] From the spite and malice of Thine enemies, Thou shalt take occasion to win praise and glory to Thy name; and Thou wilt so restrain their power and tyranny, that they shall do no further injury to Thy people. Bp. Hall.

12. — the spirit] The pride. Merrick.

Why are the miraculous exertions of Omnipotence recorded in the Book of Life, but to suggest to us this reflexion, that God, and God only, is the proper object of our fear; since neither the wisdom of the wise, nor the power of the mighty, no, not the world itself, can stand a single moment before Him, "when once He is angry?" Yet we continue to dread any frowns but those of Heaven. Bp. Horne.

Psalm LXXVII. This Psalm is of that diversified and unequal kind which ascends from a cool and deliberate opening to a high degree of sublimity. The prophet, oppressed with a heavy weight of affliction, displays the extreme dejection and perturbation of his soul, and most elegantly and pathetically describes the conflicts and internal contests to which he is subjected, before he is enabled to rise from the depths of woe to any degree of hope or confidence. In the character of a supplant he first pours forth his earnest prayers to the God of his hope. He next endeavours to mitigate his sorrows by the remembrance of former times; but this, on the contrary, only seems to aggravate his sufferings, by the comparison of his present adversity with his former happiness. Again, recollecting the different methods by which the Almighty seeks the salvation of His people, appearing frequently to frown upon those "in whom He delighteth:" reconsidering also the vast series of mercies which He had bestowed upon His chosen people; the miracles which He had wrought in their favour; in a word, the goodness, the holiness, the power of the great Ruler of the universe; with all the ardour of gratitude and affection he bursts forth into a strain of praise and exultation, ver. 13—19. In this passage we are at a loss which to admire most, the ease and grace with which the digression is made, the choice of the incidents, the magnificence of the imagery, or the force and elegance of the diction. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 2. — my sore ran &c.] This is rendered more literally by an ancient Greek version, "my hand was stretched out in the night without intermission." Bps. Horne and Lowth.

6. I call to remembrance &c.] I called to mind the songs I had composed, in memory of Thy signal mercies; I spent whole nights in silent meditation, and in revolving in my mind what could be the cause, that Thou shouldest forsake Thy people. Travell, Bp. Patrick.

10. — This is my infirmity: &c.] "My weakness of faith" to entertain such thoughts. Dr. Wells, Bp. Horne. But I will remember that the power of God endureth for ever.

13. Thy way, &c.] The meaning is, The methods of Thy providence are just and holy. Bp. Patrick, Old Translation.

thou hast declared thy strength among the people.

15 Thou hast with thine arm redeemed thy people, the sons of Jacob and Joseph. Selah.

16 The waters saw thee, O God, the waters saw thee; they were afraid: the depths also were troubled.

† Hob. The clouds were poured forth with water.

17 †The clouds poured out water: the skies sent out a sound: thine arrows also went abroad.

18 The voice of thy thunder was in the heaven: the lightnings lightened the world: the earth trembled and shook.

¶ ‖ Maschil of Asaph.

‖ Or, A Psalm for Asaph to give instruction.

GIVE ear, O my people, to my law: incline your ears to the words of my mouth.

[a] Psal. 49. 4. Matth. 13. 35.

2 [a] I will open my mouth in a parable: I will utter dark sayings of old:

3 Which we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us.

4 We will not hide them from their children, shewing to the generation to come the praises of the LORD, and his strength, and his wonderful works that he hath done.

[b] Deut. 4. 9. & 6. 7.

5 For he established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which he commanded our fathers, [b] that they should make them known to their children:

6 That the generation to come might know them, even the children which should be born; who should arise and declare them to their children:

7 That they might set their hope in God, and not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments:

8 And might not be as their fathers, a stubborn and rebellious generation; a generation † that set not their heart aright, and whose spirit was not stedfast with God.

† Heb. that prepared not their heart.

9 The children of Ephraim, being armed, and †carrying bows, turned back in the day of battle.

† Heb. throwing forth.

10 They kept not the covenant of God, and refused to walk in his law;

11 And forgat his works, and his wonders that he had shewed them.

12 Marvellous things did he in the sight of their fathers, in the land of Egypt, in the field of Zoan.

13 [c] He divided the sea, and caused them to pass through; and he made the waters to stand as an heap.

[c] Exod. 14. 21.

14 [d] In the daytime also he led them with a cloud, and all the night with a light of fire.

[d] Exod. 13. 21. & 14. 24.

16. The waters saw thee, &c.] The waters of the Red sea are here beautifully represented as endued with sensibility, as seeing, feeling, and being confounded, even to the lowest depths, at the presence and power of their great Creator, when He commanded them to open a way, and to form a wall on each side of it, until His people were passed over. Bp. Horne.

17. — thine arrows] That is, Thy lightnings, or thunderbolts. Poole.

19. Thy way is &c.] God walked before His people through the sea, though He left no footsteps of Himself behind Him. Mudge.

A weak man cannot rightly judge of the actions of a man wiser than himself, of whose views and designs he is not master: much less can man judge of the ways of God, to whose counsels he is not admitted, and to whose secrets he is a stranger. In complaining, the Psalmist followed the natural impressions of passion and impatience: in acknowledging the folly of his complaint, he spoke not only the language of grace, but of sense and reason. But this good man, being well grounded in religion, was able so far to get the better of his doubts and fears, as to pass a right judgment in his own case, and to call to his assistance the proper reflexions which the great works of Providence administered for the support and confirmation of his hope and confidence towards God. Here then was his comfort; here the cure of all his grief. Bp. Sherlock.

Psalm LXXVIII. This Psalm pursues the history of the Israelites from the time of their departure from Egypt to the reign of David, particularizing and illustrating all the leading events. The style is simple and uniform, but the structure is poetical, and the sentiments occasionally splendid. The historical, or rather chronological, order cannot be said to be exactly preserved throughout; for the minute detail of so protracted a series of events could scarcely fail to tire in a work of imagination. The Egyptian miracles are introduced in a very happy and elegant digression, and may be considered as forming a kind of episode. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 2. — parable:] See notes at Numb. xxiii. 7. Job xxvii. 1.

—— dark sayings] The original word means, a pointed or obscure saying; such as requires, either for the conception or understanding of it, considerable ingenuity. Bp. Lowth. But there is nothing obscure in this Psalm, which contains instructive historical truths. Therefore the expression should be rendered "pointed truths." Street.

5. — a testimony] Or solemn charge. Mudge.

9. The children of Ephraim, &c.] The history here referred to is that of the Israelites going up, contrary to God's command, to take possession of the land of Canaan, when they were smitten before their enemies. See Deut. i. 42. The Ephraimites are here specified, probably, as being the most warlike tribe, and as having led on, perhaps, the rest of the tribes to the battle. Green.

12. — in the field of Zoan.] In the territories that belong to Zoan: a chief city of Egypt, and the court of Pharaoh, where those miraculous works would be so much more noted. Bp. Hall.

been a full display of wrath and vengeance, executed upon the oppressors of the Church by "evil angels, agents, or messengers;" whether by this expression we understand the material instruments of Divine displeasure; or angels employed as ministers of vengeance; or the actual appearance and ministration of evil spirits, suffered to torment the wicked in this world, as they certainly will do in the next. We cannot exercise our devotions more usefully upon any part of the Old Testament, than upon the history of God's wonderful lovingkindness to, and miraculous deliverances of, His own chosen people, the Jews. There we find all the most heightened acts of power, all the transcendent kindness, and bounty, and affection, which the most exalted imagination of man can suppose possible to result from Divinity itself; and there we find the most inexpressible ingratitude and baseness of spirit, the foulest enormities and transgressions, and the most barefaced contempt of that Power which had preserved and protected them, which the malice of the devil himself can infuse into the heart of man. Again, we find, on the one hand, the patience and mercy of God contending to be too hard for that malice, checking and restraining this people from hurting themselves; or permitting them to hurt themselves, till they grew sensible of their wickedness; and then delivering them, because, and only because, they grew sensible: and on the other hand, a perverseness so strong, and an obstinacy so powerful, an incorrigibleness so proud, that it was too hard for that mercy, and drove it from them: and, in the last place, we find the indignation of God kindled, which could not be quenched without scattering this rebellious nation over the face of the whole earth. Lord Clarendon.

In this Psalm Asaph complains that the Babylonians had destroyed the city and temple of Jerusalem, and bewecches God to be reconciled to His people, and to punish the blasphemies and cruelties of their idolatrous enemies. Green. It is one of the Psalms appointed for the fast-service on the thirtieth of January.

—— into their bosom] The Arabs join together the two upper corners of their hyke, a garment like the plaid of the highlanders in Scotland, and after having placed them first over one of their shoulders, they then fold the rest of it about their bodies. The outer fold serves then frequently instead of an apron, wherein they carry herbs, loaves, corn, &c. There seem to be several allusions to this in Scripture; as "rendering sevenfold into their bosom," &c. Dr. Shaw.

Affliction hath then wrought its intended effect, when it hath convinced us of sin, and led us to repentance; when, brought back by it, like the returning prodigal, to the house and presence of our heavenly Father, we acknowledge our guilt as the cause of our misery, and entreat forgiveness of the one in order to obtain a release from the other; not pleading our own merits, but the mercies of God our Saviour, and the glory of His name. *Bp. Psalm LXXX. The subject of this Psalm has some resemblance to the former: it contains an application to God for help under some grievous affliction; describes the former exaltation of God's people, and their present depression, under the beautiful figure of a vine; and concludes with earnest prayer to God for a continuance of His goodness. Travell.

Ver. 1. — thou that dwellest &c.] Thou that sittest enthroned above the ark of the covenant, shew us some illustrious token of Thy presence. Travell.

2. Before Ephraim &c.] God is entreated to go forth, in His strength and His salvation, before the tribes of Israel, as formerly in the wilderness. 8. Thou hast brought a vine &c.] The Psalmist, describing the people of Israel as a vine, has continued the metaphor, and happily drawn it out through a variety of additional circumstances. Among the many beauties of this allegory, not the least graceful is that modesty, with which he enters upon and concludes his subject, making an easy and gradual transition from plain to figurative language, and no less delicately receding back to the plain and unornamented narrative. Bp. Lowth.

11. She sent out &c.] Signifying, that Israel extended its dominion from the Mediterranean sea to the river Euphrates. Dr. Wells.

13. The boar] By this figure, the Psalmist means to represent the fierce and unrelenting persecutor of the people of Israel. Bp. Horne.

Let not the Christian church imagine, that the sufferings complained of in this Psalm relate only to her elder sister. Greater mercies and more excellent gifts should excite in her greater thankfulness, and call forth more excellent virtues; otherwise they will serve only to enhance her account, and multiply her sorrows. If she sin, and fall after the same example of unbelief, she must not think to be distinguished in her punishment, unless by the severity of it. Bp. Horne.

Psalm LXXXI. Throughout this Psalm appears an exquisite union of sublimity and sweetness. It is an ode composed for the feast of trumpets, (Levit. xxiii. 24.) in the first new moon of the civil year. The object and end of this poem appears to be an exhortation to obedience from the consideration of the paternal love, the beneficence, and the promises of the Deity; and this is accomplished with wonderful art, elegance, variety, and ingenuity. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 2. — the timbrel,] See the note on Exod. xv. 20.

—— the psaltery.] See the note on Psalm xxxiii. 2.

3. Blow up the trumpet &c.] In the Jewish church, notice was given of feasts, jubilees, &c. by sound of trumpet. All the new moons, or the beginnings of months, were observed in this manner: (see Numb. x. 2.) but on the September new moon, or first day of the seventh month, of the ecclesiastical year, was kept the great festival, called "the feast of trumpets;" (Numb. xxix. 1.) which, probably, is here intended. Bp. Horne.

5. This he ordained &c.] This feast-day is a charge which He gave to Joseph, when he came out of the land of Egypt, where he heard a language which he understood not. Joseph is here used collectively for the sons of Joseph, or rather for the Israelites, to whom Joseph had been a father in the land of Egypt. Green.

6. I removed &c.] In this verse God reminds Israel of their redemption, by His mercy and power, from the burdens and drudgery imposed on them in Egypt. Bp. Horne.

7. Thou calledst &c.] That is, when the Egyptians followed after thee into the Red sea, in answer to thy prayers, I confounded them with thunder and lightning from the cloudy pillar. See Exod. xiv. 24, 25. Green.

¶ A Song or Psalm ‖ of Asaph.

‖ Or, for Asaph.

KEEP not thou silence, O God: hold not thy peace, and be not still, O God.

2 For, lo, thine enemies make a tumult: and they that hate thee have lifted up the head.

3 They have taken crafty counsel against thy people, and consulted against thy hidden ones.

4 They have said, Come, and let us cut them off from being a nation; that the name of Israel may be no more in remembrance.

5 For they have consulted together with one † consent: they are confederate against thee:

† Heb. heart.

6 The tabernacles of Edom, and the Ishmaelites; of Moab, and the Hagarenes;

7 Gebal, and Ammon, and Amalek; the Philistines with the inhabitants of Tyre;

10. — open thy mouth wide, &c.] That is, I will satisfy thy desires, be they ever so large. Mudge.

15. — their time &c.] That is, the Israelites should have enjoyed a substantial and durable happiness. Bp. Patrick.

16. — honey out of the rock] See the note on Deut. xxxii. 13.

This Psalm should incite us to pay our praises and our homage to God in a most zealous and solemn manner. A duty this, which concerns no less all Christians, than it did the Jews; for, if God bestowed very considerable favours on the Jews by bringing them out of Egypt, and giving them His law, He hath done incomparably greater things for us, in redeeming us by Jesus Christ His Son, and giving us the knowledge of His Gospel. Otterwald.

Psalm LXXXII. ver. 1. God standeth &c.] God is present in the judicial assemblies, which He has appointed: and He will call the most powerful magistrates to account. The Hebrew word for "gods" is often applied to princes and magistrates, as representing, in some degree, the power and majesty of God. Travell.

2. — accept the persons &c.] That is, overlook the merit of the cause, and give sentence according to your respect or affection to the person. Poole.

5. They know not, &c.] They will not study the laws of God, but are blinded by bribes; so that the very foundations of the kingdom, which are truth and justice, are utterly shaken and confounded. Bp. Patrick.

6. I have said, Ye are gods;] I have given you my authority, and even put my name upon you, John x. 34, 35. Bp. Wilson.

7. — and fall like &c.] And ye shall fall, O ye princes, like any other man. Cataker, Rosenmüller, Dimock.

8. — judge the earth: &c.] Vindicate mankind from these impious judges, for Thou hast the rightful dominion over all nations. Travell.

All magistrates should derive from this Psalm the instruction, that it is their duty to do right to all, without respect of persons, and especially to protect the weak and innocent when oppressed. To this end, they should remember that, although they are now placed above others, yet they must die one day like the rest of mankind, and must then appear before the one Supreme Judge, to give an account of all that they have done. Gotcrwald.

6. The tabernacles &c.] The Edomites and Ishmaelites, who dwell in tents, are engaged in this enterprise, and so are the Moabites, and others descended from Hagar, the mother of Ishmael. Bp. Patrick.

7. Gebal,] Some place Gebal in Phenicia near Tyre; and others in the mountainous country beyond Jordan. Rosenmüller.

14 As the fire burneth the wood, and as the flame setteth the mountains on fire;

15 So persecute them with thy tempest, and make them afraid with thy storm.

16 Fill their faces with shame; that they may seek thy name, O LORD.

17 Let them be confounded and †vexed for ever; yea, let them be put to shame, and perish:

14, 15. As the fire &c.] Let their destruction be as sudden and violent, as the effect of lightning on the trees of the forest; or as the devouring flame on the parched grass that grows on the mountains. Travell.

The punishments inflicted by Heaven upon wicked men are primarily intended to humble and convert them. If they continue incorrigible under every dispensation of merciful severity, they are at last cut off, and finally destroyed; that others, admonished by their example, may repent, and return, and give glory to God. Salutary are the afflictions which bring men, and happy the men who are brought by them, to an acknowledgment of "Jehovah our righteousness," our exalted and glorified Redeemer, "the Most High over all the earth;" whom all must acknowledge, and before whom all must appear to be judged, in the great and terrible day. Bp. Horne.

Psalm LXXXIV. It is uncertain to what particular time this beautiful composition relates: the author of it, under the figure of an Israelite, deprived of all access to Jerusalem and the sanctuary, laments his banishment from the assemblies of the faithful, describes the happiness of those who are blessed with opportunities of frequenting God's house, and beseeches God to make him a partaker of that happiness. Travell.

Ver. 3. Yea, the sparrow &c.] The Psalmist is generally supposed in this verse to lament his unhappiness in being deprived of all access to the tabernacle or temple, a privilege enjoyed even by the birds, who were allowed to build their nests in the neighbourhood of the sanctuary. It is evidently the design of this passage to intimate to us, that in the house, and at the altar of God, a faithful soul findeth freedom from care and sorrow, quiet of mind, and gladness of spirit; like a bird that has secured a little mansion, for the reception and education of her young. And there is no heart, endued with sensibility, which does not bear its testimony to the exquisite beauty and propriety of this affecting image. Bp. Horne.

—— the swallow] Rather, the dove. Bp. Lowth, Merrick.

5. — in whose heart &c.] The meaning seems to be, "whose heart is bent on travelling the ways to Thy temple." Green, Merrick.

6, 7. Who passing &c.] After many uncertain conjectures offered by commentators upon the construction of these two verses, it seems impossible for us to attain to any other than a general idea of their true import; which is this, that the Israelites, or some of them, passed, in their way to Jerusalem, through a valley that had the name of "Baca," a noun derived from a verb, which signifies to "weep;" that in this valley they were refreshed by plenty of water; that with renewed vigour they proceeded from stage to stage, until they presented themselves before God in Zion. Bp. Horne.

9. — of thine anointed.] He prays for the king as the person in whom the prosperity of his country was enwrapped: he was the "shield" and protection of it under God. See Psalm lxxxix. 18. and xlvii. 9. Mudge.

There cannot be a greater resemblance to the joys of heaven in any pleasure or happiness that we can enjoy in this world, than in that tranquillity of mind and conscience which naturally attends and accompanies our fervent devotions to God Almighty; when we have deposited all our wishes with Him, and submitted and resigned all our desires to Him. Nor can there be a more lively representation upon earth, of the court and company of heaven, than in the assemblies and congregations of religious and pious men pouring out their prayers, and celebrating the praises of their Creator and Redeemer. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm LXXXV. In celebrating the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, the Psalmist is carried by a prophetick impulse to foretel a much greater deliverance by the coming of Christ. Dimock. This Psalm is appointed by the Church to be used on Christmas-day, when we celebrate the deliverance of mankind from the captivity of sin, and the introduction into the world of mercy and truth, righteousness and peace. Travell. It is also appointed for the fast service on the thirtieth of January.

Ver. 4. Turn us, &c.] This word is frequently used in Scripture: the metaphor seems to be taken from a shepherd who drives back the wandering sheep; and it is applied both to relief from temporal affliction, and return to the paths of duty.

8. I will hear &c.] I will wait with patience for God's answer to my prayers. Bp. Wilson.

—— to folly.] To wickedness.

10. Mercy and truth &c.] How admirable is this celebrated personification of the Divine attributes! How just, elegant, and splendid does it appear, if applied only according to the literal sense, to the restoration of the Jewish nation from the Babylonish captivity! but if interpreted as relating to that more sacred mystical sense, which is not obscurely shadowed under the ostensible image, it is certainly uncommonly noble and elevated, mysterious and sublime. Bp. Lowth.

11. Truth shall spring &c.] See note from Bp. Lowth on Isa. xlv. 8.

13. Righteousness shall go &c.] That is, Reformation of morals shall precede the establishment of Christ's religion.

We learn in this Psalm, that, as God makes men, and sometimes His own people and Church, feel the effects of His wrath for the punishment of their sins; and that the end which He proposes by it is to recover them from their errours; so when He sees them humbled to becoming feelings of piety, He is ever ready to receive them again into His favour, and to bestow on them His choicest gifts, both temporal and spiritual. Osterwald.

PSALM LXXXVIII.

A prayer containing a grievous complaint.

13. —the lowest hell.] Extreme dangers; the grave. Dr. Wells, Green.

This prayer should excite those who are in affliction and distress to call upon God for help with profound humility, and firm confidence in His mercy and power; beseeching Him not only to deliver them from the evils which press sore upon them, but, above all, to give them grace to please and obey Him. We ought likewise in our troubles to meditate upon God's infinite goodness, and consider that "He is full of compassion, and gracious, long-suffering, and plenteous in mercy and truth." This will support us under all our trials, fill us with joy and consolation, and afford us, even in the midst of trouble, reason to praise and bless Him. Osterwald.

Psalm LXXXVII. This Psalm contains a brief comparison, first, between Zion, the place of God's worship, and all Judea besides; and then between it and all heathen countries. Dr. Hammond.

Ver. 1. His foundation &c.] That is, Zion is of God's founding. See Isa. xiv. 32. and Psalm cxxxii. 13. Dr. Chandler.

2. The Lord loveth &c.] The Lord takes more pleasure to dwell in His tabernacle, and His temple, on Zion, than in all the rest of the land of Judah or Israel. Bp. Hall.

4. I will make mention &c.] The accession of the nations to the church is generally supposed to be here predicted. God declares by His prophet, "I will make mention of," or cause to be remembered, "Egypt and Babylon," the old enemies of Israel, "to" or "among them that know Me," that is, in the number of My worshippers; "behold, also, Philistia and Tyre, with Arabia;" these are become Mine; "this," or each of these, "is born there," that is, in the city of God; they are become children of God, and citizens of Zion. Bp. Horne.

—— Rahab.] Meaning Egypt. The Hebrew word signifies "proud," and the name is given to Egypt from the pride and insolence of its princes and inhabitants. Parkhurst.

—Ethiopia;] Rather, Arabia. Dr. Wells. See note at Numb. xii 1.

5. And of Zion &c.] "So that of Zion," or the Church, "it shall be said, This and that man," that is, great numbers of men in succession, "are born in her;" alluding to the number of converts under the Gospel, the sons of that Jerusalem, "which is the mother of us all." Bp. Horne.

6. The Lord shall count, &c.] In the Book of Life, that register of heaven, kept by God Himself, our names are entered, not as born of flesh and blood by the will of man, but as born of water and the Spirit by the will of God; of each person it is written, "that he was born there," in the church and city of God. Bp. Horne.

7. — all my springs &c.] And the burden of the song, thus joyfully sung in praise of Zion, was to be this; "All my springs," or fountains, "are in thee." In thee, O Zion, is the fountain of salvation, and from thee are derived all those springs of grace which flow by the Divine appointment, while the world lasts, for the purification and refreshment of mankind upon earth. Bp. Horne.

If "the Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob," so should we. For the prosperity, therefore, of the Church, we and all the world ought to pray. And while we pray for the Church with our lips, let it be our unfeigned endeavour to adorn her by our lives. So shall we make the proper return for the mercies we have received; so shall we draw down more and more of the Divine favour continually upon our king, our country, and ourselves; so shall we convince the world of this great and important truth, that the Christian is the loyal subject, and the Churchman the true patriot. Bp. Horne.

Psalm LXXXVIII. This Psalm is a continued detail of melancholy complaints, on account of some grievous sufferings, under which the Psalmist laboured. The extreme severity of those sufferings, and the strong expressions used in describing them, make the whole of it highly applicable to our blessed Lord: on this account it is appointed by the Church to be read on Good Friday, when we are directed to call to mind His unexampled sorrows both in body and soul, His desertion in the day of trouble, His bitter passion, and most painful death. Travell, Bp. Horne.

O LORD God of my salvation, I have cried day and night before thee:

2 Let my prayer come before thee: incline thine ear unto my cry;

3 For my soul is full of troubles: and my life draweth nigh unto the grave.

4 I am counted with them that go down into the pit: I am as a man that hath no strength:

5 Free among the dead, like the slain that lie in the grave, whom thou rememberest no more: and they are cut off ‖ from thy hand.

‖ Or, by thy hand.

6 Thou hast laid me in the lowest pit, in darkness, in the deeps.

8 Thou hast put away mine acquaintance far from me; thou hast made me an abomination unto them: I am shut up, and I cannot come forth.

9 Mine eye mourneth by reason of affliction: LORD, I have called daily upon thee, I have stretched out my hands unto thee.

10 Wilt thou shew wonders to the dead? shall the dead arise and praise thee? Selah.

11 Shall thy lovingkindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction?

12 Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?

13 But unto thee have I cried, O LORD; and in the morning shall my prayer prevent thee.

14 LORD, why castest thou off my soul? why hidest thou thy face from me?

15 I am afflicted and ready to die from my youth up: while I suffer thy terrors I am distracted.

16 Thy fierce wrath goeth over me; thy terrors have cut me off.

18 Lover and friend hast thou put far from me, and mine acquaintance into darkness.

PSALM LXXXIX.

1 The psalmist praiseth God for his covenant, 5 for his wonderful power, 15 for the care of his church, 19 for his favour to the kingdom of David. 38 Then complaining of contrary events, 46 he expostulateth, prayeth, and blesseth God.

¶ ‖ Maschil of Ethan the Ezrahite.

‖ Or, A Psalm for Ethan the Ezrahite, to give instruction.

I WILL sing of the mercies of the LORD for ever: with my mouth will I make † known thy faithfulness to all generations.

† Heb. to generation and generation.

2 For I have said, Mercy shall be built up for ever: thy faithfulness shalt thou establish in the very heavens.

‖ Or. Mahalath.] See the note to the title of Psalm liii.

— Leannoth.] This word means "interchangeably." Dr. Wells. Or, according to others, "to create dejections," to raise a pensive gloom or melancholy in the mind. Mudge.

— the Ezrahite.] That is, a descendant of Zerah the son of Judah. Dr. Wells.

Ver. 5. Free among the dead,] That is, set at liberty, or dismissed from the world, and separated from all communication with its affairs, as dead bodies are. Bp. Horne.

This alludes to the separation of lepers, who were as much removed from all society as if they were really dead. Fenton.

— whom thou remembered &c.] That is, "whom Thou remembereest no more as living objects of Providence upon earth;" in this sense, they are "cut off from God's hand," which held and supported them in life. Bp. Horne.

6. Thou hast laid me &c.] Thou hast thrust me down into a deep and dark dungeon, which I can compare to nothing but a grave. Bp. Patrick.

10. — shall the dead &c.] Shall the dead arise out of their graves, and live here among men and celebrate Thy praises? Bp. Hall.

12. — in the land of forgetfulness?] In the grave, where all things are forgotten? Bp. Wilson.

16. — thy terrors have cut me off.] Have overwhelmed me. Bp. Patrick.

As the comforts which true religion affords are the only sure support against the evils and calamities of the world, to which every condition of life is more or less exposed; so the terrours of religion, being very grievous in themselves, exclusive of these comforts, add weight to all our miseries, and are a burden too heavy for a man to sustain. But surely there is something monstrous in such terrours! They come not from religion by natural birth: for it is much easier to believe that all we see is chance and fortune, and religion itself a vain thing, than to believe that an all-wise and all-powerful Being has formed us to be miserable. And yet, in fact, this is often the case; we see many rendered unhappy by such fears and jealousies: and of all the fears incident to man these are the most fearful, and give us the quickest sense of misery; they are what the Psalmist has here described them to be, "distraction." Bp. Sherlock.

Psalm LXXXIX. Ethan, speaking in the person of his prince, describes his reliance on the faithfulness of God to fulfil His covenant with David, and on the power of God to perform wonders for the deliverance of His people. He then represents, that, notwithstanding His covenant with David, and His power to deliver His people, the kingdom of Judah was at that time in great desolation, being despoiled of its glory, and delivered into the hands of the Babylonians; and implores the Lord to put an end to its captivity and calamities. Green.

The glorious things here spoken of David, and of his posterity, are prophetical of the Messiah; and can with strict propriety be applied only to Him: on this account the Church has appointed this Psalm to be used on Christmas-day. Travell.

Ver. 2. — Mercy shall be built up &c.] That is, God's mercy, and His regard to the truth of His promises, are as fixed and unchangeable as the very heavens themselves. Travell, Bp. Patrick.

3. I have made a covenant &c.] This covenant God made with David by the prophet Nathan, 2 Sam. vii. 12, &c. The covenant relates to David's "seed," and to the "establishment of his throne" in that seed; literally, in Solomon, for a time; spiritually, in Christ, for ever. Bp. Horne.

15. Blessed is the people &c.] Blessed are the people, whose ears are inured to the cheerful sound of the sacred trumpets of God in their solemn feasts and sacrifices. Bp. Hall.

19. Then thou spakest &c.] Thou spakest by way of vision to Thy holy prophet Samuel, and saidst, I have ordained to give help and victory unto My people, by My strong and mighty champion, David. Bp. Hall.

23. I will set his hand &c.] I will extend his conquests and dominion from the Mediterranean sea to the rivers Tigris and Euphrates. Dr. Wells.

27. Also I will make &c.] I will raise him to the highest dignity among those whom I shall call My sons; and I will exalt him above all other kings in the world, so that he may be a most eminent type of My Son Christ, the King of king and Lord of lords. Travell, Bp. Patrick.

36. His seed shall endure &c.] His family shall never be extinct, but shall hold the royal dignity as long as the sun shineth. Bp. Patrick.

37 It shall be established for ever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven. Selah.

38 But thou hast cast off and abhorred, thou hast been wroth with thine anointed.

39 Thou hast made void the covenant of thy servant: thou hast profaned his crown by casting it to the ground.

PSALM XC.

1 Moses, setting forth God's providence, 3 complaineth of human frailty, 7 divine chastisements, 10 and brevity of life. 12 He prayeth for the knowledge and sensible experience of God's good providence.

¶ ‖ A Prayer of Moses the man of God. ‖ Or, A Prayer, being a Psalm of Moses.

LORD, thou hast been our dwelling place † in all generations. † Heb. in generation and generation.

2 Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God.

3 Thou turnest man to destruction; and sayest, Return, ye children of men.

4 § For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday ‖ when it is past, and as a watch in the night. § 2 Pet. 3. 8. ‖ Or, when he hath passed them.

5 Thou carriest them away as with a flood; they are as a sleep: in the morning they are like grass which ‖ groweth up. ‖ Or, is changed.

6 In the morning it flourisheth; and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down, and withereth.

7 For we are consumed by thine anger, and by thy wrath are we troubled.

8 Thou hast set our iniquities before thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance.

9 For all our days are † passed away in thy wrath: we spend our years ‖ as a tale that is told. † Heb. turned away. ‖ Or, as a meditation.

39. Thou hast made void &c.] Thou seemest not to regard the covenant made with Thy faithful servant David, but hast permitted the authority of his successor to be profaned, and his crown to fall down under foot. Bp. Patrick. Travell.

47. Remember how short &c.] O let the natural shortness of my life plead with Thee for mercy, and do not let it appear as if Thou hadst made man only to be miserable and to die. Travell.

50. Remember, Lord, the reproach &c.] The Jews, when this Psalm was penned, were in a low estate: the very heathen reproached them for vainly expecting their mighty Deliverer, the Messiah, whom they said God had promised to David, and out of his loins. Bp. Wilson.

51. — reproached the footsteps &c.] That is, have pursued the steps of Thine anointed with revilings. Mudge. Merrick. Or, according to the Chaldee, Mocked at the tardy advent of Thy Messiah. Bp. Horne.

The posterity of David were to enjoy God's favour, or be deprived of it, as they proved obedient or disobedient to His law. When they became rebellious, idolatrous, and profligate, the rod was lifted up, and due chastisement inflicted, sometimes by the immediate hand of Heaven, sometimes by the instrumentality of their heathen adversaries; famine and pestilence, war and captivity, were at different times employed to reclaim backsliding Israel. But still the "covenant" of God in Christ stood sure; the Jewish nation was preserved, through all changes and revolutions, "till the Seed came to whom the promise was made;" nor was Jerusalem destroyed before the new and spiritual kingdom of Messiah was set up in the earth. Christian communities, and the individuals that compose them, are in like manner corrected and punished for their offences. "Nevertheless, God's lovingkindness will He not utterly take from us, nor suffer His faithfulness to fail." So, "I am with you alway," says the Redeemer, "even unto the end of the world, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against My Church," Matth. xxviii. 20. and xvi. 18. Nor shall the world be destroyed until Christ come again, and His glorious kingdom be ready to appear. Bp. Horne.

The end of the third Book of Psalms.

Psalm XC. It has been commonly imagined, that this Psalm was composed by Moses, when God shortened the days of the murmuring Israelites in the wilderness; see Numb. xiv. It chiefly refers to the mortal and transitory state of man on earth, and is therefore adopted by the Church in the Funeral Service. Travell.

Ver. 1. — our dwelling place] Our place of refuge. Mudge. Old Translation.

3, 5. — and sayest, Return, &c.] That is, Thou restorest men to life. "For a thousand years," &c. that is, though the time of their restoration is remote, it is equally certain; for a thousand years are to Thee as one day.

5. — a watch in the night.] See the note on Exod. xiv. 24.

9. For all our days &c.] For we constantly feel some effect or other of Thine anger, whereby our lives decline exceeding fast. Bp. Patrick.

† Heb. As for the days of our years, in them are seventy years.

10 † The days of our years are three-score years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labour and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away.

11 Who knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath.

12 So teach us to number our days, that we may † apply our hearts unto wisdom.

† Heb. cause to come.

13 Return, O LORD, how long? and let it repent thee concerning thy servants.

14 O satisfy us early with thy mercy; that we may rejoice and be glad all our days.

15 Make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us, and the years wherein we have seen evil.

16 Let thy work appear unto thy servants, and thy glory unto their children.

17 And let the beauty of the LORD our God be upon us: and establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it.

PSALM XCI.

1 The state of the godly. 3 Their safety. 9 Their habitation. 11 Their servants. 14 Their friend; with the effects of them all.

2 I will say of the LORD, He is my refuge and my fortress: my God; in him will I trust.

3 Surely he shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler, and from the noisome pestilence.

4 He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust: his truth shall be thy shield and buckler.

5 Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night; nor for the arrow that flieth by day;

6 Nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday.

7 A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee.

8 Only with thine eyes shalt thou behold and see the reward of the wicked.

9 Because thou hast made the LORD which is my refuge, even the most high, thy habitation;

10 There shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling.

11 ª For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways. ª Matthew 4. 6. Luke 4. 10.

12 They shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone.

11. Who knoweth &c.] But who is there that duly lays to heart the effects of Thy anger, and considers that it is proportioned to our piety or disobedience? Travell. Moses here laments the insensibility of the Israelites under the judgments of God. They saw His wrath sweeping numbers away for their sins, and yet none studied to divert it, by fearing Him as they ought. Green.

13. Return, O Lord, &c.] Return, O Lord, at length, from Thy severity against us; and let Thy servants feel Thy gracious pardon. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

16. Let thy work &c.] He prays God to shew them and their posterity those glorious works which heretofore He had exerted in behalf of His people, and to shine upon and prosper what they were doing. Mudge.

17. And let the beauty &c.] Let the countenance of the Lord our God smile upon us; and prosper Thou the work of our hands. Green.

This Psalm is remarkable for affording us much useful instruction. In it we have the governour of a numerous people sequestering his mind from the management of publick affairs to private meditations; from beholding the present outward appearances, to considering the real nature and secret causes of things: in the midst of all the splendour and pomp, of all the stir and tumult about him, he observes the frailty of human condition, he discerns the providence of God justly ordering all; this he does not only in the way of wise consideration, but of serious devotion, moulding his observations into pious acknowledgments, and earnest prayers to God. Thus doth that great and good man teach us all, (more particularly men of high estate and much business,) to find opportunities of withdrawing their thoughts from those things which commonly amuse them, (the cares, the glories, the pleasures of this world,) and fixing them upon matters more improvable to devotion; the transitoriness of their condition, and their subjection to God's just providence; joining also to these meditations suitable acts of religion, due acknowledgments to God, and humble prayers. This was his practice among the greatest encumbrances that any man could have; and it should also be ours. Dr. Barrow.

Psalm XCI. The subject of this Psalm is the security, the success, and the reward of piety. If any reader will carefully weigh and consider the nature and dignity of the imagery contained in this Psalm, having due respect at the same time to the principles of the mystical allegory, I am persuaded he will agree with me, that something of a mystical design is concealed under the literal meaning of it. Without a question, the pious person, the king, or high priest perhaps, who in the literal sense is the principal character of the poem, is meant in reality to represent some greater and sublimer personage. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. He that dwelleth &c.] "To dwell in the secret place of the Most High," is a figurative expression, and signifies no more than to put ourselves under the Divine protection. Green.

3. Surely he shall deliver &c.] Leaving the former sentence unfinished, the Psalmist turns and addresses the same person whom he had been describing: "He indeed shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler, from the destroying pestilence." Bp. Lowth.

4—7. He shall cover thee &c.] This imagery is beautiful and diversified, and at the same time uncommonly solemn and sublime. Bp. Lowth.

8. Only with thine eyes &c.] The meaning is, that the righteous person all along spoken of, himself secure from the judgments of God, should in safety behold the destruction wrought by them upon impenitent and incorrigible sinners. Bp. Horne.

12. — lest thou dash &c.] Lest any the slightest harm should befall thee. Bp. Patrick. See the quotation of these words at Matth. iv. 6.

(Or, at)

13 Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder: the young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under feet.

14 Because he hath set his love upon me, therefore will I deliver him: I will set him on high, because he hath known my name.

15 He shall call upon me, and I will answer him: I will be with him in trouble; I will deliver him, and honour him.

PSALM XCIII.

The majesty, power, and holiness of Christ's kingdom.

13. Thou shalt tread &c.] The most noxious and venomous creatures shall have no power to hurt thee, but thou shalt subdue and trample them under foot. So shall Christ triumph over the "dragon, that old serpent," Rev. xx. 2, and He shall make His faithful servants victorious "over all the power of the enemy," Luke x. 19. Travell.

—— the dragon] See the notes on Deut. xxxii. 33. Psalm xliv. 19. and Lam. iv. 3.

14. Because he hath set &c.] In the former part of the Psalm the prophet spoke in his own person; here God Himself is plainly introduced as the speaker. Bp. Horne.

—— because he hath known my name.] Hath acknowledged My power, and relied on that alone for protection. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

How much man stands in need of the protection of Heaven, appears from a survey of the dangers to which he is continually exposed. Various are the terrours of the night, manifold the perils of the day; from diseases, whose infection makes its progress unobserved; from assaults, casualties, and accidents, which can neither be foreseen, nor guarded against. The soul has likewise her enemies ready to attack and surprise her at all hours. Avarice and ambition are abroad watching for her in the day; while concupiscence, like a pestilence, "walketh in darkness." In adversity she is disturbed by terrours; in prosperity still more endangered by pleasures. But Jesus Christ has overcome the world, to prevent us from being overcome by it. Bp. Horne.

Psalm XCII. This Psalm was appointed by the Jews to be used constantly on the sabbath day, as it was probably composed by David after God had given him rest from all his enemies. See 2 Sam. vii. 1. Fenton.

Ver. 4. —— thy work:] The following part of the Psalm shews, that by "God's work" here, the Psalmist means, His providence in the government of human affairs. Rosenmuller.

6. A brutish man — a fool] He who is ignorant of the final issue of things, and attendeth not to his eternal interest, is in Scripture language the "brutish man," and the "fool," who knoweth not the works, neither understandeth the designs of Heaven. Bp. Horne.

8. —— art most high] The expression is equivalent to God's sitting in heaven, and there overruling all the designs of men to His own glory, and the good of His servants. Mudge.

10. But my horn &c.] But, as the unicorn is superiour in power and strength to other creatures, so shall my authority be exalted above others; and I shall enjoy a continual course of happiness; like one who is newly anointed for the enjoyment of a feast. Travell.

—— unicorn:] See the note on Psalm xxii. 21.

13. Those that be planted &c.] Those who, like fruitful trees, are firmly rooted in their obedience to God's laws, shall be sheltered under His protection, and shall grow and increase in His service. Travell.

Thanksgiving is the duty, and ought to be the delight, of a Christian. It is his duty, as being the least return he can make to his great Benefactor: it ought to be his delight, for it is that of angels, and will be that of every grateful heart, whether in heaven or on earth. The "mercy" of God in promising salvation, and His "faithfulness" in accomplishing it, are inexhaustible subjects for morning and evening praises; every instrument should be strung, and every voice tuned to celebrate them, until day and night come to an end. But more especially should this be done on the sabbath day; which, when so employed, affords a lively resemblance of that eternal sabbath, to be hereafter kept by the redeemed in the kingdom of God. Bp. Horne.

Psalm XCIII. ver. 1. — clothed with majesty;] See the second note from Bp. Sanderson on Job xxix. 14.

3. The floods have lifted up, &c.] The meaning is, Our numerous enemies are risen up against us, and threaten to overwhelm us, like a furious storm. Travell. The rage and clamour of the enemies of God's people is frequently represented by the raging and roaring of the sea. Grees.

4. The Lord on high &c.] The King of heaven is stronger than all earthly potentates, and will subdue them under His feet. Poole.

This Psalm teaches us, that God rules with glory and magnificence over all the world; that His throne is established in righteousness; that His power infinitely exceeds that of all created beings: from whence we are to conclude, that He will reign for ever, for the good and advantage of His people, and of all those who serve Him and submit themselves to Him. Ostervald.

Psalm XCIV. In this prayer, the children of Israel represent to God the sad condition they were reduced to by the cruelty of their enemies, whose insolence, impiety, and blasphemies, they describe. The prophet nevertheless adores the wisdom and goodness of God, in the corrections wherewith He visits men; and foretels the deliverance of the righteous, and the destruction of the wicked. Ostervald. This is one of the Psalms appointed for the 1st service on the thirtieth of January.

12, 13. Blessed is the man &c.] Since, therefore, the schemes of the adversary are vain, and the counsel of Jehovah shall infallibly stand, happy is the man who, having learned from the Scriptures of truth the lessons of faith and patience, enjoys tranquillity of mind in time of trouble, while destruction is preparing for the impenitent. Bp. Horne.

15. But judgment shall return &c.] Although the justice of God may seem to be called in question, while the wicked flourish and the godly are afflicted; yet shall true righteousness and judgment return at the last, and all the upright shall follow God, and justify the ways of His providence. Travell. Bp. Patrick.

17. — my soul &c.] I had been laid in the grave among the silent dead. Bp. Nicholson.

20. Shall the throne &c.] Can it be possible, O Lord, that Thou shouldest take the part of oppression and injustice, and have any fellowship with those unrighteous judges, who oppress Thy servants under the pretence of law and justice? Bp. Patrick, Travell.

earnedness of one who knows he has a much nobler possession, of which no one can rob him: he will part with his riches without torment, he will keep them without anxiety, and use them so as to make them a blessing to himself and all around him. If the course of the world be disordered, and threaten the inhabitants thereof with calamity and distress, he will maintain his inward peace, knowing that "the Lord is King, be the earth never so unquiet." He will look with pleasure on all the scenes of futurity, being well assured that the world that now is, and the world that is to come, are in the hands of God. These are the comforts which, in the multitude of sorrows which surround us, will refresh the soul of a religious man; whilst they who forget God are spending a wretched life in lamenting over the misfortunes of this world, and are ending it to begin a more wretched life in the world that is to come. *Bp. 4. — the strength of the hills.] That is, the loftiest and largest hills. Dr. Hammond.

6. — let us kneel before the Lord.] It is most becoming, on all occasions, to express religious feelings of the mind by suitable actions of the body; and, especially, to "kneel before the Lord our Maker" when we humbly pour forth to His sacred name the tribute of our prayers and adorations.

7. For he is our God: &c.] "For He is our God, we are the people of His pasture, and the sheep of His hand, if ye will hear His voice to-day;" that is, if ye will be His obedient people, He will continue to be your God. Or else, the word translated "if" may be rendered in the optative form: "O that you would hear His voice to-day," saying unto you, "Harden not, &c." However this be, what follows to the end of the Psalm is undoubtedly spoken in the person of God Himself. Bp. Horne.

8, 9. Harden not &c.] These verses allude to what passed at the place called Massah, and Meribah, from the people there striving with their God, notwithstanding all the mighty works which He had wrought for them before their eyes, Exod. xvii. 7. Bp. Horne.

9. When your fathers tempted me] See the notes on Numb. xiv. 22.

10. — they have not known my ways:] They have not acknowledged My power and presence among them. Bp. Wilson.

11. — into my rest.] That is, into the land of Canaan, which was a type of heaven. Dr. Wells.

The wisdom and piety of the Church hath appointed this Psalm to be used every day in the beginning of our publick morning devotions, that there may be an union of all in heart and voice in the acknowledgment of God's mercy. It is from not acknowledging at all, or not acknowledging together, the superiority of God over all the world, and His power and justice of disposing of all things in it, that we fail in our humility towards Him, and in the exercise of Christian duties towards all men; and it is from not enough remembering the ingratitude and rebellion of our forefathers, and the grievous punishments they underwent for the same, the forcing God to reverse His own purpose, and compelling Him not to let them see the blessing He intended to them, that we are still so much inclined to murmur at His providence, and undervalue His power. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm XCVI. We learn from 1 Chron. xvi. that, on the removal of the ark to the place prepared for it on mount Zion, David delivered this Psalm to be sung in commemoration of God's special presence among them. It is a solemn invocation to the people to give glory to God, to acknowledge and adore Him, both as the Creator of all things, and the supreme and righteous Judge of the world. By common consent of Jews as well as Christians, this Psalm is applied to the times of the Messiah. Bp. Horne. Transl.

According to the Greek version, this Psalm was used at the dedication of the second temple, after the return of the Babylonish captivity. And it was somewhat altered to accommodate it to that purpose. Rosenmuller.

10—13. Say among the heathen &c.] Nothing can excel in sublimity the noble exultation of universal nature in these verses, where the whole animate and inanimate creation unite in the praises of their Maker. Poetry here seems to assume the highest tone of triumph and exultation, and to revel, if I may so express myself, in all the extravagance of joy. Bp. Lowth.

The exhortations in this Psalm are peculiarly applicable to the times of the Gospel, and describe the joy which good men should express, when they reflect that the several nations of the world are enlightened with the knowledge of the true God, and His Son Jesus Christ. These great privileges engage us to praise the Lord without ceasing; to worship Him with fear, humility, and joy; and to shew by our obedience, that the Lord does truly reign over us. Osterwald.

Psalm XCVII. In this Psalm the gracious assistance which God affords His servants, and the vengeance He takes upon the oppoers of His laws, are strongly described under the images of fire and tempest. But the Psalm is chiefly applicable to the spiritual reign of Christ, who should overthrow the idolatry of the heathen world, subdue all His enemies, and make the spiritual "daughters of Judah be glad, because of His judgments." Travell. This and the three following Psalms bear the name of David in the Greek version, and it is highly probable that they all come from the same hand as the ninety-sixth. Green.

Ver. 2. Clouds and darkness &c.] His throne is surrounded by impenetrable obscurity, but every thing that issues from it is dictated by unerring truth and justice. Travell.

3—5. A fire goeth before him, &c.] The judgments of God, and their effects upon the world, are here set forth, under the usual similitude of lightning and fire from heaven, causing the earth to tremble, and mountains to melt and dissolve away. Bp. Horne.

7. — worship him, all ye gods.] Let all that are called gods, whether on earth or in heaven, acknowledge and adore His sovereign authority. Bp. Patrick.

8. — the daughters of Judah] See note at Ps. xlviii. 11.

11. Light] That is, life, salvation, immortality.

This Psalm is not so much a description of God's dominion over the Jews as a prophecy of the dominion of Jesus Christ over all nations. The Holy Spirit here describes the effects which the coming of that kingdom would produce, and the joy which the faithful would feel when it should be manifested; wherefore it principally concerns us to improve those affections of zeal and devotion which are manifest in this divine song. We here learn, that the best way of praising God, and the true character of His worshippers, is to love Him, to hate evil, and to rejoice in Him continually. Osterwald.

Psalm XCVIII. The prophet, transported by the Spirit into the times of the Messiah, speaks in this Psalm of the great deliverance, as already effected.

There is a great similarity between this Psalm and the ninety-sixth. It makes part of our Evening Service, to be read after the first lesson.

"There is nothing that God expects more from us, nor takes as a greater argument of our gratitude to Him, than our signal and cheerful joy upon receiving any great benefit from Him: nor is the joy of our heart enough, though He sees the full extent of it; but He will have such a manifestation of it, that the people may know it as well as He. They who would stifle all their joy within their own breasts, and look upon solemn and publick manifestations of it, as a mixture of too much vanity in the praising and magnifying God, do not confirm themselves to David's precepts, or his example. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm XCIX. ver. 1. The Lord reigneth, &c.] Admiration, as it ever accompanies, so it is frequently the cause of sublimity. It produces great and magnificent conceptions and sentiments, and expresses them in language bold and elevated, in sentences concise, abrupt, and energetick. Of which this verse affords a striking instance. Bp. Lowth.

—— he sitteth between the cherubims;] He manifests His presence upon the mercy-seat between the cherubim. Bp. Hall.

—— let the earth be moved.] Let the earth bow down with fear. Travell.

3. The king's strength alsoloveth judgment, &c.] Although the "strength" of our King be infinite, yet it is never exerted, but in "righteousness" and just "judgment," which are His delight; they compose the firm basis of His throne, and direct His whole administration. Bp. Horne.

5. — worship at his footstool;] Worship before and towards His ark, which is His footstool. Dr. Wells.

6. Moses and Aaron &c.] In confirmation of what he had said, that God is holy, he mentions Moses, and Aaron, and Samuel, as three of the greatest eminence who were devoted to His service: to them He had shewn Himself to be God by very remarkable instances of favour, though at the same time He punished the infidelities of the people. Modge.

8. Thou answeredst them, &c.] The construction of the verse seems to be this: "O Lord our God, Thou didst hear, or answer them;" that is, the aforementioned typical mediators, Moses, Aaron, and Samuel; "Thou becamest a forbearing God for them," or, at their intercession; and that, "even when punishing," or, when Thou hadst begun to punish, "the wicked deeds of them;" that is, not of Moses, Aaron, and Samuel, but of the people, who had transgressed, and for whom they interceded. This was the case when Moses interceded for the idolaters, Exod. xxxii. 32; Aaron for the schismaticks, Numb. xvi. 47; and Samuel for the whole nation, 1 Sam. vii. 9. Bp. Horne.

In this Psalm we learn, that it is the duty of those who have the happiness to know God, and to be the subjects of His kingdom, to fear Him, to reverence His Majesty, to worship Him with the profoundest humility, and without ceasing to celebrate His name, which is great, terrible, and holy. We also see in this Psalm, that God did formerly deliver the Israelites, when Moses, Aaron, and Samuel called upon Him; and that He also took vengeance on them for their sins, when they offended Him. This shews, that as God is always good, He is also just, and has sometimes made men feel the marks of His mercy, and sometimes of His wrath, to engage them to love and fear Him. Cotterill.

promises, through all generations. It is used in the daily service of the Church, as a general acknowledgment of gratitude for the Divine blessings, and as an excitement to the congregation to join in the praise of God. Travell.

Ver. 4. — into his gates] That is, into the gates of His sanctuary. Bp. Patrick.

Instructed by this Psalm, we ought ever to pray that all nations of the world may worship the Lord, and glorify His name; and that to this end God would be pleased to make Himself known unto them, and give them the knowledge of His Son, Jesus Christ. And, in order to excite ourselves to the duty of praising Him, we should consider that He is our Creator, that "we are His people, and the sheep of His pasture;" that He has heaped abundant favours on us, not only of nature, but of grace, and given to His Church the clearest tokens of His goodness and mercy. Ostervald.

Psalm CI. David here appeals to God for his love of mercy, justice, and integrity; and publishes to the whole world his abhorrence of villainy, treachery, calumny, and pride; and then professes that he would, to the utmost of his power, discountenance and destroy all men of that character; as he would, on the contrary, favour and protect all those that were truly religious and faithful. Dr. Delaney. This is one of the Psalms appointed for the inauguration service of our kings.

8. I will early destroy &c.] The meaning may be, "Every morning I will be destroying," &c. The Hebrew courts of justice were held in the morning; see 2 Sam. xv. 2. Jer. xxi. 12. Green. Or, the word here rendered "early," may mean "soon." Merrick. Or, "assiduously." Rosenmüller.

How noble a declaration was this in a great king! and how worthy the imitation of all the princes of the earth! How noble a manner too was this of publishing declarations to the people, in solemn and sublime hymns to Almighty God; set to musick, and sung with joy and transport through the land; at once vindicating innocence, and propagating piety! Let this be numbered among the felicities peculiar to David. Dr. Delaney.

Psalm CII. This Psalm seems, by the thirteenth verse, to have been composed about the time that God had promised a restoration to His people from their captivity in Babylon; namely, after a term of seventy years: it strongly describes the miseries they suffered during their captivity, and begs God at length to take pity on Jerusalem, and restore it, with the temple, to its former glory; for this would be such an illustrious proof of His divinity, that it would draw all nations to do Him homage; and particularly His attention to this prayer of the poor prisoner should be recorded for His honour to future generations. Mudge. Penitential sorrow being a principal subject of this Psalm, it is suitable to the service of Ash Wednesday. Travell.

6. I am like &c.] The sorrowful man is naturally desirous of retiring from the world, to vent his complaints in solitude, and to pass the nights in watchfulness and prayer. Bp. Horne.

7. I watch,] That is, cares and sorrows so disturb me that I cannot sleep. Rosenmüller.

—— as a sparrow alone] The bird here mentioned seems to be the solitary sparrow, which is thus described in Brooke's Natural History: "It usually sits alone on the tops of old buildings, and roofs of churches, singing very sweetly, especially in the morning, and is an oriental bird." Parkhurst.

9. For I have eaten ashes &c.] I am so humbled by my affliction, that, like a mournful penitent, I lie down among the dust and ashes, which mingle themselves with my food, as tears do with my drink. Travell. Bp. Patrick.

14. — take pleasure in her stones,] That is, bear an affection to her ruins. Green.

—— and favour the dust thereof.] Rather, "and compassionate her dust."

16. When the Lord &c.] From ver. 16 to 22 inclusive, the Psalmist seems to speak prophetically of the Messiah.

25. Of old hast thou &c.] The application of this and the following verses to Jesus Christ, in the Epistle to the Hebrews, is at once a proof of His Divinity, and of the inspiration of the Psalms. See Heb. i. 10. Travell.

28. The children of thy servants &c.] Whatever may be the fate of the present generation, whether they may live to see the accomplishment of all that has been foretold, or not, yet the word of God standeth sure; there shall be always a Church, and an holy seed, to whom the promise shall be made good. Bp. Horne.

If we had a true devotion in our hearts to form and compound our prayers, and a fervent motion from our hearts to pour them out, we might reasonably as well as piously believe, that every prayer we so send up to heaven would prove effectual, and bring down that from thence to us, for which we pray. The Church hath provided an excellent form of devotion and prayer for all men to concur in at the publick service and worship of God: and whoever reads and considers that form, will find himself best prepared for his private devotions; and may very profitably transplant expressions from thence into his most private and occasional addresses to the Divine Providence. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm CIII. In this Psalm David blesses God for His goodness towards himself and the Israelites; celebrates His great mercy and tender compassion towards His people; and invites all creatures to join with him in praising the name of the Lord. Green. A peculiar strain of tenderness and beauty pervades this Psalm.

tion; who crowneth thee with lovingkindness and tender mercies;

5 Who satisfieth thy mouth with good things; so that thy youth is renewed like the eagle's.

6 The LORD executeth righteousness and judgment for all that are oppressed.

PSALM CIV.

1 A meditation upon the mighty power, 7 and wonderful providence of God. 31 God's glory is eternal. 33 The prophet voweth perpetually to praise God.

BLESS the LORD, O my soul. O LORD my God, thou art very great; thou art clothed with honour and majesty.

2 Who coverest thyself with light as with a garment: who stretchest out the heavens like a curtain:

3 Who layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters: who maketh the clouds his chariot: who walketh upon the wings of the wind:

4 [a] Who maketh his angels spirits; his ministers a flaming fire:

[a] Heb. 1. 7.

Ver. 5. — thy youth is renewed like the eagle's.] That is, as the eagle's vigour is wont to be, after it has renewed its feathers. Dr. Wells. The youth of an eagle is no otherwise renewed than by the succession of new feathers to old ones. In like manner the serpent was said by the Romans "to put off old age" when it cast its skin. Rosenmuller.

9, 10. He will not always chide: &c.] God's chastisements are some of the most eminent proofs of His mercy. They are sent to reclaim us from eternal punishment. They continue not always, but are removed when they have done their work; and while they last, are as nothing in comparison of those heavy stripes which our sins have deserved. Bp. Horne.

12. As far as the east &c.] That is, He hath entirely remitted the punishment due to our manifold offences. Bp. Patrick.

13. Like as a father &c.] See Isa. xlix. 15.

This is one of the most excellent songs of thanksgiving in the whole Book of Psalms. David here seems affected with the highest strains of devotion, and the most lively sense of gratitude. He here teaches us by his example to bless God, not only with our mouth, but with our whole heart, and with all the powers of our soul; to cherish the remembrance of all His mercies, and to take delight in rehearsing them, and praising Him continually. The prophet here celebrates particularly the infinite mercy of God, who, knowing that we are but dust, bears with us, and does not render to us what our sins deserve; and entertains the same compassion and kindness as a father does for his children. But he teaches us at the same time, that the Divine goodness is displayed only in behalf of those that fear Him and reverence Him; and that His mercy extends only to them that "keep His covenant, and remember His commandments to do them." Ostervald.

Psalm CIV. This Psalm demonstrates the glory of the infinite Creator, from the wisdom, beauty, and variety of His works. The poet adorns this noble subject with the clearest and most splendid colouring of language; and with imagery the most magnificent, lively, diversified, and pleasing; at the same time select, and happily adapted to the subject. There is nothing of the kind extant, indeed, nothing can be conceived more perfect than this hymn, whether it be considered with respect to its intrinsick beauties, or as a model of that species of composition. Miraculous exertions of the Divine power have something in them which at first strikes the inattentive mind with a strong sentiment of sublimity and awe: but the true subject of praise, the most worthy of God, and the best adapted to impress upon the heart of man a fervent and permanent sense of piety, is drawn from the contemplation of His power in the creation of this boundless universe, His wisdom in arranging and adorning it, His providence in sustaining it, and His mercy in the regulation of its minutest parts, and in ordering and directing the affairs of men. Bp. Lowth. The similitude between the natural and spiritual creation may, perhaps, point out the reason why the Church hath appointed this Psalm to be used on Whit Sunday. Bp. Horne. In most of the old versions this Psalm is attributed to David.

Ver. 2. — like a curtain.] Or, as a canopy. Mudge. As the curtain of a pavilion, or tent.

3. Who layeth &c.] That is, the clouds make the flooring of His heavens. Mudge.

should conceive the meaning of them to be, that God employs the elements of air and fire, the winds and the lightnings, as His messengers and ministers, to execute His commands upon the earth. But the Apostle, Heb. i. 7, informs us, that they have a farther reference to immaterial angels; either because those angels often appeared in the likeness, or because they were endued with the properties, of wind and flame. Intellectual beings of the highest order in the realms above, are as ready to fulfil the word of Jehovah, as are the elements of this lower world. Bp. Horne.

5. — that it should not &c.] These words do by no means imply, that the earth is stationary, or that it is eternal; but only that it is so constructed as to answer the end, and to last the time for which it was created. Bp. Horne.

7. At thy rebuke] At Thy omnipotent word. Bp. Patrick.

8. They go up &c.] Rather, They go up mountains, they go down vallies, to the places Thou hast appointed for them. Edwards.

15. — and oil to make] See the note on Psalm xxiii. 5.

17. — as for the stork, &c.] The storks breed plentifully in Barbary every summer. They make their nests with dry twigs of trees, which they place upon the highest parts of old ruins or houses, in the canals of ancient aqueducts, and frequently (so familiar they are, by being never molested) upon the very tops of their mosques and dwelling-houses. The fir and other trees likewise (when these are wanting) "are a dwelling for the stork." Dr. Shaw.

26. — leviathan,] This word, which in Job xli. signifies the crocodile, and in Psalm lxxiv. 14. is used allegorically for the Egyptians, and in Is. xxvii. 1. for other mighty oppressors of God's church, appears to be used in this place for a whale, or large fish of the cetaceous kind. Parkhurst.

30. Thou sendest forth thy spirit, &c.] That Spirit of Thine, which moved, at the first, upon the face of the waters, is still sent forth by Thee, for the renewing of those several creatures, whose daily mortality requires the supply of a continual succession and propagation. Bp. Hall.

32. He looketh on the earth, &c.] At His presence the very earth trembles, and the mountains, as our fathers saw at mount Sinai, are full of fire and smoke. Bp. Patrick.

monstrations of the infinite wisdom and power of God, they may serve to us as so many arguments exciting to the constant fear of God, and to a steady hearty obedience to all His laws. And thus we may make these works as serviceable to our spiritual interest, as they all are to our life and temporal interest. For if, whenever we see them, we would consider that these are the works of our Divine Lord and Master, to whom we are to be accountable for all our thoughts, words, and works, and that in those we may see His infinite power and wisdom; this would check us in sinning, and excite us to serve and please Him who is above all control, and who hath our life and whole happiness in His power. Dr. Dersham.

Psalm CV. The former part of this Psalm was composed by David, upon his having brought the ark to Zion, 1 Chron. xvi. 28. — and they rebelled not &c.] Some interpreters suppose the word "they" refers to Moses and Aaron. Dimock, Rosenmuller.

41. — they inherited the labour of the people;] They took possession of the cities, towns, fields, and vineyards, which the labour of others (that is, the Canaanites) had built and planted. Bp. Patrick.

45. — Praise ye the Lord.] This is a literal translation from the Hebrew word Alleluia, or Hallelujah, (see the margin.) This word occurs at the beginning or at the end of many psalms. Alleluia was sung on solemn days of rejoicing: "and all her streets (that is, the streets of Jerusalem) shall say Alleluia," says Tobit, speaking of the rebuilding of Jerusalem, Tob. xiii. 18. St. John in the Revelation says, "I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto the Lord our God," ch. xix. 1: see also ver. 3, 4, 6. This expression of joy and praise was transferred at an early period from the synagogue to the church: and it is still occasionally used in devotional psalmody. Calmet.

Who can behold the army of Divine judgments set forth in dreadful array before him, (ver. 28—36.) without trembling very exceedingly at that Power which is able to send them, singly or in conjunction, upon a sinful land! Who can reflect upon their number and variety, without adoring that goodness, patience, and longsuffering, which tried so many different methods, and waited so long, to lead the offenders to repentance! Bp. Horne. This hymn was designed to perpetuate among the Israelites the remembrance of God's mercies, and to excite their gratitude. Though these events do not directly regard Christians, yet they ought to preserve the remembrance of them, as affording matter for the most edifying and instructive meditations. But it is our duty, above all, to take occasion, from what is contained in this Psalm, to raise our thoughts to the consideration of those signal mercies and spiritual blessings which God has communicated to us, by making with us a new covenant in Jesus Christ; by delivering us from the captivity of sin, of the devil, and of death, and by receiving us into His church. Osterwald.

Psalm CVI. This Psalm, written in captivity, may have been intended to confirm the faith of the young, and to encourage their hopes of restoration to their native land. It not only details the judgments inflicted on the disobedience of the Jewish people, but also the frequent instances of Divine mercy which uniformly followed their repentance.

38 And shed innocent blood, even the blood of their sons and of their daughters, whom they sacrificed unto the idols of Canaan: and the land was polluted with blood.

39 Thus were they defiled with their own works, and went a whoring with their own inventions.

40 Therefore was the wrath of the LORD kindled against his people, insomuch that he abhorred his own inheritance.

41 And he gave them into the hand of the heathen; and they that hated them ruled over them.

If we accustomed ourselves to take a just survey of ourselves, of the frowardness and the pride of our natures, we should frequently think it fit and necessary to invert our prayers, to deprecate God's favours and mercies, and pray for His corrections and judgments, or rather we should look upon His judgments and mortifications as His greatest and most transcendent mercies. If men took that view of themselves, which others take of them in their highest prosperities, when God pours down His blessings upon them; observed the haughtiness of their looks, gait, and gestures, their proud behaviour towards all who have need of them, and their servile behaviour towards all of whom they stand in need, which every body else but themselves observes; and considered how very little they used to think of God in those seasons; and then, if they reflected upon their own modest behaviour upon some disappointment they had sustained, how often they used to pray to God in their anguish and affliction, and how fervent their devotions have then been, they would confess how much better men they are in the latter than in the former condition, and how much more gracious God hath been to them in the one than in the other visitation. Lord Clarendon.

The end of the fourth Book of Psalms.

Psalm CVII. This Psalm may undoubtedly be enumerated among the most elegant monuments of antiquity; and it is chiefly indebted for its elegance to the general plan and conduct of the poem. It celebrates the goodness and mercy of God towards mankind, as demonstrated in the immediate assistance and comfort He affords in the greatest calamities to those who devoutly implore His aid: in the first place, to those who wander in the desert, and who encounter the terrours of famine; next, to those who are in bondage; to those who are afflicted with disease; and finally, to those who are tossed about upon the ocean. The prolixity of the argument is occasionally relieved by narration; and examples are superadded of the Divine severity in punishing the wicked, as well as of His benignity to the devout and virtuous; and both the narrative and preceptive parts are recommended to the earnest contemplation of considerate minds. Bp. Lowth. This Psalm is introduced into our Forms of Prayer to be used at Sea, as a thanksgiving after a storm.

37. — yield fruits of increase.] The land of Canaan was fruitful beyond measure; see Deut. viii. 7, &c. Dimock.

39. Again, they are minished &c.] At another time, God sees fit to alter the course of His providence, to lessen their numbers, and to humble them by various afflictions and calamities, or by the hands of tyrannical oppressors. Travell, Bp. Patrick.

40. — causeth them to wander &c.] The meaning is either, He bringeth them into difficulties, so that they know not what course to take; or, He banisheth them from their courts and kingdoms, and forceth them to flee into desolate wildernesses. Poole.

42. The righteous shall see &c.] Two consequences will follow from this alternate display of the mercy and the judgment of God. The righteous, finding themselves still the object of the former, will have cause to rejoice and give thanks; and the wicked, when visited with the latter, will be forced by their silence at least to own that their punishment is just. Bp. Horne.

43. Whoso is wise, &c.] To take notice of the providences of God is the most effectual way to make men wise, as it is a proof of wisdom. Bp. Wilson.

This very instructive Psalm serves to teach us, that God does wisely dispense all that happens to men; and that when they are fugitives and captives, sick, and in danger of perishing, afflicted with famine, or any other distress, it is He that makes them pass through all those trials, that He may engage them to call upon Him, and have recourse to His power and goodness. It therefore shews us, that it is the duty of persons in affliction to apply themselves to God by humble and fervent prayer for deliverance out of all their misfortunes; that when men cry to God in their distress, and turn to Him, He takes pity on them, and delivers them from all their troubles; and that it is the duty of those who, by the help of God, have escaped any great sickness, danger of death, or other afflictions, to shew their gratitude to Him all their lives, and to celebrate His lovingkindness before all. Ostervald.

This is a Psalm of thanksgiving, in which David praises God for His great goodness to him, in having made him king, and crowned him with victory; and beseeches Him to complete his conquests over the remainder of his enemies. first five verses of this Psalm are the same, without any material difference, as the last five of the fifty-seventh Psalm: and the rest are the same as the last eight verses of the sixtieth Psalm. The reader is therefore referred to the explanation already given of those Psalms. Travell.

Psalm CIX. In this Psalm David, having been unjustly accused and violently persecuted by his enemies, foretels, with a prophetick spirit, the Divine vengeance upon them. St. Peter (Acts i. 20.) hath taught us to apply the eighth verse to the traitor Judas; and indeed the severity of the judgments, and the extent of the calamities here denounced, are suitable to the guilt and punishment of our Saviour's persecutors in general. With respect to the imprecations, see the note on Ps. v. 10. The twenty-eighth chapter of Deuteronomy may be considered as a kind of commentary on this Psalm. Travell. There are many passages in the Book of Psalms, especially a considerable part of the 109th, that have given offence to well-meaning persons, as savouring too much of private resentment, and inconsistent with that charity, which peculiarly marks the Christian dispensation. Many attempts have been made to remove this difficulty: but the most satisfactory method appears to be, to consider the verbs in the future tense, so that the passages may be looked upon as so many denunciations of the punishments, that God would inflict on the general or individual adversaries of His church and people. Thus at the seventh verse, "When he shall be judged, he shall go forth convicted, and his prayers shall be for sin," &c. Wintle.

The person particularly pointed at in this Psalm was probably Doeg the Edomite, who slew the Lord's priests, and endeavoured to destroy him whom God had anointed king over Israel, 1 Sam. xxii. Archdeacon Randolph.

Ver. 4. For my love &c.] While I pray for them, they in return for my love falsely accuse me. Green.

6. Set thou &c.] The true reading probably is, A wicked person shall be set over him, (that is, to judge him,) and an adversary shall stand at his right hand. Dimock.

—— over him.] That is, either over all nine enemies; for the singular number is sometimes used with a plural sense: or rather, over one particular enemy, who was worse than any of the rest, more implacable and inexcusable. Poole.

—— Satan] An adversary. See the margin.

—— stand at his right hand.] This is an allusion to the practice of the courts of justice among the Jews, where the accuser stood at the "right hand" of the accused. Rosenmüller.

7. —— and let his prayer become sin.] His prayer would be abomination in the sight of the Lord, as being offered without true contrition and repentance, without faith, hope, or charity. Bp. Horne.

9, 10. Let his children &c.] Thus shall his wickedness entail misery upon his wretched widow and his orphan children: they shall lead a life of wandering from place to place, supporting themselves by begging alms, and seeking relief out of their miserable habitations. Travell.

15 Let them be before the LORD continually, that he may cut off the memory of them from the earth.

16 Because that he remembered not to shew mercy, but persecuted the poor and needy man, that he might even slay the broken in heart.

18. — like water, &c.] These expresions admirably mark out all adhering rooted curse, which penetrated the body, as the water which one drinks, and as the oil with which one is rubbed: they have swallowed cursing like water; see Job xv. 6. Prov. iv. 17. they are penetrated by it, as by the oil wherewith they have been anointed. Calmet.

19. — a girdle &c.] As the people of the East have ever been accustomed to wear long and loose garments, they are obliged to tuck them up, and fasten them by a girdle or sash, when they are travelling or at work. See 1 Kings xviii. 46. John xiii. 4. Travell.

21. — do thou for me,] Take my part. Bp. Patrick.

23. — tossed up and down as the locust.] The swarms of locusts are so large and numerous in Barbary, that they fly in the air like a succession of clouds. When the wind blows briskly, so that these swarms are crouded by others, or thrown one upon another, we have a lively idea of this comparison of the Psalmist, of being "tossed up and down as the locust." Dr. Shaw.

Especial care should be taken that we do not pervert this Psalm in a criminal and impious manner, by imagining we are at any time allowed to wish that the vengeance of God may fall on those who hate us and do us hurt. David here speaks in the quality of a king chosen by God, and of a prophet; he rather foretold than desired the destruction of his enemies: he even returned them good for evil, as he himself says, and love for hatred. But, above all, let us remember that a Christian should hate no man; that the character we bear, as disciples of Jesus Christ, obliges us to love all men, even our greatest enemies, to pray for them with all our heart, and to wish and do them all the good in our power. Outervald.

Psalm CX. In this Psalm David prophesieth concerning the exaltation of Christ; the sceptre of His kingdom; the character of His subjects; His everlasting priesthood; His tremendous victories and judgments; and the means of His obtaining both kingdom and priesthood, by His sufferings and resurrection. Bp. Horne. This Psalm is with good reason appointed for the service of Christmas-day.

Hall.*

—— thy footstool.] This expression is borrowed from the eastern custom of conquerors putting their feet upon the necks of their enemies. See Josh. x. 24. The Divinity of our Saviour is clearly deducible from this verse. See Mark xii. 36, &c. Dimock.

2. — the rod of thy strength] The "rod," or sceptre, of Christ's "strength" is His word, accompanied by His Spirit. Bps. Horne and Nicholson.

Then it is that they appear "in the beauties of holiness," adorned with humility, faith, hope, love, and all the graces of the Spirit. Bp. Horne.

Secker.* See the note on Gen. xiv. 18.

5. — shall strike through &c.] Jesus destroyed both the Jewish and Roman persecutors, and will destroy all the enemies of His Church. Abp. Secker. See Ps. ii. 9. and xlv. 5. Rev. xix. 15.

6. He shall judge &c.] He shall convince the heathen world, that He is their Lawgiver and their Judge. He shall take severe vengeance on those who persecute His subjects, and shall crush the supreme power in various countries. Bp. Patrick.

7. He shall drink &c.] By "drinking of the brook by the way," allusion seems to be made to the support and refreshment which Christ experienced. The phrase relates, it is probable, to those consolations which He received at the beginning of His great conflict with the powers of darkness, particularly in His agony, when there appeared to Him an angel from heaven strengthening Him, Luke xxii. 43. Merrick, Bp. Lowth.

We should remember on reading this Psalm, that we have a Priest in heaven, who stands continually pleading the merits of His sacrifice once offered on the cross. Oblation, intercession, and benediction are the three great branches of the sacerdotal office, which our great High Priest now exercises for us, and in the exercise of which the Father has condescended in the most awful manner to promise, that He will hear Him, and accept Him in our behalf. His priesthood is not like that of Aaron, transient, figurative, and successive, but real and effective, fixed and incommunicable, eternal and unchangeable. He is "a Priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek." Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXI. The author of this Psalm celebrates the majesty and goodness of God displayed in a very eminent manner in the wonderful things He had done for, and the signal blessings He had bestowed upon, the Jewish nation, of which this sacred hymn seems to have been designed as a short memorial. Edwards.

This is one of the proper Psalms appointed by the Church to be read on Easter-day.

Ver. 1. Praise ye the Lord.] These words are the title to the Psalm, and not part of the Psalm itself, as in the beginning of Ps. cxii. cxiii. Bps. Patrick and Lowth. See the note on Ps. cv. 45.

7. The works of his hands &c.] In all God's dispensations towards His faithful servants, and towards His impenitent adversaries, we admire and adore His "verity" in the performance of His promises to the former, and His "justice" in executing vengeance on the latter. Thus the time of fulfilling His promise to Abraham came not till the iniquity of the Amorites was full. Bp. Horne.

9. He sent redemption unto his people:] He means that great deliverance out of Egypt, which was a type and pledge of that greater and higher redemption by Christ. Poole.

We ought to join our praises to those which are offered to God in this hymn; we have even more reason than the faithful of old had to confess that the works of the Lord are great and wonderful; that He is merciful, righteous, and full of compassion; that He has remembered His covenant, and sent salvation and redemption to His people. These inestimable blessings should excite us to declare His goodness and marvellous works before men, and particularly in the assembly of the faithful. Osterwald.

Psalm CXII. This Psalm is a kind of commentary upon the last verse of the former Psalm, enumerating the various degrees of happiness which they enjoy, who fear God and keep His commandments; and concluding with a description of the envy and wretchedness of the ungodly. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

2 His seed shall be mighty upon earth: the generation of the upright shall be blessed.

3 Wealth and riches shall be in his house: and his righteousness endureth for ever.

4 Unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness: he is gracious, and full of compassion, and righteous.

5 A good man sheweth favour, and lendeth: he will guide his affairs with † discretion. † Heb. judgment.

6 Surely he shall not be moved for ever: the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance.

7 He shall not be afraid of evil tidings: his heart is fixed, trusting in the LORD.

8 His heart is established, he shall not be afraid, until he see his desire upon his enemies.

9 [a] He hath dispersed, he hath given to the poor; his righteousness endureth for ever; his horn shall be exalted with honour. [a] 2 Cor. 9. 9.

10 The wicked shall see it, and be grieved; he shall gnash with his teeth, and melt away: the desire of the wicked shall perish.

PSALM CXIII.

1 An exhortation to praise God for his excellency, 5 for his mercy.

† PRAISE ye the LORD. Praise, O ye servants of the LORD, praise the name of the LORD. † Heb. Hallelujah.

2 [a] Blessed be the name of the LORD from this time forth and for evermore. [a] Dan. 2. 20.

3 [b] From the rising of the sun unto the going down of the same the LORD's name is to be praised. [b] Mal. 1. 11.

4 The LORD is high above all nations, and his glory above the heavens.

5 Who is like unto the LORD our God, who † dwelleth on high, † Heb. exalteth himself to dwell.

6 Who humbleth himself to behold the things that are in heaven, and in the earth!

7 [c] He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth the needy out of the dunghill; [c] 1 Sam. 2. 8. Psal. 107. 41.

8 That he may set him with princes, even with the princes of his people.

9 He maketh the barren woman † to keep house, and to be a joyful mother of children. Praise ye the LORD. † Heb. to dwell in an house.

PSALM CXIV.

An exhortation, by the example of the dumb creatures, to fear God in his church.

WHEN [a] Israel went out of Egypt, the house of Jacob from a people of strange language; [a] Exodus 12. 2.

2 Judah was his sanctuary, and Israel his dominion.

3 [b] The sea saw it, and fled: [c] Jordan was driven back. [b] Exodus 14. 21. [c] Josh. 3. 13.

4 The mountains skipped like rams, and the little hills like lambs.

4. — righteous.] "Righteous" here seems to include the idea of generosity and charity; a man generous upon principles of religion. Mudge.

6. — the righteous shall be &c.] That is, Eminently good men do commonly leave a good name behind them, and transmit a grateful memory of themselves to afterages. Abp. Tillotson.

9. — his horn &c.] God shall give him an increase of true honour, and abundantly reward his liberality. Bp. Hall. See note at 1 Sam. ii. 1.

The character which the Psalmist here gives of good men is, that they fear the Lord; that they take great delight in His commandments; that they are just and sincere; that they conduct all their affairs with uprightness; that they are kind and full of compassion, and love to give alms to the poor. He afterwards teaches us, that those who live thus are perfectly happy; that God blesses them in their persons, in their posterity, and in their possessions; that they enjoy peace of conscience; that they fear no evil, always trusting in the Lord; and that their righteousness and their memory shall remain for ever. These are very important instructions, which should powerfully encourage us to the study and practice of piety. Ostervald.

Psalm CXIII. The servants of God are here exhorted to praise Him at all times, and in all places, on account of His power and glory, His mercy in redeeming man, and making the Gentile Church to be a joyful mother of children. This Psalm is appointed to be used on Easter-day. Bp. Horne.

Ver. 3. From the rising &c.] Signifying, either from morning to evening, or from east to west. Merrick.

6. Who humbleth himself &c.] Highly as our Lord is exalted above this system, above this heaven and this earth of ours, yet He condescendeth to regard every thing that passes here, and to make us, the inhabitants of this lower world, and, for our sakes, all the other creatures in it, the objects of His peculiar care, and paternal love. Bp. Horne.

Such is God's mercy to the poor sons of Adam in their fallen state, that from the lowest and most abject condition, from the pollutions of sin, and from the dishonour of the grave, He raiseth them to righteousness and holiness, to glory and immortality; He setteth them on high, with the inhabitants of the heavenly Jerusalem, "with the princes of His people," the leaders of the armies above, with angels and archangels before His throne. What is the exaltation of the meanest beggar from a dunghil to an earthly diadem, when compared with that of human nature from the grave to the throne of God! Here is honour worthy our ambition; honour, after which all are alike invited to aspire: which all may obtain who strive worthily and lawfully; and of which, when once obtained, nothing can ever deprive the possessors. Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXIV. This is another of the Psalms appointed by our Church to be read on Easter-day. It celebrates the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, and the miracles wrought for that people, prefiguring the redemption of our nature from sin and death, and the wonders of mercy and love wrought for us by Jesus Christ. Bp. Horne.

Ver. 1, 2. When Israel went &c.] When Jehovah delivered Israel from the bondage of Egypt, He chose them for His peculiar people: His presence resided in their camp, as in a "sanctuary," or temple; and He ruled them as an earthly king exerciseth sovereignty in his "dominions." Bp. Horne.

4. The mountains skipped &c.] The mountains of the wilderness shook and were moved sensibly at His terrible presence, when He delivered the law to His people, Exod. xix. Bp. Hall.

5 What ailed thee, O thou sea, that thou fleddest? thou Jordan, that thou wast driven back?

6 Ye mountains, that ye skipped like rams; and ye little hills, like lambs?

7 Tremble, thou earth, at the presence of the LORD, at the presence of the God of Jacob;

[a] Exodus xvii. 6. Numb. xx. 11. 8 [a] Which turned the rock into a standing water, the flint into a fountain of waters.

PSALM CXV.

1 Because God is truly glorious, 4 and idols are vanity, 9 he exhorteth to confidence in God. 12 God is to be blessed for his blessings.

NOT unto us, O LORD, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake.

2 Wherefore should the heathen say, [a] Where is now their God?

[a] Ps. 42. 10. & 79. 10. [b] Ps. 135. 6. 3 [b] But our God is in the heavens: he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased.

[c] Ps. 135. 15. 4 [c] Their idols are silver and gold, the work of men's hands.

5 They have mouths, but they speak not: eyes have they, but they see not:

6 They have ears, but they hear not: noses have they, but they smell not:

7 They have hands, but they handle not: feet have they, but they walk not: neither speak they through their throat.

8 They that make them are like unto them; so is every one that trusteth in them.

9 O Israel, trust thou in the LORD: he is their help and their shield.

10 O house of Aaron, trust in the LORD: he is their help and their shield.

11 Ye that fear the LORD, trust in the LORD: he is their help and their shield.

12 The LORD hath been mindful of us: he will bless us; he will bless the house of Israel; he will bless the house of Aaron.

13 He will bless them that fear the LORD, both small † and great. † Heb. with.

14 The LORD shall increase you more and more, you and your children.

15 Ye are blessed of the LORD which made heaven and earth.

16 The heaven, even the heavens, are the LORD'S: but the earth hath he given to the children of men.

17 The dead praise not the LORD, neither any that go down into silence.

[d] Dan. 2. 20. 18 [d] But we will bless the LORD from this time forth and for evermore. Praise the LORD.

PSALM CXVI.

1 The psalmist professeth his love and duty to God for his deliverance. 12 He studieth to be thankful.

I LOVE the LORD, because he hath heard my voice and my supplications.

2 Because he hath inclined his ear unto me, therefore will I call upon him † as long as I live. † Heb. in my days.

[a] Ps. 18. 5. 3 [a] The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell † gat hold upon me: † Heb. found me. I found trouble and sorrow.

4 Then called I upon the name of the LORD; O LORD, I beseech thee, deliver my soul.

5 Gracious is the LORD, and righteous; yea, our God is merciful.

6 The LORD preserveth the simple: I was brought low, and he helped me.

If the Divine presence hath such an effect upon inanimate matter, how ought it to operate on rational and accountable beings! Let us be afraid with an holy fear at the presence of God, in the world by His providence, and by His Spirit in our consciences; that so we may have hope and courage in the day when He shall arise to shake terribly the earth; when "every island shall flee away, and the mountains shall be no more found." Rev. xvi. 20. Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXV. This Psalm has always been used as an hymn of thanksgiving for victories, from the earliest Christian ages. Dr. Delaney. This and the three following Psalms were sung by the Jews, after eating the passover, and were called the great hallelujah. Bp. Wilson.

Ver. 3. — he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased.] He doeth whatsoever He pleaseth. Mudge, Street.

10. O house of Aaron,] This expression comprehends the priests and Levites. Travell.

11. Ye that fear the Lord,] This seems to comprehend those, all the world over, that worshipped the one supreme God. Mudge.

12 The Lord hath been mindful of us:] Rather, The Lord remembereth us. Mudge.

From the former part of this Psalm we learn, that God is induced to do good to men, not by any merit on their part, but by His own pure mercy, which ought therefore to be the foundation of our trust when we direct our prayer to Him. In the latter part we see how happy those are who worship God and fear Him; since the Psalmist assures us, that God is the help and buckler of all those that trust in Him, and that His favours are extended to them and their posterity. These glorious promises should prevail on us more effectually to fear God, and to expect all our happiness from His blessing alone. Osterwald.

Psalm CXVI. This is a Psalm of thanksgiving for some special deliverance from grievous calamity, wherein the Psalmist acknowledges his gratitude to the Divine mercy, describes his extreme distress and happy deliverance out of it, and determines from henceforth to serve and praise the Lord, from whom he had received such signal benefits. It is highly applicable to the case of those who have been blessed with deliverance from sickness and distress, and therefore the Church has appointed a considerable portion of it to be used in the solemn Thanksgiving of Women after Child-birth. Travell.

This Psalm has frequent and quick changes of scenes and persons. Mudge.

Ver. 3. — the pains of hell] That is, such pains as had almost brought me to the grave. Dr. Wells.

6. — the simple:] The "simple" are here opposed to the crafty, who use indirect means for their deliverance; whereas the simple

18 I will pay my vows unto the LORD now in the presence of all his people,

PSALM CXVII.

An exhortation to praise God for his mercy and truth.

[a] PRAISE the LORD, all ye nations: praise him, all ye people. [a] Rom. 15. 11.
2 For his merciful kindness is great toward us: and the truth of the LORD endureth for ever. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CXVIII.

1 An exhortation to praise God for his mercy. 5 The psalmist by his experience sheweth how good it is to trust in God. 19 Under the type of the psalmist the coming of Christ in his kingdom is expressed.

[a] GIVE thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: because his mercy endureth for ever. [a] Psal. 106. 1. & 107. 1. & 136. 1. 1 Chron. 16. 8.
2 Let Israel now say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

use only such means as God approves, and rely upon Him for the success of them. Green.

10, 11. I believed, &c.] In afflictions and distresses, those of the spirit and conscience more especially, the soul is tempted to despond, and can only be supported by faith exerting itself in prayer: "I believed, and therefore have I spoken," or, therefore spake I; that is, as above, ver. 4. "I called upon the name of the Lord; O Lord, I beseech Thee, deliver my soul." And this I did, though so "greatly afflicted," that I had "said in my haste," in my hurry and trepidation, occasioned by fear and amazement, "all men are liars;" there is no credit to be given to their promises of deliverance, I am lost and undone for ever; yet my faith failed not entirely, and, lo, my prayer hath been heard, and answered. Bp. Horne.

13. — the cup of salvation,] This cup of salvation is the drink-offering annexed to and poured upon the sacrifice, at the time they used to call upon the name of the Lord. Jos. Mede. This phrase is taken from the common practice of the Jews in their thank-offerings, in which a feast was made of the remainders of the sacrifices, and the offerers, together with the priests, did eat and drink before the Lord; and, amongst other rites, the master of the feast took a cup of wine into his hand, and solemnly blessed God for it, and for the mercy which was then acknowledged, and then gave it to all the guests, who drank successively of it. See 1 Chron. xvi. 2, 3. To which custom it is supposed that our blessed Saviour alludes in the institution of the cup, which also is called "the cup of blessing." 1 Cor. x. 16. which is in effect the same with "the cup of salvation." Poole.

15. Precious in the sight &c.] That is, good men are so precious in God's esteem, that He will not prematurely deliver them up to the power of death. Dr. Wells.

16. — thou hast loosed my bonds.] Thou hast rescued me from the power of death. Bp. Patrick.

We should particularly here observe with what sentiments of joy and gratitude the Psalmist celebrates the wonderful deliverances which God had vouchsafed him in the great dangers he had been exposed to, with what zeal he praises Him, and vows to love and obey Him. From his example we learn, that when God has bestowed any particular favour on us, and especially when He has delivered us from any great danger, it is our duty to love Him, to bless His holy name, and praise Him in the presence of all His people; and above all, to walk before Him all the days of our life, and to testify our gratitude to Him, not only by our words, but by all our actions. Osterwald.

Psalm CXVII. This short Psalm seems altogether prophetical of the joy that all the world should conceive at the coming of the Messiah, to give salvation, first to the Jews, and then to all other nations. St. Paul applies part of it to this purpose, Rom. xv. 11. Bp. Patrick.

Psalm CXVIII. This is a Psalm of triumph: of which the four first verses are the preface; from thence to the 18th, an account of the victory, in which the author seems to have had a narrow escape from death: he attributes his deliverance and victory to the particular protection of the Almighty: after this is a kind of sacred dialogue: David, being come to the temple, speaks the 19th verse; they that open the gates, the 20th; he again, as he enters, the 21st; they with him seem to speak the four next verses, to the 25th; the priests of the temple, the 26th; the first part to the king, the other to the people; the people, the 27th; he, the 28th; the 29th is the chorus verse, concluding as it began. Mudge. The triumphant subject of this Psalm makes it applicable to the service of Easter-day, when we celebrate the glorious victory which our blessed Lord gained over sin and death. Travell. It is also one of the proper psalms in the thanksgiving on the twenty-ninth of May.

Ver. 5. — in a large place.] In a state of liberty and freedom from my enemies. Dr. Wells.

6, 7. The Lord is on my side; &c.] By frequent experience of the Divine power and mercy, from time to time exerted in behalf of Israel, that nation was instructed to trust in Jehovah; and, whenever they did so, success and victory never failed to attend their steps. Would not the case be the same with us in all our under-

PSALM CXIX.

This psalm containeth sundry prayers, praises, and professions of obedience.

ALEPH.

BLESSED are the ‖undefiled in the way, who walk in the law of the LORD. ‖ Or, perfect, or sincere.

takings, if our faith was right and stedfast in God, who raised up Jesus from the dead, and who hath promised to make us "more than conquerors?" Bp. Horne.

10. All nations] That is, all the neighbouring nations. Bp. Patrick.

12. They compassed me about like bees; &c.] Their numbers and rage might be compared to a swarm of angry bees; but their fury was short-lived and died away, like a sudden blaze of thorns, which is quickly extinguished. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

13. Thou hast thrust sore at me] This seems spoken of his enemies generally. Rosenmüller.

15. The voice of rejoicing &c.] In the tabernacles, that is, the tents of the righteous, is the voice of shouting and triumph, proclaiming that the right hand of the Lord hath done mighty things. Green. The mention of tents shews that they celebrated their deliverance, not only publickly, but also privately, which was a sign of great and unfeigned joy. Rosenmüller.

19. — the gates of righteousness:] The gates of the sanctuary. Dr. Wells.

22. The stone &c.] No text of the Old Testament is quoted by the writers of the New so often as this, which we meet with in five different places; see the margin. The sum and substance of the New Testament applications and expositions is, that Jesus Christ is the stone here mentioned; that He was rejected and set at nought by the chief priests and Pharisees, the then builders of the Church; but that, being chosen of God, and precious to Him, this most valuable stone, thus despised and rejected of men, was at length exalted to be the chief corner stone in the building, and a centre of union for the Jew and Gentile, the two parts of which it consisted; that this was the work of God, and the admiration of man. Bp. Horne.

24. This is the day &c.] Of the day on which Christ rose from the dead, it may with more propriety than of any other day be affirmed, "This is the day which the Lord hath made." Thus it was that the rejected stone became "the head of the corner:" a morning then dawned which is to be succeeded by no evening. Bp. Horne.

27. — bind the sacrifice &c.] Bind the sacrifice, or lamb, with cords; (which was done previous to slaying it;) offer it up at the horns of the altar. See Exod. xxx. 10. Dimock.

—— even unto the horns of the altar.] The meaning of this passage probably is, that the sacrifices offered would be so great that the accustomed place for the victims would not be large enough to hold them, but from their number they would press even to the very "horns of the altar."

This Psalm, which the Jews sang at their feasts, should be made use of by Christians in giving thanks to God, not only for the favours and deliverances, whether publick or private, which He grants them; but, above all, for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. The Spirit of God signifies in this Psalm, that the Messiah should be rejected by the chief of the Jews; and that, notwithstanding, He should become the King and Head of the Church; which was fulfilled when Jesus Christ was crucified, and when, after His resurrection, He ascended into heaven, and His Kingdom was established in the world. Osterwald.

Psalm CXIX. This Psalm consists of twenty-two staves of eight verses each, beginning with the first letter of the Hebrew alphabet, and ending with the last. All the verses of each single stave begin with the same letter, from which it is denominated, so that the first eight verses begin with Aleph, the next with Beth, and so on. Fenton. It was probably written for the

27 Make me to understand the way of thy precepts: so shall I talk of thy wondrous works.

28 My soul † melteth for heaviness! strengthen thou me according unto thy word.

† Heb. dropped.

29 Remove from me the way of lying: and grant me thy law graciously.

30 I have chosen the way of truth: thy judgments have I laid before me.

instruction of youth. Every division of it expresses the excellence of the law; a resolution to keep it, under all circumstances, particularly of distress, when his piety exposed him to danger of reproach; and a petition for grace. The words "laws," "statutes," "testimonies," "judgments," "precepts," &c. which occur so constantly, seem here to be used promiscuously. Bp. Patrick, Green.

Ver. 3. They also &c.] "For they commit no iniquity who walk in His ways." Green.

6. — when I have &c.] All the commandments have the same Author, and the same sanction. He who thinks to atone for the breach of one, by the observation of another; he who reserves to himself a licence of indulging any favourite darling lust, while in general he preserves the appearance of an exemplary conduct, is an hypocrite; and, unless he repent, will be brought to shame, if not before men here, yet before men and angels hereafter. Bp. Horne.

9. Wherewithal shall a young man &c.] Youth enters upon the journey of life headstrong and inexperienced, with a bias of original corruption, and all the passions awake. In such circumstances, how shall a young man direct his steps, so as to "escape the pollution that is in the world through lust?" He must for this purpose take with him the directions to be found in the Scriptures of truth. Bp. Horne.

11. — have I hid] Have I treasured up. Green.

12. Blessed art thou, &c.] The meaning seems to be this; Thou, O Jehovah, art blessed, that is, art the supreme God, to whom I acknowledge all blessing and adoration to be due; teach me therefore Thy statutes, as being the only laws to which we owe all obedience. Mudge.

14. I have rejoiced &c.] Truth and holiness afford to the sincere believer a pleasure more exquisite, as well as more solid and enduring, than that which a miser feels at the acquisition of his darling wealth. Let us no longer envy the joys of worldly men, no longer be chagrined at the prosperity of the wicked. The "true riches" we may always acquire; and, surely, as much as heaven is higher than the earth, so much are heavenly joys above earthly, in kind, degree, and duration. Bp. Horne.

18. — that I may behold &c.] That is, that I may be able to comprehend the Divine mysteries contained in Thy law. Dimock.

19. I am a stranger &c.] I am a stranger, unacquainted with the way; give me Thy commandments to guide me.

20. My soul breaketh &c.] That is, My soul is wasted with a continual longing after Thy judgments. Edmund.

21. Thou hast rebuked &c.] Thou rebukest the proud; cursed are they that stray from Thy commandments. "The proud" always mean, the contemptuous disregarders of God and His laws. Mudge.

25. My soul cleaveth &c.] I am brought exceeding low by Thy afflicting hand: oh, do Thou raise and comfort me, as Thou hast graciously promised. Bp. Hall.

29, 30. Remove from me &c.] It is plain that "the way of truth," in the latter of these two verses, is opposed to "the way of lying," or of falsehood, in the former. The one comprehends every thing in doctrine or in practice that is right, and therefore 31 I have stuck unto thy testimonies: O LORD, put me not to shame.

32 I will run the way of thy commandments, when thou shalt enlarge my heart.

HE.

33 Teach me, O LORD, the way of thy statutes; and I shall keep it unto the end.

34 Give me understanding, and I shall keep thy law; yea, I shall observe it with my whole heart.

35 Make me to go in the path of thy commandments; for therein do I delight.

36 Incline my heart unto thy testimonies, and not to covetousness.

† Heb. Make to pass.

37 † Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity; and quicken thou me in thy way.

38 Stablish thy word unto thy servant, who is devoted to thy fear.

39 Turn away my reproach which I fear: for thy judgments are good.

40 Behold, I have longed after thy precepts: quicken me in thy righteousness.

VAU.

41 Let thy mercies come also unto me, O LORD, even thy salvation, according to thy word.

‖ Or. So shall I answer him that reproacheth me in a thing.

42 ‖ So shall I have wherewith to answer him that reproacheth me: for I trust in thy word.

43 And take not the word of truth utterly out of my mouth; for I have hoped in thy judgments.

44 So shall I keep thy law continually for ever and ever.

45 And I will walk † at liberty: for I seek thy precepts.

46 I will speak of thy testimonies also before kings, and will not be ashamed.

47 And I will delight myself in thy commandments, which I have loved.

48 My hands also will I lift up unto thy commandments, which I have loved; and I will meditate in thy statutes.

ZAIN.

49 Remember the word unto thy servant, upon which thou hast caused me to hope.

50 This is my comfort in my affliction: for thy word hath quickened me.

51 The proud have had me greatly in derision: yet have I not declined from thy law.

52 I remembered thy judgments of old, O LORD; and have comforted myself.

53 Horror hath taken hold upon me because of the wicked that forsake thy law.

54 Thy statutes have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage.

55 I have remembered thy name, O LORD, in the night, and have kept thy law.

56 This I had, because I kept thy precepts.

CHETH.

57 Thou art my portion, O LORD: I have said that I would keep thy words.

† Heb. Face.

58 I intreated thy † favour with my whole heart: be merciful unto me according to thy word.

59 I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies.

60 I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments.

‖ Or, companies.

61 The ‖ bands of the wicked have robbed me: but I have not forgotten thy law.

62 At midnight I will rise to give thanks unto thee because of thy righteous judgments.

63 I am a companion of all them that fear thee, and of them that keep thy precepts.

64 The earth, O LORD, is full of thy mercy: teach me thy statutes.

"true;" the other denotes every thing that is wrong, and therefore "false." Bp. Horne.

32. — when thou shalt enlarge my heart.] When Thou shalt enlighten my understanding by Thy Spirit. God gave to Solomon "largeness of heart," 1 Kings iv. 29.

36. Incline my heart &c.] By the words "incline not my heart to covetousness," is meant, "suffer not my heart to be inclined," or, "give it not over to covetousness." Bp. Horne.

37. Turn away mine eyes &c.] Oh, let not mine eye betray my heart unto vanity; let me not be so transported with any earthly objects, as to depart from my perfect love of Thee, and desire of heavenly things. Bp. Hall.

— quicken thou &c.] Give me grace to go on with more and more vigour in Thy way. Dr. Wells.

45. — I will walk at liberty:] The liberty of the sons of God; freed from the fetters of sin.

48. My hands also will I lift &c.] I will earnestly employ myself, and all my actions, to the performance of what Thou commandest me. Bp. Hall.

49. Remember the word &c.] The Psalmist here instructs us to prefer our petition upon these grounds; first, that God cannot prove false to His word; "Remember the word unto Thy servant:" secondly, that He will never disappoint an expectation which Himself hath raised; "upon which Thou hast caused me to hope." Bp. Horne.

50. — quickened me.] Revived me in my sorrows. Dr. Wells.

54. — in the house of my pilgrimage.] In all my wanderings up and down. 1 Sam. xxii. 1, 2. 5. and xxiii. 13. Bp. Patrick.

56. This I had,] That is, this composure of mind and cheerfulness of spirit. Bp. Patrick.

60. I made haste, &c.] No future time that we can fix upon will be more convenient than the present is for our reformation. On the contrary, the more we defer, the more difficult and painful our work must needs prove; every day will both enlarge our task, and diminish our ability to perform it. We should consider that we are mortal and frail, and therefore any designs of future reformation may be cut off by death; which is always creeping towards us, and may, for all we can tell, be very near at hand. Dr. Barrow.

TETH.

65 Thou hast dealt well with thy servant, O LORD, according unto thy word.

66 Teach me good judgment and knowledge: for I have believed thy commandments.

67 Before I was afflicted I went astray: but now have I kept thy word.

68 Thou art good, and doest good; teach me thy statutes.

69 The proud have forged a lie against me: but I will keep thy precepts with my whole heart.

70 Their heart is as fat as grease; but I delight in thy law.

71 It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn thy statutes.

° Psal. 19. 10. Prov. 8. 11. 72 ° The law of thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver.

JOD.

73 Thy hands have made me and fashioned me: give me understanding, that I may learn thy commandments.

74 They that fear thee will be glad when they see me; because I have hoped in thy word.

75 I know, O LORD, that thy judgments are † right, and that thou in faithfulness hast afflicted me.

† Heb. righteousness.

† Heb. to comfort me. 76 Let, I pray thee, thy merciful kindness be † for my comfort, according to thy word unto thy servant.

77 Let thy tender mercies come unto me, that I may live: for thy law is my delight.

78 Let the proud be ashamed; for they dealt perversely with me without a cause: but I will meditate in thy precepts.

79 Let those that fear thee turn unto me, and those that have known thy testimonies.

80 Let my heart be sound in thy statutes; that I be not ashamed.

CAPH.

81 My soul fainteth for thy salvation: but I hope in thy word.

82 Mine eyes fail for thy word, saying, When wilt thou comfort me?

83 For I am become like a bottle in the smoke; yet do I not forget thy statutes.

84 How many are the days of thy servant? when wilt thou execute judgment on them that persecute me?

85 The proud have digged pits for me, which are not after thy law.

86 All thy commandments are † faithful: they persecute me wrongfully; help thou me.

† Heb. faithfulness.

87 They had almost consumed me upon earth; but I forsook not thy precepts.

88 Quicken me after thy lovingkindness; so shall I keep the testimony of thy mouth.

LAMED.

89 For ever, O LORD, thy word is settled in heaven.

90 Thy faithfulness is † unto all generations: thou hast established the earth, and it † abideth.

† Heb. to generation and generation. † Heb. standeth.

91 They continue this day according to thine ordinances: for all are thy servants.

76. Their heart is as fat &c.] The "fatness of the heart" implies, in this place, two things in those of whom it is affirmed; luxury, and its consequence, insensibility to those spiritual and divine truths, which are not only the study, but the "delight" of temperate and holy persons. Bp. Horne.

71. It is good for me &c.] There is a class of most important duties, which can only be practised in affliction; namely, patience and composure under distress, pain, and affliction: a steadfast keeping up of our confidence in God, and our dependance upon His final goodness, even at a time that every thing present is discouraging and adverse; and, what is no less difficult to retain, a cordial desire for the happiness and comfort of others, even then, when we are deprived of our own. The possession of this temper is almost the perfection of our nature. But it is then only possessed when put to the trial: tried at all it could not have been in a life made up only of pleasure and gratification. It is in the chambers of sickness; under the strokes of affliction; amidst the pinchings of want, the groans of pain, the pressures of infirmity; in grief, in misfortune; through gloom and horror, that it will be seen, whether we hold fast our hope, our confidence, our trust in God; whether this hope and confidence be able to produce in us resignation, acquiescence, and submission. Archdeacon Paley.

74. — when they see me.] When they see me delivered out of all these troubles. Dr. Wells.

75. I know, &c.] From whatever quarter afflictions come upon us, they are the "judgments of God," without whose providence nothing befalls us. His judgments are always "right," or just, duly proportioned to the disease and strength of the patient; in sending them God is "faithful" and true to His word, wherein He hath never promised the crown without the cross, but hath, on the contrary, assured us, that one will be necessary in order to our obtaining the other; and that they who are beloved by Him shall not sin with impunity, nor go astray without a call to return. Bp. Horne.

79. — turn unto me.] Turn to my side, and become my friends. Bp. Patrick.

81. My soul fainteth &c.] My soul languisheth with a longing desire of Thy salvation; yet still I am sustained by an assured hope of Thy merciful performances. Bp. Hall.

83. — like a bottle in the smoke.] Bottles, among the Jews, were made of skins. One of these, if exposed to heat and "smoke," would become shrivelled and useless. Such a change will labour and sorrow cause in the human frame; and the Psalmist here represents, that his beauty and strength were gone, and the natural moisture dried up; in consequence of which the skin shrivelled, and both colour and vigour departed from him. Bp. Horne.

85. — which are not after thy law.] Who act without any regard to Thy law. Mudge.

89. For ever, &c.] Or, "Thy word, O Lord, is for ever, it is firmly fixed like the heavens." God's word, and His truth and faithfulness, upon which His laws are founded, are as fixed as the heaven and the earth; for they owe their durability to the same word and truth. Green, Mudge.

92 Unless thy law had been my delights, I should then have perished in mine affliction.

93 I will never forget thy precepts: for with them thou hast quickened me.

94 I am thine, save me; for I have sought thy precepts.

95 The wicked have waited for me to destroy me: but I will consider thy testimonies.

96 I have seen an end of all perfection: but thy commandment is exceeding broad.

MEM.

97 O how love I thy law! it is my meditation all the day.

98 Thou through thy commandments hast made me wiser than mine enemies: for † they are ever with me.

† Heb. it is ever with me.

99 I have more understanding than all my teachers: for thy testimonies are my meditation.

100 I understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts.

101 I have refrained my feet from every evil way, that I might keep thy word.

102 I have not departed from thy judgments: for thou hast taught me.

103 [e] How sweet are thy words unto my † taste! yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth!

104 Through thy precepts I get understanding: therefore I hate every false way.

NUN.

105 Thy word is a ‖ lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path.

106 I have sworn, and I will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments.

107 I am afflicted very much: quicken me, O LORD, according unto thy word.

108 Accept, I beseech thee, the freewill offerings of my mouth, O LORD, and teach me thy judgments.

109 My soul is continually in my hand: yet do I not forget thy law.

110 The wicked have laid a snare for me: yet I erred not from thy precepts.

111 Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever: for they are the rejoicing of my heart.

† Heb. to do.

112 I have inclined mine heart † to perform thy statutes alway, even unto the end.

SAMECH.

113 I hate vain thoughts: but thy law do I love.

114 Thou art my hiding place and my shield: I hope in thy word.

[f] Matth. 7. 23.

115 [f] Depart from me, ye evildoers: for I will keep the commandments of my God.

116 Uphold me according unto thy word, that I may live: and let me not be ashamed of my hope.

117 Hold thou me up, and I shall be safe: and I will have respect unto thy statutes continually.

118 Thou hast trodden down all them that err from thy statutes: for their deceit is falsehood.

119 Thou † puttest away all the wicked of the earth like dross: therefore I love thy testimonies.

120 My flesh trembleth for fear of thee; and I am afraid of thy judgments.

AIN.

121 I have done judgment and justice: leave me not to mine oppressors.

122 Be surety for thy servant for good: let not the proud oppress me.

123 Mine eyes fail for thy salvation, and for the word of thy righteousness.

124 Deal with thy servant according unto thy mercy, and teach me thy statutes.

125 I am thy servant; give me understanding, that I may know thy testimonies.

95. — I will consider thy testimonies.] I will carefully attend to Thy commands. Mudge.

96. I have seen an end &c.] Of "all perfection" in this world, whether of beauty, wit, learning, pleasure, honour, or riches, experience will soon shew us the "end." But where is the end or boundary of the word of God? Who can ascend to the height of its excellency; who can fathom the depth of its mysteries; who can find out the comprehension of its precepts, or conceive the extent of its promises? Bp. Horne.

99, 100. I have more understanding &c.] That is, the spiritual wisdom, in which Thy law instructs me, for conducting myself most advantageously, is infinitely to be preferred before all other knowledge. Dr. Hammond.

108. — the freewill offerings of my mouth,] The "offerings" of the believer are prayer, praise, and holy resolutions and vows, like that of the psalmist above, to keep God's righteous judgments, in which he therefore petitions to be more and more taught and instructed by the Spirit of truth. Bp. Horne. "Freewill offerings" were such sacrifices as were not offered by the law, or for any fault, but for the sake of thanksgiving. Rosenmüller.

109. My soul is continually in my hand:] I am exposed to continual danger of my life. Bp. Hall. See the note from Dr. Durell on Job xiii. 14.

111. Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage] That is, as that which will be the means of my enjoying the chiefest good. Dr. Wells.

118. — for their deceit is falsehood.] Because it will fail and ruin those who trust in it. Bp. Horne.

122. Be surety for thy servant for good:] Do Thou take my cause upon Thee, and stand out for the protection of mine innocence. Bp. Hall.

126 It is time for thee, LORD, to work: for they have made void thy law.

[f] Prov. 8. 11. Ps. 19. 10. 127 [f] Therefore I love thy commandments above gold; yea, above fine gold.

128 Therefore I esteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right; and I hate every false way.

PE.

129 Thy testimonies are wonderful: therefore doth my soul keep them.

130 The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple.

131 I opened my mouth, and panted: for I longed for thy commandments.

132 Look thou upon me, and be merciful unto me, † as thou usest to do unto those that love thy name.

† Heb. according to the custom towards those, &c.

133 Order my steps in thy word: and let not any iniquity have dominion over me.

134 Deliver me from the oppression of man: so will I keep thy precepts.

135 Make thy face to shine upon thy servant; and teach me thy statutes.

136 Rivers of waters run down mine eyes, because they keep not thy law.

TZADDI.

137 Righteous art thou, O LORD, and upright are thy judgments.

138 Thy testimonies that thou hast commanded are † righteous and very † faithful.

† Heb. righteousness. † Heb. faithfulness.

139 [g] My zeal hath † consumed me, because mine enemies have forgotten thy words.

140 Thy word is very † pure: therefore thy servant loveth it.

[g] Ps. 69. 9. John 2. 17. † Heb. cast out of.

141 I am small and despised: yet do not I forget thy precepts.

† Heb. tried, or, refined.

142 Thy righteousness is an everlasting righteousness, and thy law is the truth.

143 Trouble and anguish have † taken hold on me: yet thy commandments are my delights.

† Heb. found me.

144 The righteousness of thy testimonies is everlasting: give me understanding, and I shall live.

KOPH.

145 I cried with my whole heart; hear me, O LORD: I will keep thy statutes.

146 I cried unto thee; save me, ‖ and I shall keep thy testimonies.

‖ Or, that I may keep.

147 I prevented the dawning of the morning, and cried: I hoped in thy word.

148 Mine eyes prevent the night watches, that I might meditate in thy word.

149 Hear my voice according unto thy lovingkindness: O LORD, quicken me according to thy judgment.

150 They draw nigh that follow after mischief: they are far from thy law.

151 Thou art near, O LORD; and all thy commandments are truth.

152 Concerning thy testimonies, I have known of old that thou hast founded them for ever.

RESH.

153 Consider mine affliction, and deliver me: for I do not forget thy law.

154 Plead my cause, and deliver me: quicken me according to thy word.

155 Salvation is far from the wicked: for they seek not thy statutes.

156 ‖ Great are thy tender mercies, O LORD: quicken me according to thy judgments.

‖ Or, Many.

157 Many are my persecutors and mine enemies; yet do I not decline from thy testimonies.

158 I beheld the transgressors, and was grieved; because they kept not thy word.

159 Consider how I love thy precepts:

126. It is time for thee, — to work:] To shew Thy hatred of the wicked courses of men, by executing due judgments upon them. Bp. Hall.

—— made void thy law.] The law of God is "made void" by those who deny its authority, or its obligation; by those who render it of none effect through their traditions, or their lives. Bp. Horne.

129. Thy testimonies are wonderful: &c.] The Scriptures are "wonderful," with respect to the matter which they contain, the manner in which they are written, and the effects which they produce. Bp. Horne.

130. The entrance of thy words &c.] That is, Thy word or law is no sooner known, but it enlightens the mind with most useful knowledge. Dr. Wells.

—— It giveth understanding unto the simple.] Or, to the most unlearned, so far as to teach them how they may be happy. Dr. Wells.

131. — and panted:] An action expressive of great and affectionate desire.

139. My zeal &c.] "Zeal" is a high degree of love; and when the object of that love is ill-treated, it vents itself in a mixture of grief and indignation, which are sufficient to wear and "consume" the heart. This will be the case, where men rightly conceive of that dishonour, which is continually done to God, by creatures whom He hath made and redeemed. But never could the verse be uttered with such fulness of truth and propriety by any one, as by the Son of God, who had such a sense of His Father's glory, and of man's sin, as no person else ever had. Bp. Horne.

150, 151. They draw nigh that follow &c.] If our enemies "draw nigh" to destroy us, God is still nearer to preserve us; and however His word may be rejected by the wicked, the faithful always find it to be true, to their great and endless comfort. Bp. Horne.

152. — thou hast founded them for ever.] That is, Thy will and pleasure is firm and steadfast, and shall never fail those that depend upon it. Bp. Patrick.

159, 160. Consider how I love &c.] It is observable how the Psalmist delights to dwell on these two grateful topicks, the "lovingkindness" of God in promising salvation, and His "truth" quicken me, O LORD, according to thy lovingkindness.

† Heb. The beginning of thy word is true. 160 † Thy word is true from the beginning: and every one of thy righteous judgments endureth for ever.

SCHIN.

161 Princes have persecuted me without a cause: but my heart standeth in awe of thy word.

162 I rejoice at thy word, as one that findeth great spoil.

163 I hate and abhor lying: but thy law do I love.

164 Seven times a day do I praise thee because of thy righteous judgments.

† Heb. they shall have no stumbling-block. 165 Great peace have they which love thy law: and † nothing shall offend them.

166 LORD, I have hoped for thy salvation, and done thy commandments.

167 My soul hath kept thy testimonies; and I love them exceedingly.

168 I have kept thy precepts and thy testimonies: for all my ways are before thee.

TAU.

169 Let my cry come near before thee, O LORD: give me understanding according to thy word.

170 Let my supplication come before thee: deliver me according to thy word.

171 My lips shall utter praise, when thou hast taught me thy statutes.

172 My tongue shall speak of thy word: for all thy commandments are righteousness.

173 Let thine hand help me; for I have chosen thy precepts.

174 I have longed for thy salvation, O LORD; and thy law is my delight.

175 Let my soul live, and it shall praise thee; and let thy judgments help me.

176 I have gone astray like a lost sheep; seek thy servant; for I do not forget thy commandments.

PSALM CXX.

1 David prayeth against Doeg, 3 reproveth his tongue, 5 complaineth of his necessary conversation with the wicked.

¶ A Song of degrees.

IN my distress I cried unto the LORD, and he heard me.

2 Deliver my soul, O LORD, from lying lips, and from a deceitful tongue.

3 ‖ What shall be given unto thee? or what shall be † done unto thee, thou false tongue?

4 ‖ Sharp arrows of the mighty, with coals of juniper.

5 Woe is me, that I sojourn in Mesech, that I dwell in the tents of Kedar!

in the constant performance of that promise to His Church, while she loves and adheres to His "precepts." Thus it hath been "from the beginning," and thus it will be, until the whole counsel of Heaven shall be fulfilled, by the resurrection and salvation of the just. Bp. Horne.

164. Seven times.] That is, many times, in the day. Bp. Hall.

165. Great peace &c.] To enjoy a peace which sets us above the power of evil; which places us out of the reach of fortune; which inspires us with courage in the midst of danger; which opens our eyes to look through the gloomiest scenes of sorrow to the blessed hope of future glory; which establishes our hearts in a patient expectation of God's deliverance, so that nothing can terrify or dismay us; is that which the world can never give, and which can only proceed from the blessed Spirit of God, whose province it is to confirm the faithful to the end, and so to arm their faith, that "nothing can offend them." This is that peace of which the Psalmist here speaks, and which is the peculiar lot and inheritance of the righteous, of him who loveth the law of God. Bp. Sherlock.

— and nothing shall offend them.] Or, cause them to fall. Dr. Wells.

166. — before thee.] That is, perfectly known to Thee. The consideration of God's omnipresence is the best motive to an holy life. Bp. Wilson.

That this Psalm may be read with improvement, it will be convenient to add to the particular reflexions already made, these three principal reflexions: 1. That the law of God is most excellent, and its effects most wonderful. David teaches us, that this Divine law is the most perfect; that it gives a heavenly light which enlightens us; that it gives understanding; that it purifies and rejoices the heart; that it supports us in afflictions; that it gives us unspeakable peace of conscience; and that it is infinitely better than all the treasures and riches in this world. 2. In this Psalm we learn to distinguish good men. They are sincere and upright in their ways; they do that which is right; they walk in the law of the Lord, and meditate on it day and night; they love God and His word with all their heart; they abstain from evil, and from the company of the wicked; they join themselves to the righteous; they are struck with terrour at the sight of God's judgments; they trust in Him, and are calm and patient under afflictions. 3. Lastly, this Psalm is full of many excellent prayers, which should be continually in our mouths and in our hearts, begging God to enlighten our minds, to teach us His law, to incline our hearts to obey Him, to take us under His care, and guide us always by His providence and His Holy Spirit. These are the instructions with which this Psalm furnishes us; for which purpose we should do well frequently to read it, and meditate on its contents. Ostervald.

Psalm CXX. This Psalm is one of the fifteen, which are entitled Psalms of Ascensions; that is, which were sung when the people came up either to worship in Jerusalem at the annual festivals, or perhaps from the Babylonish captivity. Bp. Lowth. The Psalmist here begs of God to defend him from the deceits and calumnies of the wicked, and complains that he is forced to dwell among them. Green.

A Song of degrees.] Or rather, of ascensions. Bp. Horne.

Ver. 4. Sharp arrows &c.] That is, All the reward thou shalt meet with shall be a swift vengeance from the Almighty. This is figuratively represented by sharp arrows and burning coals of juniper, (or, as some think, the Spanish broom,) the wood of which is supposed to burn more intensely than any other. Green, Parkhurst.

5. Woe is me, &c.] Mesech was the son of Japhet, Gen. x. 2. and Kedar the son of Ishmael, Gen. xxv. 13. The descendants of both of them were idolaters, remarkable for their barbarity and cruelty, and for being enemies to peace. David is not to be understood as saying that he actually dwelt among these people, but only that he lived among people who were of the same tem-

6 My soul hath long dwelt with him that hateth peace.

‖ Or, a man of peace.

7 I am ‖ for peace: but when I speak, they are for war.

PSALM CXXI.

The great safety of the godly, who put their trust in God's protection.

¶ A Song of degrees.

‖ Or, Shall I lift up mine eyes to the hills? whence should my help come? * Ps. 124. 8.

I WILL lift up mine eyes unto the hills, ‖ from whence cometh my help.

2 * My help cometh from the LORD, which made heaven and earth.

3 He will not suffer thy foot to be moved: he that keepeth thee will not slumber.

4 Behold, he that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep.

5 The LORD is thy keeper: the LORD is thy shade upon thy right hand.

6 The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night.

7 The LORD shall preserve thee from all evil: he shall preserve thy soul.

8 The LORD shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and even for evermore.

pers and manners with the descendants of Mesech and Kedar. Edwards.

This Psalm teaches, 1st, That good men may be exposed to calumny and the malice of men, but that God protects and delivers them. 2dly. That it is a great affliction to good men to live among the wicked and ungodly. Lastly, That it is the character of the righteous to love peace, as it is of the wicked to be addicted to confusion and trouble. Osterwald.

Psalm CXXI. This Psalm is of the dramatick or dialogue form. It is both concise and elegant. The king apparently going forth to battle, first approaches the ark of God, and in the two first verses humbly implores the Divine assistance, on which alone he professes to rest his confidence. In the third and following verses the high priest answers him from the tabernacle. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. — unto the hills.] To the mountains of Zion and Moriah, where Jerusalem was built, where the tabernacle was placed, and from whence Jehovah assisted His people when they were in distress. Green.

5. — thy shade.] Thy shelter. Dr. Wells.

6. The sun &c.] The meaning is, that the good man, during his journey through life, shall be under God's protection at all seasons. Bp. Horne.

8. The Lord shall preserve &c.] Bishop Lowth refers these words to the king's going forth to battle. But they may be applicable to the preservation of the Jews from their enemies on their going to their feasts at Jerusalem. Dimock.

How happy is that man "whose help cometh from the Lord." Though the whole creation frowns upon him, and all nature looks blackupon him, he has His light and support within him, that is able to cheer his mind and bear him up in the midst of any horrours which may encompass him. He knows that his Helper is at hand, and is always nearer to him than any thing else can be which is capable of annoying or terrifying him. In the midst of calumny or contempt, he attends to that Being who whispers better things within his soul, and whom he looks upon as his Defender, his Glory, and the Lifter-up of his head. In his deepest solitude and retirement, he knows that he is in company with the Greatest of Beings; and perceives within himself such real sensations of His presence, as are more delightful than any thing to be met with in the society of His creatures. Even in the hour of death, he considers the pains of his dissolution to be nothing else but the breaking down of that partition which stands between his own soul, and the sight of that Being who is always present with him, and who will then manifest Himself to him in fulness of joy. Addison.

PSALM CXXII.

David professeth his joy for the church, 6 and prayeth for the peace thereof.

¶ A Song of degrees of David.

I WAS glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the LORD.

2 Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem.

3 Jerusalem is builded as a city that is compact together:

4 Whither the tribes go up, the tribes of the LORD, unto the testimony of Israel, to give thanks unto the name of the LORD.

5 For there † are set thrones of judgment, the thrones of the house of David.

† Heb. do sit.

6 Pray for the peace of Jerusalem: they shall prosper that love thee.

7 Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces.

8 For my brethren and companions' sakes, I will now say, Peace be within thee.

9 Because of the house of the LORD our God I will seek thy good.

Psalm CXXII. The subject of this Psalm is that joy which the people were wont to express, upon their going up in companies to keep a feast at Jerusalem, when the Divine services were regulated, and that city was appointed to be a place of publick worship. Bp. Horne.

Ver. 2. — shall stand.] More literally, stood or are standing. Abp. Secker.

3. Jerusalem is &c.] Jerusalem is compact as to its buildings, and the inhabitants of it firmly united by mutual harmony and friendship. Dr. Chandler. Jerusalem is built as a city that is placed in the centre of union; that is, it was the great seat and centre of religion and justice, was the centre of union to all the tribes. Mudge, Dr. Delaney.

4. — unto the testimony of Israel,] That is, "unto the ark of the testimony." Dr. Wells, Edwards, Merrick.

6. Pray for the peace of Jerusalem:] A concern for the peace and happiness of our country is not only a political, but a religious virtue; a care that becomes us both as we are men, and as we are Christians; which stands not upon the narrow bottom of self-interest, but rises from a more generous principle, partaking of the love of God and love of our neighbour; since, whilst we seek the publick peace, we shew our beneficence to the one, and our obedience to the other. Bp. Sherlock.

As we are concerned for the happiness of our country in general, so ought we to be for the welfare of the Church in particular. The kingdom of our Master must subsist, as well as other kingdoms and societies do, by the cultivation of peace and unity among those who are the subjects of it. Joined to one common head, Christians should be joined likewise to each other, "keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," Eph. iv. 3. Bp. Horne.

PSALM CXXIII.

1 The godly profess their confidence in God, 3 and pray to be delivered from contempt.

¶ A Song of degrees.

UNTO thee lift I up mine eyes, O thou that dwellest in the heavens.

2 Behold, as the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters, and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her mistress; so our eyes wait upon the LORD our God, until that he have mercy upon us.

3 Have mercy upon us, O LORD, have mercy upon us: for we are exceedingly filled with contempt.

4 Our soul is exceedingly filled with the scorning of those that are at ease, and with the contempt of the proud.

PSALM CXXIV.

The church blesseth God for a miraculous deliverance.

¶ A Song of degrees of David.

IF it had not been the LORD who was on our side, now may Israel say;

2 If it had not been the LORD who was on our side, when men rose up against us:

3 Then they had swallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled against us:

4 Then the waters had overwhelmed us, the stream had gone over our soul:

5 Then the proud waters had gone over our soul.

6 Blessed be the LORD, who hath not given us as a prey to their teeth.

7 Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers: the snare is broken, and we are escaped.

8 [a] Our help is in the name of the LORD, [a] Ps. 121. 2. who made heaven and earth.

PSALM CXXV.

1 The safety of such as trust in God. 4 A prayer for the godly, and against the wicked.

¶ A Song of degrees.

THEY that trust in the LORD shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever.

2 As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the LORD is round about his people from henceforth even for ever.

3 For the rod of † the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous; lest the righteous put forth their hands unto iniquity. † Heb. wickedness.

4 Do good, O LORD, unto those that be good, and to them that are upright in their hearts.

5 As for such as turn aside unto their crooked ways, the LORD shall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity: but peace shall be upon Israel.

PSALM CXXVI.

1 The church, celebrating her incredible return out of captivity, 4 prayeth for, and prophesieth the good success thereof.

Psalm CXXIII. This is a short address to God for His special assistance under circumstances of distress, from the proud and insolent behaviour of some haughty oppressors. Travell.

Ver. 2. — unto the hand of their masters, &c.] The servants or slaves in the East still attend their masters or mistresses with the profoundest respect. Maundrell observes this to be the case in Turkey: and Pp. Pococke says, that in Egypt "every thing is done with the greatest decency and the most profound silence: the slaves or servants standing at the bottom of the room with their hands joined before them, watching with the utmost attention every motion of their master, who commands them by signs." Parkhurst.

We have never more need of the influence of God's Spirit, than when those who oppress us add contempt and scorn to their injustice, and when the spectators of our misery take occasion from thence to deride and despise our persons; nor can any thing preserve us, in those cases, from some unwarrantable excesses of grief, but the casting up our eyes unto Him from whom all afflictions come. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm CXXIV. This Psalm is an acknowledgment of God's assistance, and a thankful commemoration of the deliverances wrought signally by Him. It was appointed to be sung by the Levites after the return from the captivity, and is very suitable to any other eminent deliverance wrought by God for His servants. Dr. Hammond. This is one of the proper Psalms for the thanksgiving days of the fifth of November, and the twenty-ninth of May.

The great lesson which this Psalm, from the beginning to the end, inculcates, is, that for every deliverance, whether of a temporal or a spiritual nature, we should, in imitation of the saints above, ascribe "salvation to our God, and unto the Lamb," Rev. vii. 10. Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXXV. This Psalm, like the preceding, is appointed for the thanksgiving on the fifth of November.

Ver. 2. As the mountains &c.] As Jerusalem is encompassed by high hills, which render it inaccessible by enemies, so is the good providence of God a never-failing barrier and protection to His people. Bp. Patrick, Travell.

3. For the rod &c.] This implies, that the Almighty, with a view to the maintenance of pure religion, will preserve His people from subjection to the power of the wicked.

—— the rod] The power. Merrick.

The clearest and most unquestionable proof that we put our trust in the Lord, is our steadiness and constancy in His precepts; that no allurements and invitations of pleasure and profit, no apprehensions of sorrow and misery and calamity, can persuade us in the least degree to swerve from them, in order to compass the one, or to avoid the other; and the surest evidence that He doth accept this our trust in Him, is, when He blesses our constancy, and makes us, as it were, as unmoveable as Himself; and as He cannot fail, or be shaken in His resolutions towards us, so we cannot be shaken in our confidence in Him, or misled by that confidence. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm CXXVI. There is little doubt that this Psalm was expressly composed on the return of the Jews from their captivity in Babylon, which the Psalmist prays may be fully completed by the entire restoration of the faithful. Travell. This is one of the proper Psalms for the thanksgiving on the twenty-ninth of May.

¶ A Song of degrees.

† Heb. returned the return-ing of Zion.

WHEN the LORD † turned again the captivity of Zion, we were like them that dream.

2 Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing: then said they among the heathen, The LORD † hath done great things for them.

† Heb. hath magnified to do with them.

3 The LORD hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad.

4 Turn again our captivity, O LORD, as the streams in the south.

5 They that sow in tears shall reap in ‖ Or, singing. ‖ joy.

6 He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing ‖ precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.

‖ Or, seed basket.

PSALM CXXVII.

1 The virtue of God's blessing. 3 Good children are his gift.

‖ Or, of Solomon. ¶ A Song of degrees ‖ for Solomon.

† Heb. that are builders of it in it.

EXCEPT the LORD build the house, they labour in vain † that build it: except the LORD keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain.

2 It is vain for you to rise up early, to sit up late, to eat the bread of sorrows: for so he giveth his beloved sleep.

3 Lo, children are an heritage of the LORD: and the fruit of the womb is his reward.

4 As arrows are in the hand of a mighty man; so are children of the youth.

5 Happy is the man that † hath his quiver full of them: they shall not be ashamed, but they ‖ shall speak with the enemies in the gate.

† Heb. hath filled his quiver with them. ‖ Or, shall subdue, as Exod. 18. 27. or, destroy.

PSALM CXXVIII.

The sundry blessings which follow them that fear God.

¶ A Song of degrees.

BLESSED is every one that feareth the LORD; that walketh in his ways.

2 For thou shalt eat the labour of thine hands: happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee.

3 Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine by the sides of thine house: thy children like olive plants round about thy table.

4 Behold, that thus shall the man be blessed that feareth the LORD.

5 The LORD shall bless thee out of Zion: and thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem all the days of thy life.

Ver. 1. — we were like them that dream.] We could scarcely believe it, but thought ourselves only in a dream of so great an happiness. Dr. Wells.

4. Turn again our captivity, &c.] The joy occasioned by CYRUS's proclamation having been described in the former part of the Psalm, we may now suppose some of the Jews ready to set out on their return home; at which time, and during their journey, they prefer this petition to God, that He would be pleased to bring back the rest of their countrymen, who, like floods rolling down upon the thirsty regions of the "south," might people the land, and by their labours put an end to the desolations of Judah. Bp. Horne.

— the streams in the south.] This image seems to be taken from the torrents in the deserts to the south of Judea; which were constantly dried up in summer, (see Job vi. 17, 18,) and as constantly returned after the rainy season, and filled again their deserted channels. Bp. Lowth.

5, 6. They that sow in tears &c.] These verses pray in general, that God from a melancholy beginning (for such was the restoration at first, rather the seed of one, than one maturely grown) would grant a happy issue. Mudge, Green.

This Psalm engages us to reflect on the wonderful things which God has done at all times for His people, by delivering them, contrary to all appearance, from the power of their enemies. It assures us moreover, that if the Church, or the righteous, are in affliction and tears, God gives them at last occasion to rejoice; and, in general, when men have been tried and humbled by affliction, He makes gladness succeed to sorrow; causing those who sow in tears to reap in joy. Osterwald.

Psalm CXXVII. This is a Psalm which can never be out of season, the design of its author being to teach us the necessity of a dependance upon God and His blessing, in every work to which we set our hands. Bp. Horne. It is used in our service for the Thanksgiving of Women after Child-birth.

Ver. 2. It is vain for you &c.] That is, it is in vain for you to rise up early to labour, to go late to rest, and to eat the bread of carefulness, unless the Lord bless your endeavours: whereas He giveth to His beloved even while they sleep. Green.

4. — children of the youth.] Rather, as in the old translation, "the young children." Rosenmüller, Street.

5. — but they shall speak &c.] The "gate" was the place of resort for publick business and justice under the porch that belonged to it. Children would support a man there in his contest and pretensions. Mudge. See the notes on Gen. xxiii. 10, and on Deut. xvi. 18. There is said to be a Chinese proverb to this effect, "When a son is born into a family, a bow and arrow are hung up before the gate:" this should seem to be a figurative expression, signifying that a new protector is added to the family. Merrick.

The Psalmist does not certainly intend to say at ver. 2, that labour and diligence are vain, but that they are so, except the Lord be with the labourer: the business is not to be done by all the industry and pains in the world without Him: whereas, if His aid be called in, if part of our time be spent in prayer, not the whole of it in toiling without prayer, our work will become easier, and go on better; a solicitude and anxiety for its success and completion will no longer prey upon our minds by day, and break our rest at night; we shall cheerfully fulfil our daily tasks, and then with confidence and resignation lay our heads upon our pillows, and God will "give to His beloved" a sweet and undisturbed "sleep," which shall fit them to return every morning, with renewed vigour and alacrity, to their stated employments. Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXXVIII. This is generally considered as a marriage-song, sung at the marriages of the Israelites; strongly pointing out the happiness of such as are truly religious, and the claim they thereby obtain to be blessed in their person, in their family, and in the prosperity of their country. Travell. It is introduced into our marriage service.

Marriage was ordained by God to complete the felicity of man

6 Yea, thou shalt see thy children's children, and peace upon Israel.

PSALM CXXIX.

1 An exhortation to praise God for saving Israel in their great afflictions. 5 The haters of the church are cursed.

¶ A Song of degrees.

‖ Or, Much.

‖ MANY a time have they afflicted me from my youth, may Israel now say:

2 Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth: yet they have not prevailed against me.

3 The plowers plowed upon my back: they made long their furrows.

4 The LORD is righteous: he hath cut asunder the cords of the wicked.

5 Let them all be confounded and turned back that hate Zion.

6 Let them be as the grass upon the housetops, which withereth afore it groweth up:

7 Wherewith the mower filleth not his hand; nor he that bindeth sheaves his bosom.

8 Neither do they which go by say, The blessing of the LORD be upon you: we bless you in the name of the LORD.

PSALM CXXX.

1 The psalmist profeweth his hope in prayer, 5 and his patience in hope. 7 He exhorteth Israel to hope in God.

¶ A Song of degrees.

OUT of the depths have I cried unto thee, O LORD.

2 Lord, hear my voice: let thine ears be attentive to the voice of my supplications.

3 If thou, LORD, shouldest mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand?

4 But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared.

5 I wait for the LORD, my soul doth wait, and in his word do I hope.

6 My soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning: ‖ I say, more than they that watch for the morning. ‖ Or, which watch unto the morning.

7 Let Israel hope in the LORD: for with the LORD there is mercy, and with him is plenteous redemption.

8 And he shall redeem Israel from all his iniquities.

in a state of innocence; and the benediction of Heaven will ever descend upon it, when undertaken in "the fear of the Lord." The vine, a lowly plant, raised with tender care, becoming, by its luxuriancy, its beauty, and its clusters, the ornament and glory of the house to which it is joined, and by which it is supported, forms the finest imaginable emblem of a fair, virtuous, and fruitful wife. The olive trees planted by the inhabitants of the eastern countries around their tables, or banqueting places in their gardens, to cheer the eye by their verdure, and to refresh the body by their cooling shade, do no less aptly and significantly set forth the pleasure which parents feel at the sight of a numerous and flourishing offspring. Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXXIX. This Psalm was perhaps composed by Ezra or Nehemiah, for the consolation of the Jews at the time that their enemies obstructed the rebuilding of the city and temple. Dimock. It is one of the proper Psalms of the thanksgiving day on the twenty-ninth of May.

Ver. 3. The plowers plowed &c.] A figurative mode of expressing severe oppression.

5. The Lord is righteous: &c.] But God, who is ever faithful to His promises, has destroyed the power of these wicked oppressors. Travell.

7. — his bosom.] See the note on Ps. lxxix. 12.

8. — The blessing of the Lord &c.] This is a poetical form of saying, Let them be destroyed, as that which is useless; which affords neither the plenty nor the joy of harvest.

Both under the Old Testament and under the New, the church of God has often been assaulted, but He has always preserved it, and its enemies have not been able to destroy it. Hence we may rest in sure belief, that His Church will ever stand secure, and that those who "hate Zion" will be "confounded and turned back." Osterwald.

Psalm CXXX. In the first part of this Psalm, the author prays God earnestly to forgive him his sins, and to remit the consequences of them, in strong expectation that, pursuant to His word, He would grant his prayer: in the second, he has obtained his request, and encourages therefore all his brethren to put their trust in God, for redeeming them from their sins and the punishment of them. Mudge. It seems to have been composed, or at least used, upon occasion of the publick penitence, of which mention is made in the ninth and tenth chapters of Ezra. Ravenmiller. This Psalm is appointed to be used on Ash Wednesday, and is one of those which are styled penitential Psalms.

Ver. 1. Out of the depths] Or deep waters. Troubles and calamities are figuratively represented by deep waters. Green.

3. — shouldest mark iniquities,] Shouldest charge us with all our sins. Bp. Wilson. Wilt be extreme to mark what is done amiss. Old Translation.

6. My soul &c.] The meaning is, The guards every morning that hasten to their watches, are not earlier than I am in my daily addresses to God. By these guards seem to be meant the priests, or some officers of theirs, which were peculiarly appointed, from a tower, to expect the first appearance of break of day, for the purpose of offering the morning oblation. Dr. Hammond. See the note on Exod. xiv. 24.

8. And he shall redeem &c.] He will assuredly rescue them from those distresses and sufferings, which He hath inflicted on them, as a punishment for their iniquities. Travell.

The fourth verse of this Psalm should teach us, upon what ground every man is to build the persuasion of the pardon of his sins. It is the temper of most persons, to be more busy about their assurance, than their obedience; and to be confident of their reward, while they should be solicitous about their duty. But to discover whether such men's confidence be sound and rational, or vain and fallacious, I should recommend them to this one criterion and mark of trial, namely, to reflect upon and consider what effects this persuasion of God's mercy works upon their spirits. If men, from the persuasions of mercy, grow impudent and bold in sin, presume upon God's patience, and venture far upon the stock of a supposed forgiveness, they must know that they are under the power of a destructive infatuation. Mercy was never intended to serve any man in his vice, to smooth him in his sin, and by abused hopes of pardon to strengthen the hands of his corruption. And therefore he that from God's mercy gathers no argument for His fear, may conclude thus much, that there is indeed forgiveness with God, but no forgiveness for him. Dr. South.

PSALM CXXXI.

1 David, professing his humility, 3 exhorteth Israel to hope in God.

¶ A Song of degrees of David.

LORD, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty: neither do I † exercise myself in great matters, or in things too † high for me.

† Heb. wonderful.

2 Surely I have behaved and quieted † myself, as a child that is weaned of his mother: my soul is even as a weaned child.

† Heb. my soul.

3 Let Israel hope in the LORD † from henceforth and for ever.

PSALM CXXXII.

1 David in his prayer commendeth unto God the religious care he had for the ark. 8 His prayer at the removing of the ark, 11 with a repetition of God's promises.

¶ A Song of degrees.

LORD, remember David, and all his afflictions:

about 1004. 2 How he sware unto the LORD, and vowed unto the mighty God of Jacob;

3 Surely I will not come into the tabernacle of my house, nor go up into my bed;

4 I will not give sleep to mine eyes, or slumber to mine eyelids,

5 Until I find out a place for the LORD, † an habitation for the mighty God of Jacob.

6 Lo, we heard of it at Ephratah: we found it in the fields of the wood.

7 We will go into his tabernacles: we will worship at his footstool.

8 [a] Arise, O LORD, into thy rest; thou, and the ark of thy strength.

[a] 2 Chron. 6. 41. Numb. 10. 35.

9 Let thy priests be clothed with righteousness; and let thy saints shout for joy.

10 For thy servant David's sake turn not away the face of thine anointed.

11 The LORD hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; [b] Of the fruit of † thy body will I set upon thy throne.

[b] 2 Sam. 7. 12. 1 Kings 8. 25. 2 Chron. 6. 16. Luke 1. 69. Acts 2. 30.

12 If thy children will keep my covenant and my testimony that I shall teach them, their children shall also sit upon thy throne for evermore.

13 For the LORD hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation.

14 This is my rest for ever: here will I dwell; for I have desired it.

15 I will ‖ abundantly bless her provision: I will satisfy her poor with bread.

‖ Or, surely.

16 I will also clothe her priests with salvation: and her saints shall shout aloud for joy.

17 [c] There will I make the horn of David to bud: I have ordained a ‖ lamp for mine anointed.

[c] Luke 1. 69.

Psalm CXXXI. This Psalm was probably intended as a form of humble devotion, to be used at seasons of religious humiliation.

Ver. 2. Surely I have behaved &c.] The meaning seems to be, I depend wholly upon God's providence for the way and time of bringing me to the kingdom, as the poor helpless infant, when it is deprived of its natural and accustomed food, the mother's milk, takes no care to provide for itself, but wholly relies upon its mother's care for its support. Poole.

This Psalm expresses the sentiments which all the children of God ought to entertain: they are to be humble, not aiming at high things, but resembling little children in innocence and simplicity. What David teaches us on this head, is the same with what our Lord more fully recommends in the Gospel, when He tells us, that if we become not as little children, He will not acknowledge us for His disciples, nor shall we enter into the kingdom of heaven. Ostervald.

Psalm CXXXII. Some are of opinion that this Psalm was composed by Solomon at the dedication of the temple, since he concludes his prayer upon that occasion with three verses of it. See 2 Chron. vi. 41, 42. Many parts of it refer so plainly to the Messiah, that it is well adapted to the service of Christmas-day. Travell.

Ver. 3. — I will not come into &c.] This is not to be understood literally, but as a figurative expression of his passionate desire to do this work, which was so earnest that neither his house, nor bed, nor sleep, could give him any content till it was completed, or in some forwardness. Poole.

5. — a place for the Lord,] A convenient place for the ark of the Lord, 1 Chron. xv. 1. and xvi. 1—43. Bp. Patrick.

6. Lo, we heard of it &c.] In other words, as Bp. Patrick hath paraphrased this verse, "And now, behold, the Lord Himself, to our great joy, hath told us the very place where He will fix His habitation, (1 Chron. xxi. 18, 26.) in the territory of Beth-lehem Ephrata, (Gen. xxxv. 19.) in the fields of that forest, where the angel stood, and directed David to build an altar to the Lord," 1 Chron. xxi. 18. and xxii. 1. Bp. Horne. Jerusalem being situated not far from Beth-lehem, might be comprehended in the region of Ephrata. Merrick.

7. — we will worship at his footstool.] The Lord's footstool here mentioned, was either the ark of the testimony itself, or the place at least where it stood, called the Holy of Holies, towards which the Jews in their temple used to worship. Jos. Mede.

8. Arise, O Lord, into thy rest,] Arise, O Lord, to take possession of Thy resting place. Green.

10. — turn not away &c.] Do not reject the prayer of him, whom Thou hast consecrated to be king of Thy people. Travell.

11. The Lord hath sworn &c.] That this is a prophecy of the Messiah, we have the authority of St. Peter to say, Acts ii. 30. This promise to David occurs, 2 Sam. vii. 12. and hath a twofold sense, relating to Solomon in type and shadow, to Christ in truth and substance. Bp. Horne.

12 — for evermore.] The temporal kingdom of David continued in the line of David till the birth of Christ, when the spiritual kingdom commenced in the person of this Son of David, of which there shall be no end. Dimock.

16. I will also clothe her priests with salvation:] I will spread My protection and defence over her priests, which are consecrated to Me. Bp. Hall.

17. — the horn of David &c.] The "horn" and "lamp" signify the regal dignity of David. No sooner shall one of his successors fail, but another shall be raised up to succeed him. Green. The Jews confess that this verse mystically refers to Christ. Bp. Horne.

The vow which David had made to establish a fixed place of

PSALM CXXXIII.

The benefit of the communion of saints.

¶ A Song of degrees of David.

† Heb. even together.

BEHOLD, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell † together in unity!

2 It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard: that went down to the skirts of his garments;

3 As the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion: for there the LORD commanded the blessing, even life for evermore.

PSALM CXXXIV.

An exhortation to bless God.

¶ A Song of degrees.

BEHOLD, bless ye the LORD, all ye servants of the LORD, which by night stand in the house of the LORD.

‖ Or, in holiness.

2 Lift up your hands ‖ in the sanctuary, and bless the LORD.

3 The LORD that made heaven and earth bless thee out of Zion.

PSALM CXXXV.

1 An exhortation to praise God for his mercy, 5 for his power, 8 for his judgments. 15 The vanity of idols. 19 An exhortation to bless God.

PRAISE ye the LORD. Praise ye the name of the LORD; praise him, O ye servants of the LORD.

2 Ye that stand in the house of the LORD, in the courts of the house of our God,

3 Praise the LORD; for the LORD is good: sing praises unto his name; for it is pleasant.

4 For the LORD hath chosen Jacob unto himself, and Israel for his peculiar treasure.

5 For I know that the LORD is great, and that our LORD is above all gods.

6 Whatsoever the LORD pleased, that did he in heaven, and in earth, in the seas, and all deep places.

7 * He causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth; he maketh lightnings for the rain; he bringeth the wind out of his treasuries.

* Jer. 10. 13.

Divine service, was a striking mark of his piety. From hence great men, magistrates, and all men in general, ought to learn, that they should desire, with the greatest fervency, the glory of God, and His true worship, and promote them to the utmost of their power. The choice which God had made of Zion for the place of His worship, and the promises with which He had engaged to dwell there for ever, to bless and prosper it, are to be applied to the Christian Church, in which He dwells in a more particular manner, and wherein He is to be worshipped and adored unto the end of the world. We ought all of us continually to pray for the preservation of the Church, for a blessing on its ministers, and on all its members. Osterwald.

Psalm CXXXIII. This short but pleasing Psalm was composed either to recommend unity among the tribes of Israel, or to celebrate it when it had taken place. It was fitly used by the first Christians to express their joy for the blessed union of Jews and Gentiles; and may now serve the uses of all Christian societies, whose happiness lies in holy peace and concord. Bps. Horne and Patrick.

Ver. 2. It is like the precious ointment &c.] The happiness derived to all classes of the community from the establishment of unity, is here aptly compared to the holy oil, which diffuses sanctity and fragrance over the person and garments of the high priest.

—— skirts] The original word does not signify "skirts," but the upper part of the garment about the neck, near the beard. This garment was put over the head; and the neck part or collar, where the head came through it, is the part meant. Reeves.

3. — the dew of Hermon,] Maundrell says, "We were sufficiently instructed by experience what the holy Psalmist means by 'the dew of Hermon,' our tents being as wet with it as if it had rained all night."

—— the mountains of Zion:] These seem to be those mountains which stood round about Jerusalem. Rosenmüller.

—— for there &c.] That is, God hath promised all kind of prosperity upon the dwelling of those who live together in unity. Green, Rosenmüller.

The colouring of the picture presented to us in this Psalm is much heightened by its being viewed in another light, as a representation of spiritual unity in the Church. The spirit of heavenly love was that oil of gladness which Jehovah poured without measure on Him who is the High Priest and Head of His Church. Insinuating and healing, comforting and exhilarating, it is diffused from Him over His body mystical, even down to the least and lowest members; "of His fulness have we all received." Nor did the dew of heaven, in time of drought, ever prove more refreshing and beneficial to the mountains of Judah, than are the influences of Grace, when descending in soft silence from above upon the Church; in the union and communion of which, God hath "commanded the blessing, even life for evermore." Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXXXIV. This Psalm seems to be nothing more than the alternate cry of the two different divisions of the temple watch. The first watch addresses the second, reminding them of their duty: the second answers by a solemn blessing: the address and the answer seem both to be a set form, which each division proclaimed, or sung aloud at stated intervals, to notify the time of night. Bp. Lowth.

The ministers of God should learn from this Psalm, that as the priests and Levites were by their office called to praise God day and night in His temple, and to pray for the people of Israel; so are the ministers of the Christian church, by their office, in a particular manner, called to bless and praise continually God's holy name, and to pray without ceasing for the prosperity of the Church. Osterwald.

Psalm CXXXV. This Psalm is thought to have been sung by the Levites at the opening of the gates of the temple. Dr. Wells.

Ver. 7. — he maketh lightnings for the rain;] He maketh the lightnings to attend the rain. Green. Dr. Russell, in his description of the weather at Aleppo, in September, tells us, that seldom a night passes without much lightning in the north-west quarter,

14. — will judge his people,] Will plead for, or avenge His people. Dr. Hammond.

—— will repent himself concerning his servants.] Will be gracious unto His servants. Old Translation.

18. They that make them &c.] They, who form them for objects of worship, or who blindly depend upon them for favour and support, are as stupid and senseless, as the very idols themselves. Travell.

All the servants of God, they more especially who minister in the temple, are repeatedly in this, as in the foregoing Psalm, excited to praise their blessed Master. Two of the reasons assigned, why they should do this, are; first, the goodness of that Master, and secondly, the pleasantness of the employment. The latter of these reasons hath a natural and necessary dependance on the former. A sense of the Divine mercy will tune our hearts and voices to praise. We, who are upon earth, often find ourselves indisposed for the duty of thanksgiving, because the concerns of the body, the cares and pleasures of life, extinguish, for a time, this sense in us, until grace, prayer, and meditation, render it again lively and active. In the inhabitants of heaven, who behold God without the veil of matter interposed, it is always so; and therefore, they rest not day nor night from singing hallelujahs, nor cease one moment to rejoice in God their Saviour. Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXXXVI. This is a delightful hymn of praise and thanksgiving to Jehovah, God of gods, and Lord of lords, for the wonders of creation, of providence, and grace; which were probably celebrated in due order by one half of the choir, while the other half, or perhaps the whole in full chorus, took up the burden of each verse, "For His mercy endureth for ever:" a form prescribed by David (1 Chron. xvi. 41.) to be used continually in the Divine service: a form highly proper for creatures, and sinful creatures, to use; whose great employment it is now, and will be for ever, to magnify the mercy and lovingkindness of their God. Bp. Horne.

Ver. 2. — God of gods:] That is, Sovereign of all the heavenly hosts. Bp. Patrick. See Exod. xviii. 11. Dimock.

3. — Lord of lords:] Lord of the kings and princes of the earth. Bp. Patrick.

4. To him who alone doeth great wonders:] All the works of God are wonderful, and speak Him alone to have been their author. The established course of the world is in reality no less admirable, than are those extraordinary interpositions of Omnipotence, whereby it hath been sometimes interrupted and suspended; though the latter, on account of their novelty, are apt to affect us more than the former doth, which is ever before our eyes, and therefore less regarded by us. How many of those for whom the wonders of creation, providence, and redemption have been wrought, think none of them worthy their attention! Angels admire and adore, where man will not deign to cast an eye, or employ a thought. Bp. Horne.

ble for the mind of man to go, it will fall infinitely short of what He really is. "There is no end of His greatness." The most exalted creature He has made is only capable of adoring it, none but Himself can comprehend it. Such He is, when considered by the light of reason and philosophy. But if we would see Him in all the wonders of His mercy, we must have recourse to revelation, which represents Him to us not only as infinitely great and glorious, but as infinitely good and just in His dispensations towards man. We should often refresh our minds with such thoughts of Him, and annihilate ourselves before Him, in the contemplation of our own worthlessness, and of His transcendent excellency and perfection. Addison.

Psalm CXXXVII. This is the woful lamentation of one of the Jewish captives in Babylon, either at the time of their captivity, or at their return from it. It contains a mournful reflexion on their banishment from their native country, combined with the insolent behaviour of their enemies; and foretels the future destruction which awaited the city of Babylon and its devoted inhabitants. Travell.

Ver. 1. — we sat down.] Sitting on the ground was a posture that denoted mourning and deep distress. See Lam. ii. 10. Job ii. 13. Bp. Lowth.

4. How shall we sing &c.] Many singers were carried captives, Ezra ii. 41. These would of course carry their instruments with them and be insulted, as here. Their songs were sacred, and unfit to be sung before idolaters. But the words, "How shall we sing," &c. are not an answer given to their enemies, but the free utterance of the feelings of the Jews amongst themselves. Abp. Secker.

5. — her cunning.] Or, skill to play upon the harp. Dr. Wells.

6. — if I prefer not &c.] Literally, If I do not exalt Jerusalem above the chief, or top, of my joy; that is, if I do not make it the principal subject of my joy. Bp. Lowth.

7. Remember, O Lord, — day of Jerusalem.] Or, Remember, O Lord, to "the children of Edom" the day of Jerusalem; that is, punish them for their cruel insults. Dimock.

— the day of Jerusalem.] The day on which it was destroyed. Rosenmüller.

8 — happy shall he be.] The meaning of these words is, He shall go on and prosper, for the Lord of Hosts shall go with him, and fight his battles against the enemy and oppressor of His people. Bp. Horne.

9. — dasheth thy little ones against the stones.] That the Babylonians probably used this cruelty to the Israelitish children, see Lam. ii. 11. and Isa. xiii. 16. Dimock.

If the law of nature obliges a man to love and reverence his parents who begat him, it also binds him to a vehement affection and concernment for his country, the place of his birth, and the air that nourished him. The happy state and condition of his country is a greater joy and comfort to a true patriot, than his own particular state of wealth and prosperity can be; and he is more afflicted and cast down for any publick misery that befalls it, than for any circumstance of it that brings calamity to himself. Lord Clarendon.

Psalm CXXXVIII. In the Greek version this Psalm is said to have been made use of by Haggai and Zechariah at the rebuilding of the temple. Dr. Hammond.

¶ A Psalm of David.

I WILL praise thee with my whole heart: [a] before the gods will I sing praise unto thee. [a] Psal. 119. 46.

2 I will worship toward thy holy temple, and praise thy name for thy lovingkindness and for thy truth: for thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name.

3 In the day when I cried thou answeredst me, and strengthenedst me with strength in my soul.

4 All the kings of the earth shall praise thee, O LORD, when they hear the words of thy mouth.

5 Yea, they shall sing in the ways of the LORD: for great is the glory of the LORD.

6 Though the LORD be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly: but the proud he knoweth afar off.

7 Though I walk in the midst of trouble, thou wilt revive me: thou shalt stretch forth thine hand against the wrath of mine enemies, and thy right hand shall save me.

8 The LORD will perfect that which concerneth me: thy mercy, O LORD, endureth for ever: forsake not the works of thine own hands.

PSALM CXXXIX.

1 David praiseth God for his allseeing providence, 17 and for his infinite mercies. 19 He depreth the wicked. 23 He prayeth for sincerity.

¶ To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

O LORD, thou hast searched me, and known me.

2 Thou knowest my downsitting and mine uprising, thou understandest my thought afar off.

3 Thou ‖ compassest my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways. ‖ Or, winnowest.

4 For there is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O LORD, thou knowest it altogether.

5 Thou hast beset me behind and before, and laid thine hand upon me.

6 Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it.

7 Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence?

8 [a] If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. [a] Amos 9. 2, 3, 4.

9 If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea;

10 Even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me.

11 If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; even the night shall be light about me.

12 Yea, [b] the darkness † hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day: † the darkness and the light are both alike to thee. [b] Job 26. 6. Hebr. 4. 13. † Heb. darkeneth not. † Heb. as is the darkness, so is the light.

13 For thou hast possessed my reins: thou hast covered me in my mother's womb:

Ver 1. — before the gods] Probably, in the presence of the princes and nobles assembled at some national solemnity.

2. — toward thy holy temple,] Wherever the ark was, there was the temple of Jehovah. See 1 Sam. iii. 3. And the Psalmist probably directed himself to that point. See Dan. vi. 10. Dimock.

—— for thou hast magnified &c.] God, he says, had done honour to His word beyond all that had ever been said or imagined of Him. Mudge. Or the rendering may be, "for Thou hast magnified Thy name and Thy word above all things." Dimock and Old Translation.

5. — they shall sing in the ways of the Lord:] They shall rejoice in the doctrine of God delivered by Christ.

6. — but the proud he knoweth afar off.] As to the proud, God "knoweth" and He detesteth them; He beholdeth and keepeth them at a distance. Bp. Horne.

In the former part of this hymn, the fervent zeal which animates true believers appears in a strong light; it inclines them to rejoice in God, to worship Him, to sing His praises, and to declare His lovingkindness before all men, even before the great men of the earth, that they may learn to fear God, and shew forth His glory. Ostervald. From the last verse we learn, that in troublous times, and the days of affliction, we must look back on that which God hath already done for us, and from thence draw an argument, that He will perfect that which remains, and not leave His work unfinished: we must remember that His mercies fail not after a time, but endure for ever the same; and when we call to mind, that we are the work of His own hands, how can we think He will forsake us, unless we utterly and finally forsake Him? Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXXXIX. It seems evident, from the latter part of this noble and instructive Psalm, that the author penned it at a time when he was persecuted and calumniated, as an appeal to the allseeing Judge between him and his adversaries. Bp. Horne.

Ver. 2. — afar off.] From heaven, Thy dwelling place. Greek. "Long before;" that is, Long before they are uttered, is the rendering in the Old Translation.

3. Thou compassest my path &c.] That is, Thou watchest and siftest all my actions, both by day and night. Travell.

5. — laid thine hand upon me.] That is, hast so restrained me, that I cannot stir without Thy leave. Bp. Patrick.

7. —from thy spirit?] By this expression most of the ancient fathers, and the generality of modern interpreters, understand the Holy Ghost. It is also clear from Psalm li. 13, &c. that this Person of the Trinity was well known to the Jews in the time of David. Dimock.

8. — if I make my bed in hell,] That is, If I lie down in the grave. Abp. Secker.

9. If I take the wings &c.] Could I be transported, with the swiftness of light, to the regions of the farthest east; or could I make my dwelling in the remotest western sea. Travell.

—— the sea.] That is, the Mediterranean sea, which was west of Judea. Dimock.

13. For thou hast possessed my reins:] Or rather, Because Thou hast created my reins. This verse contains the reason why 14 I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made: marvellous are thy works; and that my soul knoweth right well.

† Heb. greatly.

15 My ‖substance was not hid from thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth.

19 Surely thou wilt slay the wicked, O God: depart from me therefore, ye bloody men.

20 For they speak against thee wickedly, and thine enemies take thy name in vain.

21 Do not I hate them, O LORD, that hate thee? and am not I grieved with those that rise up against thee?

22 I hate them with perfect hatred: I count them mine enemies.

14. I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made.] Those who were skilled in anatomy among the ancients, concluded from the outward and inward make of the human body that it was the work of a Being transcendently wise and powerful. As the world grew more enlightened in this art, their discoveries gave them fresh opportunities of admiring the conduct of Providence in the formation of a human body. Galen was converted by his dissections, and could not but own a Supreme Being upon a survey of this His handy-work. By means of modern discoveries we see new wonders in the human frame. In short, the body of man is such a subject as stands the utmost test of examination. Though it appears formed with the nicest wisdom upon a superficial survey of it, it still mends upon the search, and produces our surprise and amazement in proportion as we pry into it. Addison.

15. — in the lowest parts of the earth.] By this expression is meant "the womb;" where, by the wonderful power and wisdom of the Divine Workmaster operating in secret, the human form is gradually fashioned and matured for its birth. Bp. Horne.

16. Thine eyes did see &c.] When the matter, of which I am made, was without form, it was visible to Thee how all my body should be framed; and accordingly all my members were fashioned, and adapted to their several uses. Bp. Patrick.

17. How precious &c.] How precious unto me, O God, are the thoughts of Thee! how numerous are the subjects of them! Green.

19. — ye bloody men.] Ye blood-thirsty men, shedders of blood. Bp. Horne, Poole.

The consideration that the Divine Being inhabits infinitude, that He dwells among all His works, that He is present to the mind of man, and that He discovers Himself in a more glorious manner among the regions of the blessed, should be kept awake in us at all times and in all places, and possess our minds with a perpetual reverence and awe. It should be interwoven with all our thoughts and perceptions, and become one with the consciousness of our being. It is not to be reflected on with the coldness of philosophy; but ought to sink us into the lowest prostration before Him, who is so astonishingly great, wonderful, and holy. Addison.

Psalm CXL. This Psalm is a prayer of David's for deliverance from his malicious and treacherous enemies, such as Doeg and the Ziphites, who had undertaken to overthrow him, and a prediction of the evils which should fall upon them, as a just reward of their dealings with him. Dr. Hammond.

Ver. 1. — from the violent man.] Thus Saul is characterised, Ps. xviii. 48. Green.

3. They have sharpened &c.] That is, By their false accusations, as by so much poison, they have endeavoured to destroy me. Dr. Wells.

5. The proud have hid a snare &c.] David here describes the subtilty and industry employed by his enemies to effect his destruction, by lying in wait for him, as a skilful fowler doth for his game, so that they thought it impossible he should escape their hands. Bp. Horne.

9, 10, 11. As for the head &c.] The prophet, in these three verses, predicted those just judgments, which Heaven will inflict on the slanderers and persecutors of the righteous. Their lips

10 Let burning coals fall upon them: let them be cast into the fire; into deep pits, that they rise not up again.

† Heb. a man of tongue. ‖ Or, an evil speaker. a wicked man of violence, be established in the earth: let him be hunted to his overthrow.

11 Let not † ‖ an evil speaker be established in the earth: evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him.

12 I know that the LORD will maintain the cause of the afflicted, and the right of the poor.

13 Surely the righteous shall give thanks unto thy name: the upright shall dwell in thy presence.

PSALM CXLI.

1 David prayeth that his suit may be acceptable, 3 his conscience sincere, 7 and his life safe from snares.

¶ A Psalm of David.

LORD, I cry unto thee: make haste unto me; give ear unto my voice, when I cry unto thee.

2 Let my prayer be † set forth before thee as incense; and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice.

3 Set a watch, O LORD, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips.

4 Incline not my heart to any evil thing, to practise wicked works with men that work iniquity: and let me not eat of their dainties.

5 ‖ Let the righteous smite me; it shall ‖ Or, Let the righteous smite me kindly, and reprove me: let not their precious oil break my head, &c be a kindness: and let him reprove me; it shall be an excellent oil, which shall not break my head: for yet my prayer also shall be in their calamities.

6 When their judges are overthrown in stony places, they shall hear my words; for they are sweet.

7 Our bones are scattered at the grave's mouth, as when one cutteth and cleaveth wood upon the earth.

8 But mine eyes are unto thee, O GOD the Lord: in thee is my trust; † leave not my soul destitute.

† Heb. make not my soul bare.

9 Keep me from the snares which they have laid for me, and the gins of the workers of iniquity.

10 Let the wicked fall into their own nets, whilst that I withal † escape.

PSALM CXLII.

David sheweth that in his trouble all his comfort was in prayer unto God.

¶ ‖ Maschil of David; A Prayer when he was in the cave.

‖ Or, A Psalm of David, giving instruction.

I CRIED unto the LORD with my voice; with my voice unto the LORD did I make my supplication.

2 I poured out my complaint before him; I shewed before him my trouble.

which uttered mischief against others, shall be the means of covering themselves with confusion, when out of their own mouths they shall be judged. Those tongues, which have contributed to set the world on fire, shall be tormented with the hot burning coals of eternal vengeance: and they who with so much eagerness and diligence have prepared pits for the destruction of their brethren, shall be cast into a deep and bottomless pit, out of which they shall never rise. Bp. Horne.

We are here to observe, that God defends the righteous from the violence of the wicked; that His vengeance pursues cruel and unjust men, and those who slander and deceive their neighbours; that, how formidable soever their power may appear, He defeats all their designs; and if He suffers the innocent to be oppressed for a while, He shews at last that He is their Protector, and gives them occasion to own and celebrate His power, justice, and goodness. In this view, and with such a spirit as this, and not with a spirit of resentment and revenge against them that have offended us, we ought to read and meditate on this Psalm. Ostervald.

Psalm CXLI. David being driven out of Judea by Saul, begs of God grace that he may not sin against Him with his tongue, nor be drawn into any sinful compliances by living amongst idolaters. He confides in God's help, and prays that He would deliver him from those who sought his ruin. He probably composed this Psalm just before his flight to Achish, king of Gath; when he had a second time spared Saul's life, but could trust him no longer. See 1 Sam. xxvi. and xxvii. 1. Green, Bp. Horne.

Ver. 2. Let my prayer &c.] This verse plainly shews, that the Psalmist was then at a distance from the tabernacle, where all the solemn prayers of the Israelites, together with their daily sacrifices, were offered up. And therefore he begs that God would accept of all which it was in his power to perform, namely, the devotion of his heart, and the elevation of his hands in prayer; that the one might ascend to heaven, fragrant and well-pleasing as the cloud of "incense" mounting from the holy altar; and the other, in conjunction with it, prevail instead of the "evening oblation," for the deliverance of himself and his companions. Bp. Horne.

4. Incline not my heart] "O let not mine heart be inclined." Old Translation.

——let me not eat of their dainties.] Let me not partake of their society.

6. When their judges &c.] This passage has been variously rendered. According to our translation, the sense may be, "When their judges" (the leaders, principal persons of my enemies) "are overthrown in stony places," endeavouring to escape into a place of safety, they will hearken to My counsels and offers, which they now despise. Poole.

7. Our bones are scattered &c.] Expressing the great danger, in which he and his friends were, of being utterly destroyed by their enemies. Jenius.

The chief security against the fruitless anguish of impatience, must arise from frequent reflexion on the wisdom and goodness of the God of nature, in whose hands are riches and poverty, honour and disgrace, pleasure and pain, life and death. A settled conviction of the tendency of every thing to our good, and the possibility of turning miseries into happiness by receiving them rightly, will incline us to bless the name of the Lord, whether He gives or takes away. Dr. Johnson.

Psalm CXLII. This Psalm is entitled, "A prayer of David when he was in the cave," probably of En-gedi, or Adullam; 1 Sam. xxiv. 1, 2. 3. and xxii. 1. It is an earnest supplication to God, stating the utter failure of all human assistance, and humbly praying for the Divine aid. Travell.

Ver. 1. I cried] Rather, I will cry. The whole of this Psalm seems to be an actual prayer. Bp. Horne.

3 When my spirit was overwhelmed within me, then thou knewest my path. In the way wherein I walked have they privily laid a snare for me.

‖ Or, Look on the right hand, and see. † Heb. perished from me. ‡ Heb. no man sought after my soul.

4 I ‖ looked on my right hand, and beheld, but there was no man that would know me: refuge † failed me; ‡ no man cared for my soul.

5 I cried unto thee, O LORD: I said, Thou art my refuge and my portion in the land of the living.

6 Attend unto my cry; for I am brought very low: deliver me from my persecutors; for they are stronger than I.

7 Bring my soul out of prison, that I may praise thy name: the righteous shall compass me about; for thou shalt deal bountifully with me.

PSALM CXLIII.

1 David prayeth for favour in judgment. 3 He complaineth of his griefs. 5 He strengtheneth his faith by meditation and prayer. 7 He prayeth for grace, 9 for deliverance, 10 for sanctification, 12 for destruction of his enemies.

¶ A Psalm of David.

HEAR my prayer, O LORD, give ear to my supplications: in thy faithfulness answer me, and in thy righteousness.

2 And enter not into judgment with thy servant: for [a] in thy sight shall no man living be justified.

[a] Exod. 34. 7. Rom. 3. 20. Gal. 2. 16.

3 For the enemy hath persecuted my soul; he hath smitten my life down to the ground; he hath made me to dwell in darkness, as those that have been long dead.

4 Therefore is my spirit overwhelmed within me; my heart within me is desolate.

5 I remember the days of old; I meditate on all thy works; I muse on the work of thy hands.

6 I stretch forth my hands unto thee: my soul thirsteth after thee, as a thirsty land. Selah.

7 Hear me speedily, O LORD: my spirit faileth: hide not thy face from me, ‖ lest I be like unto them that go down into the pit.

‖ Or, for I am become like, &c.

8 Cause me to hear thy lovingkindness in the morning; for in thee do I trust: cause me to know the way wherein I should walk; for I lift up my soul unto thee.

9 Deliver me, O LORD, from mine enemies: † I flee unto thee to hide me.

† Heb. hide me with thee.

10 Teach me to do thy will; for thou art my God: thy spirit is good; lead me into the land of uprightness.

11 Quicken me, O LORD, for thy name's sake: for thy righteousness' sake bring my soul out of trouble.

12 And of thy mercy cut off mine enemies, and destroy all them that afflict my soul: for I am thy servant.

3. When my spirit was overwhelmed &c.] Or, When my spirit is overwhelmed within me, then Thou knowest my path: in the way wherein I walk, have they privily laid a snare for me. The meaning is, Though my thoughts are so broken and confused, that I am not able to counsel and direct myself in these straits, yet Thou knowest the path wherein I walk, Thou art with me, and wilt preserve me from those who watch all my steps, and lie in ambush for me. Bp. Horne.

7. — out of prison,] That is, out of the cave in which he was confined. Bp. Patrick.

—— the righteous shall compass me about;] To join my party and assist me.

The state of David in the cave of Adullam was a state of utter destitution; but in that disconsolate, and seemingly desperate situation, he desponded not. He had a Friend in heaven, into whose bosom he "poured forth his complaint," and to whom he told the story of his trouble and distress. When danger besets us around, and fear is on every side, let us follow the example of David, and that of a greater than David, who, when the Jews and Gentiles conspired against Him, and He was left all alone, in the garden, and on the cross, gave Himself unto prayer. Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXLIII. In this Psalm David beseeches God that, passing by his manifold sins, and considering only what he suffered from his enemies, He would be pleased, according to His mercies in times past, to hearken unto his prayer, to conduct him by His good Spirit, and to deliver him from persecution. This being one of the penitential Psalms, is appointed to be used on Ash Wednesday. Tyrrell.

Ver. 2. — for in thy sight shall &c.] For if Thou shouldest proceed according to the rigour of the law, the best man living would not be acquitted at Thy tribunal. Bp. Patrick.

3. — he hath made me to dwell &c.] He hath forced me to seek my safety in holes and obscure places in the wilderness, where I seem to be buried alive, without any hope of a resurrection. Bp. Patrick.

5. — on the work of thy hands.] On what Thou hast done for others in the like distress. Bp. Wilson.

6. — as a thirsty land.] The circumstance of the lands of the East being subject to great dryness, which causes them to crack, affords the foundation of this figure, which is certainly extremely beautiful; for these dry lands have deep chinks, which "thirst" for the rain: this may be observed in India more than any where, a little before the rains fall, and wherever the lands are rich and hard. Harmer.

8. — in the morning;] That is, speedily. Dimock.

10. — thy spirit is good; lead me] Let Thy good Spirit lead me. Abp. Secker.

—— into the land of uprightness.] Or, "through plain ground;" the clause before leads to this sense, and there is an expression much the same, Psal. xxvii. 11, in which the Psalmist prays God to conduct him in a plain level way, (such was that of God's law,) because, if he went out of that, he should be liable to stumble. Mudge.

The prayer which king David makes at the beginning of this Psalm, in these words, "Enter not into judgment with Thy servant; for in Thy sight shall no man living be justified;" is of such general use, that there is no man who has not reason to make it with humility and fervency. His application to God in the time of trouble teaches us, that, whatever danger we are in, we ought to seek for security and comfort in prayer, and trust in God; and to this end we should meditate upon His works, and the many proofs He has given in all ages of His lovingkindness towards those that fear Him. But whether we are in affliction, or in any other state, we ought above all things to beg of God grace to fear Him, that we may feel the effects of His love, and be guided by His good Spirit. Osterwald.

The last verse of this Psalm leads us to reflect, wherein the peculiar happiness doth now principally consist, of "that people, whose God is the Lord." Their happiness consists in something far above riches and outward greatness; it consists in having the Lord Himself, the Supreme Governour of the world, to take care of them, and to provide all things needful for them. They have His wisdom to instruct them; His power to protect them; His mercy to pardon them; His grace to adorn them here, and His glory to crown them for ever; and all because they have the Lord Himself for their God, not only for their light, their life, their hope, their help, their strength, their tower, their sun, their shield, and their exceeding great reward, but for their God; which is infinitely more than can be couched under any other expression whatsoever. What can those persons look for more thus related to, and interested in, Him that is all things in Himself? Bp. Beveridge.

Psalm CXLV. Hitherto in this Divine book we have been presented with chequered scenes of danger and deliverance, distress and mercy. The voice of complaint hath been sometimes succeeded by that of thanksgiving; and praise, at other times, hath terminated in prayer. But now, as if the days of mourning in Zion were ended, we hear no more of Messiah as a man of sorrows, or of the Church as despised and afflicted, after the same example, in the world. Henceforth we seem not to be upon earth, but in heaven, mingling with celestial spirits around the throne, and singing, as in the following Psalm, the praises of our God and King; extolling His greatness, His might, His glory, His justice, His mercy; the majesty of His kingdom, and all His adorable perfections and wondrous works. The general subject of this Psalm makes it suitable to the service of Whit-Sunday, when we celebrate that great blessing, the descent of the Holy Spirit. Bp. Horne, Travell.

PSALM CXLVI.

1 The psalmist voweth perpetual praises to God. 3 He exhorteth not to trust in men. 5 God, for his power, justice, mercy, and kingdom, is only worthy to be trusted.

† PRAISE ye the LORD. Praise the LORD, O my soul.

4 His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish.

5 Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the LORD his God:

6 Which made heaven, and earth, the sea, and all that therein is: which keepeth truth for ever:

7 Which executeth judgment for the oppressed: which giveth food to the hungry. The LORD looseth the prisoners:

8 The LORD openeth the eyes of the blind: the LORD raiseth them that are bowed down: the LORD loveth the righteous:

Ver. 5, 6, 7. I will speak of the glorious honour &c.] Those works of God which demand to be celebrated by the tongues of men, are here divided into three kinds: First, such as declare His glory, and excite our admiration, whenever we behold them. Of this sort are the shining frame of the heavens, and all the bodies which move therein; the earth, with its furniture without, and contents within; the magnificent and stupendous ocean, which flows around it; the different tribes of animals inhabiting both the one and the other; and above all, the construction of man, the lord of this lower world. Under the second class of God's works are ranged all those which the Psalmist styles His "terrible acts," or the exertions of His power against His enemies; such as the destruction of the old world by water; of Sodom and Gomorrah by fire; of Pharaoh and his host in the Red sea; of the Canaanitish nations by the sword; and the victory gained over sin and death by the resurrection of Christ. In the third rank stand those works which have proceeded from the goodness of God, and His righteousness in the performance of His promises. And among these we may reckon all the different provisions, which have been made by Him for the bodies of men in the world, and by grace for their souls in the Church. On any of these subjects, meditation cannot be long employed without breaking forth into wonder, gratitude, and praise. Bp. Horne.

We can never speak too much upon the goodness of God, nor ought we to be ever weary in hearing about it. Yet it is to be feared that this point is not well considered and applied. For how could we be so void of love to God, of gratitude towards Him, of faith and hope in Him, were we thoroughly persuaded, did we seriously consider, that He is so exceedingly good towards us? How can we be so insensible of the benefits we enjoy, so distrustful of finding succour in our need, so dissatisfied and discontented with what befalls us, if we conceive and weigh, that all things are guided and governed by immense goodness? How also, if men have such an opinion of God impressed on their minds, comes it to pass, that they are so little careful to imitate Him in kindness, bounty, and mercy to one another? Dr. Isaac Barrow.

Psalm CXLVI. It is observable that, in the original, this and the following Psalms all begin and end with Hallelujah, that is, Praise ye the Lord. The Psalmist here extols the name of God, and calls upon all men to place their confidence in Him alone, who is the Creator, the Preserver, and the Governour of the universe, the Protector of the helpless, and the everlasting King of His people. Travell.

Ver. 4. — his thoughts] All his devices and contrivances. Dr. Wall.

We may learn from this Psalm, 1. That the best use we can make of our lives is to employ them in praising and glorifying God's holy name. 2. That it is a great folly to put our trust in princes, or in any man, since they are mortal, and therefore are mere weakness, and even as nothing; but to enjoy true happiness, we must confide alone in God, who is the Creator of the world, who loves truth and equity, does right to those that are oppressed, and delivers them; and who will reign for ever for the defence of His people and children. Osterwald.

9 The LORD preserveth the strangers; he relieveth the fatherless and widow: but the way of the wicked he turneth upside down.

[b] Exod. 15. 18. 10 [b] The LORD shall reign for ever, even thy God, O Zion, unto all generations. Praise ye the LORD.

† PRAISE ye the LORD. Praise ye the LORD from the heavens: praise him in the heights. † Heb. Hallelujah.

Psalm CXLVII. This is a Psalm of praise: by the second, third, and thirteenth verses, it seems to have been composed just after the restoration from captivity upon the rebuilding of Jerusalem. Mudge. Whether it were composed upon the above occasion or not, it is an earnest exhortation to praise God for the illustrious proofs of His power, wisdom, mercy, and justice towards all His creatures, and more especially for the abundant marks of His kindness and favour, which He bestowed upon His chosen people. Travell.

Ver. 2. The Lord doth build &c.] It is the Lord that enables us to build up Jerusalem again, Ezra vi. 14, and encourages all our brethren, that still remain in foreign countries, to return home. Dr. Wells.

10. He delighteth not &c.] He grants not His favour to the nations which excel in military power, in cavalry and infantry; but He "taketh pleasure," &c. ver. 11.

13. For he hath strengthened &c.] That is, He hath enabled us to fortify again the city of Jerusalem with walls and gates. See Neh. vi. 15, 16. Dr. Wells.

15. He sendeth forth &c.] Whatsoever His pleasure is concerning His creatures upon earth, it is speedily and effectually accomplished. Bp. Hall.

17. — his ice] Meaning the hail. Street.

This Psalm presents us with two grand motives to induce us to love and praise God. The first, which is common to us with the Jews, and with all men, is taken from the power and wonderful wisdom by which He governs the world. The second is taken from the blessings God bestowed on the Jews; and particularly for granting them, together with His protection, the peace and plenty which they enjoyed in the land of Canaan, and giving them His holy word and His law. In this respect we have still stronger motives to praise the Lord, in consideration of the spiritual blessings vouchsafed to us; among which, the most valuable privilege of all is, to be enlightened by the Gospel, and by the knowledge of His will. Ostervald.

Psalm CXLVIII. In this most beautiful Psalm the whole creation is incited to celebrate the glory of the most high God. This hymn is elegantly imitated, and put into the mouth of Adam by our countryman Milton, (Paradise Lost, b. v.) who is justly accounted the next in sublimity to those poets who wrote under the influence of Divine inspiration. In truth, if we consider man as his first creation, such as the sacred writings represent him; in perfect possession of reason and speech; neither ignorant of his own nor of the Divine nature, but fully conscious of the goodness, majesty, and power of God; not an unobservant spectator of the beautiful fabrick of the universe; it is most probable, that on the contemplation of these objects his heart would glow with gratitude and love, and that the effect of such an emotion would be an effusion of praise to his great Creator, accompanied with a suitable energy and exaltation of voice. Indeed we scarcely seem to conceive rightly of that original and perfect state of man, unless we assign to him some of the aids of harmony and poetical expression, to enable him to testify, in terms becoming the dignity of the subject, his devout affections towards his infinite Creator. Bp. Lowth.

2 Praise ye him, all his angels: praise ye him, all his hosts.

3 Praise ye him, sun and moon: praise him, all ye stars of light.

4 Praise him, ye heavens of heavens, and ye waters that be above the heavens.

5 Let them praise the name of the LORD: for he commanded, and they were created.

6 He hath also stablished them for ever and ever: he hath made a decree which shall not pass.

7 Praise the LORD from the earth, ye dragons, and all deeps:

8 Fire, and hail; snow, and vapours; stormy wind fulfilling his word:

9 Mountains, and all hills; fruitful trees, and all cedars:

10 Beasts, and all cattle; creeping things, and † flying fowl:

† Heb. birds of wing.

11 Kings of the earth, and all people; princes, and all judges of the earth:

12 Both young men, and maidens; old men, and children:

13 Let them praise the name of the LORD: for his name alone is † excellent; his glory is above the earth and heaven.

14 He also exalteth the horn of his people, the praise of all his saints; even of the children of Israel, a people near unto him. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CXLIX.

1 The prophet exhorteth to praise God for his love to the church, 5 and for that power which he hath given to the church to rule the consciences of men.

† PRAISE ye the LORD. Sing unto the LORD a new song, and his praise in the congregation of saints. † Heb. Hallelujah.

2 Let Israel rejoice in him that made him: let the children of Zion be joyful in their King.

3 Let them praise his name ‖in the dance: let them sing praises unto him with the timbrel and harp. ‖ Or, with the pipe.

4 For the LORD taketh pleasure in his people: he will beautify the meek with salvation.

5 Let the saints be joyful in glory: let them sing aloud upon their beds.

6 Let the high praises of God be † in their mouth, and a two edged sword in their hand; † Heb. in their throat.

7 To execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishments upon the people;

8 To bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron;

9 ‡ To execute upon them the judgment written: this honour have all his saints. Praise ye the LORD. ‡ Deut. 7. 1.

PSALM CL.

1 An exhortation to praise God, 3 with all kind of instruments.

Ver. 7. — ye dragons,] The word here translated "dragons," probably means whales and other sea monsters. Dimock. See note on Lam. iv. 3.

8. Fire,] That is, lightning. Dimock.

9. — and all cedars:] Comprehending all forest trees.

14. He also exalteth &c.] He hath given strength and power to His chosen people, and hath thereby afforded them a constant subject of praise and thanksgiving; even that peculiar people, with whom He made a special covenant, and who are near that sacred spot where His glory resides. Travell.

—— near unto him.] Namely, by special relation, friendship, and covenant, and by familiar intercourse, God manifesting His presence and favour to them, and they frequently and solemnly approaching His presence and worshipping Him at His footstool. Poole.

The material heavens, through all their various regions, with the luminaries placed in them, and the waters sustained by them, though they have neither speech nor language, and want the tongue of men, yet by their splendour and magnificence, their motions and their influences, all regulated and exerted according to the ordinance of their Maker, do, in a very intelligible and striking manner, declare the glory of God: they call upon us to translate their actions into our language, and copy their obedience in our lives; that so we may, both by word and deed, glorify, with them, the Creator and Redeemer of the universe. Bp. Horne.

Psalm CXLIX. In this Psalm there is a reference to some signal deliverance or victory, which God vouchsafed to His people; whom therefore the Psalmist exhorts to praise the Lord with every mark of joy and gratitude, in expectation of their future complete triumph over all their opponents and persecutors. Travell.

Ver. 1. — a new song,] An illustrious hymn for recent victory. Fenton.

3. — in the dance:] See 2 Sam. vi. 16. and the note there.

4. — he will beautify the meek with salvation.] Those that meekly depend upon Him, He will make glorious; both with His rich blessings here, and with salvation hereafter. Bp. Hall.

5. — in glory:] That is, for the honour which God putteth upon them. Poole.

—— upon their beds.] That is, in a state of perfect ease and security. Bp. Horne.

6. Let the high praises &c.] That the Jews were wont to sing the praises of God as they advanced to combat, may be seen in 2 Macc. xiii. 15. and xv. 26. Street. See also 2 Chron. xx. 21.

9. — the judgment written:] The judgment written in the law, Deut. vii. 24. and xxxii. 41—43. Dr. Wells. This is added to shew that they do not this work to satisfy their own malicious or revengeful inclinations, but in obedience to God's commands. Poole.

This Psalm should stir up all the true members of the Church to sing and publish the praises of God, and to rejoice in Him continually. And as the Israelites sung hymns of joy, because God had made them triumph over their enemies, and the kings that waged war with them; we ought likewise to praise Him for the care He has taken of His Church, and for all the favours we have received from Him; but chiefly, for subduing our spiritual enemies, and putting it in our power to triumph over them ourselves, and to be in all things "more than conquerors," through Jesus Christ our Lord. Osterwald.

Psalm CL. This short concluding Psalm is an invocation to every creature to declare the glory of God, by the tribute of a grateful heart, and the cheerful sound of musical instruments.

† Heb. Hallelujah.

† PRAISE ye the LORD. Praise God in his sanctuary: praise him in the firmament of his power.

2 Praise him for his mighty acts: praise him according to his excellent greatness.

‖ Or. cornet.

3 Praise him with the sound of the ‖ trumpet: praise him with the psaltery and harp.

‖ Or. pipe.

4 Praise him with the timbrel and ‖ dance: praise him with stringed instruments and organs.

5 Praise him upon the loud cymbals: praise him upon the high sounding cymbals.

6 Let every thing that hath breath praise the LORD. Praise ye the LORD.

Travell. The Hebrews themselves acknowledge that they do not understand the several sorts of musical instruments mentioned in this Psalm. Bp. Patrick.

Ver. 1.—praise him in the firmament &c.] That is, Let the angels and heavenly hosts praise Him in heaven, where He clearly shews forth His power. Rosenmuller.

3. Praise him with the sound of the trumpet: &c.] The people of God are enjoined in this Psalm to use all the various kinds of musical instruments, in the performance of their Divine services. Sacred musick, under proper regulations, removes the hindrances of our devotion, cures the distractions of our thoughts, and banishes weariness from our minds. It adds solemnity to the publick service, raises all the devout passions in the soul, and causes our duty to become our delight. Bp. Horne.

6. Let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord.] How can we sufficiently prostrate ourselves and fall down before our Maker, when we consider that ineffable goodness and wisdom, which contrived existence for finite natures! What must be the overflowings of that good will, which prompted our Creator to adapt existence to beings, in whom it is not necessary; especially when we consider, that He Himself was before in the complete possession of existence and of happiness, and in the full enjoyment of eternity! What man can think of himself, as called out and separated from nothing, of his being made a conscious, a reasonable, and happy creature, in short, of his being admitted as a sharer of existence, and a kind of partner in eternity, without being swallowed up in wonder, in praise, in adoration! It is indeed a thought too big for the mind of man, and rather to be entertained in the secrecy of devotion, and in the silence of the soul, than to be expressed by words. The Supreme Being has not given us powers or faculties sufficient to extol and magnify such unutterable goodness. It is however some comfort to us, that we shall be always doing what we shall be never able to do, and that a work, which cannot be finished, will be the work of AN ETERNITY. Addison.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Proverbs, as we are informed at the beginning, and in other parts of the Book, were written, for the most part, by Solomon the son of David; a man, as the Sacred Writings assure us, peculiarly endued with Divine wisdom. Whatever ideas of his superiour understanding we may be led to form by the particulars recorded of his judgment and attainments, we shall find them amply justified on perusing the works which remain, and give testimony of his abilities. This enlightened monarch, being desirous of employing the wisdom which he had received, to the advantage of mankind, produced several works for their instruction. Of these, however, three only were admitted into the canon of Sacred Writ by Ezra; the others being either not designed for religious instruction, or so mutilated by time and accident, as to have been judged imperfect. The Book of Proverbs, that of Ecclesiastes, and that of the Song of Solomon, are all that remain of the writings of him, who is related to have spoken "three thousand proverbs," whose "songs were a thousand and five," and who "spake of trees from the cedar that is in Lebanon, even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall," who "spake also of beasts, and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fishes." If, however, many valuable compositions of Solomon have perished, we have reason to be grateful for what still remains. Of his Proverbs and Songs the most excellent have been providentially preserved; and as we possess his doctrinal and moral works, we have no right to murmur at the loss of his physical and philosophical productions.

This Book of Proverbs contains the maxims of long experience, framed by one who was well calculated, by his rare qualities and endowments, to draw just lessons from a comprehensive survey of human life. Solomon judiciously sums up his precepts in brief energetick sentences, which are well contrived for popular instruction. The wisdom, indeed, of all ages, from the highest antiquity, hath chosen to compress its lessons into compendious sentences, which were peculiarly adapted to the simplicity of earlier times; which are readily conceived and easily retained; and which circulate in society as useful principles, to be unfolded and applied as occasion may require. The inspired son of David had the power of giving peculiar energy and weight to this style of writing, and his works have been as it were the storehouse from which posterity hath drawn its best maxims. His Proverbs are so justly founded on principles of human nature, and so adapted to the permanent interests of man, that they agree with the manners of every age, and may be assumed as rules for the direction of our conduct in every condition and rank of life, however varied in its complexion, or diversified by circumstances; they embrace not only the concerns of private morality, but the great objects of political importance. The Book may be considered under five divisions. The first part, which is a kind of preface, extends to the tenth chapter. This contains general cautions and exhortations from a teacher to his pupil, delivered in very various and elegant language: duly connected in its parts, illustrated with beautiful descriptions, decorated with all the ornaments of poetical composition, and well contrived as an engaging introduction to awaken and interest the attention. The second part extends from the beginning of the tenth chapter to the seventeenth verse of the twenty-second chapter, and contains what may strictly and properly be called Proverbs, given in unconnected general sentences with much neatness and simplicity; adapted to the instruction of youth, and probably more immediately designed by Solomon for the improvement of his son. In the third part, which contains what is included between the sixteenth verse of the twenty-second chapter and the twenty-fifth chapter, the tutor is supposed, for a more lively effect, to address his pupil as present; he drops the sententious style of Proverbs, and communicates exhortations in a more continued and connected strain.

The Proverbs which are included between the twenty-fifth and thirtieth chapters, and which constitute the fourth part, are supposed to have been selected from a much greater number by the "men of Hezekiah;" that is, by the prophets whom he employed to restore the service and the writings of the church, as Eliakim, and Joah, and Shebnah, and probably Hosea, Micah, and even Isaiah, who all flourished in the reign of that monarch, and doubtless cooperated with his endeavours to reestablish true religion among the Jews. These Proverbs, indeed, appear to have been selected by some collectors after the time of Solomon, as they repeat some which he had previously introduced in the former part of the Book. The fifth part contains the prudent admonitions which Agur the son of Jakeh delivered to his pupils Ithiel and Ucal; these are included in the thirtieth chapter. It contains also the precepts which the mother of Lemuel delivered to her son, as described in the thirty-first chapter. Concerning these persons, whose works are annexed to those of Solomon, commentators have entertained various opinions. The original words which describe Agur as the author of the thirtieth chapter, might be differently translated; but admitting the present construction as most natural and just, we may observe, that the generality of the fathers and ancient commentators have supposed that under the name of Agur, Solomon describes himself, though no satisfactory reason can be assigned for his assuming this name. Others, upon very insufficient grounds, conjecture that Agur and Lemuel were interlocutors with Solomon. The Book has no appearance of dialogue, nor is there any interchange of person: it is more probable, that though the Book was designed principally to contain the sayings of Solomon, others might be added by the "men of Hezekiah:" and Agur might have been an inspired writer, whose moral and proverbial sentences (for such is the import of the word Massa, rendered Prophecy) were joined with those of the Wise Man, because of the conformity of their matter. So likewise the dignity of the Book is not affected, if we suppose the last chapter to have been written by a different hand, and admit the mother of Lemuel to have been a Jewish woman, married to some neighbouring prince; or Abijah, the daughter of the high priest Zechariah, and mother of king Hezekiah; since in any case it must be considered as the production of an inspired writer, or it would not have been received into the canon of Scripture. But it was perhaps meant that by Lemuel we should understand Solomon; for the name which signifies one belonging to God, might have been given unto him as descriptive of his character, since to Solomon God had expressly declared that He would be a Father. Dr. Gray.

This Book is frequently quoted by the Apostles, who considered it as a treasure of revealed morality, from which Christians were to derive their rules of conduct; and the canonical authority of no part of the Old Testament is so ratified by the evidence of quotations as that of the Proverbs. But it is remarkable, that the Wisdom of Jesus the Son of Sirach, which has so striking an affinity to the Book of Proverbs, is not quoted in a single instance by the Apostles and Evangelists; and the difference between Canonical and Apocryphal, is no where so strongly marked as in this example. Michaelis.

This Book is entitled "the Proverbs;" but what we call Proverbs, properly and strictly speaking, are of a different nature; and most of Solomon's Proverbs are rather to be called Maxims or Sentences. A Proverb is a short moral sentence, which means something else than what the words naturally and literally imply; that is to say, it must be expressed in a figurative manner. When Solomon says, "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not unto thine own understanding;" this is no proverb, but a moral sentence. When he says, "Drink waters out of thine own cistern;" this is a proverb: and it means, "Meddle not with that which belongs to another." These Proverbs of Solomon are a collection of wise and moral sayings, usually plain and concise; they are also of the poetical kind, and fall into metre, and therefore were the more easily learned and remembered by those in whose language they were written. They have not that air of smartness and vivacity and wit which modern writers have usually affected in their maxims and sentences; but they have what is better, truth and solid good sense. No one subject is long pursued in this treatise of Solomon, nor is there any coherence or connexion between its parts. The nature of this sort of writing does not admit it. But, though the composition be of the disjointed kind, yet there is a general design running through the whole, which the author keeps always in view: and that is, to instruct the people, and particularly young people, at their entrance into publick and active life; to give them an early love and earnest desire of real wisdom, and to lay down such clear rules for their behaviour, as shall carry them through the world with peace and credit.

Solomon is the first author that we know of who may be called a moralist; and as such he appears in this Book, as well as in that of Ecclesiastes. He says nothing, or very little, concerning the Law of Moses; he leaves the explaining or enforcing of it to the Prophets, the Priests, and the Levites. He says nothing about revealed religion, but rather confines himself to natural religion or morality. He wrote under the assistance of the Divine Spirit, but has no claim, that we perceive, to the title of a prophet; for he does not discourse in the prophetical style and manner: he says not, The word of the Lord came to me; and, Thus saith the Lord; he foretold no future events, and wrought no miracles. Dr. Jortin.

10 ¶ My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not.

Chap. I. ver. 2. To know wisdom &c.] The use of these proverbs is, to give true moral and spiritual wisdom and instruction to those that carefully hear of, and read them. Bp. Hall.

4. To give subtilty to the simple,] Meaning, that the reading of this book will strengthen and shield all easy, flexible, seducible persons, especially the young, who want experience in affairs, and so are subject to be misled and ensnared. Dr. Hammond.

6. To understand a proverb, &c.] To understand a proverb, and its mysterious sense. This study was much in vogue in the time of Solomon, as appears from the instance of the queen of Sheba, who came to prove Solomon "with hard questions." Calmet.

A wise writer requires a wise reader; and therefore it is that Solomon, in his Introduction to the Book of Proverbs, represents that person a considerable proficient in knowledge, who is able to understand a proverb and the interpretation of it; the words of the wise and their dark sayings. Dr. Jortin.

7. The fear of the Lord &c.] The first lesson he gives, as being worthy of the first consideration, is, that all saving knowledge, including a practice answerable to that knowledge, an uniform persevering obedience to the commands of God, is founded in humble and pious reverence towards God, in the tender fear of displeasing Him, and the readiness to receive, embrace, and lay up, in an honest heart, His word and His grace, whenever it shall be revealed and afforded to us. Dr. Hammond.

"The fear of the Lord" is not only now and then, but almost every where, in Scripture, put for the whole duty of man, for godliness in general; and the reason is, that the true fear of God always qualifies and tempers the mind so, that a man dares not do otherwise than please and obey God to the utmost of his knowledge and power. Bp. Beveridge.

8. My son, hear the instruction of thy father, &c.] Listen to the instructions, that is, follow the lessons of piety and virtue, which thy father and mother give thee.

9. For they shall be an ornament &c.] Meaning, that a child well brought up is adorned by the wisdom, and virtues, and graces, which he wears; they are like a crown covering his head, and a chain embellishing his neck. Calmet.

10—16. My son, if sinners entice thee, &c.] The next and most important advice is, to avoid ill company. "The whole world lieth in wickedness," saith an apostle, 1 John v. 19; and nothing can be more proper or seasonable than for instructors of youth to caution their inexperience against bad examples. The wise man here instances in one particular vice, the love of money, as being the most predominant and common of all others; and shews how it leads to the most enormous crimes, and is indeed the very "root of all evil." Wogan.

Before CHRIST about 1000.

11 If they say, Come with us, let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent without cause:

12 Let us swallow them up alive as the grave; and whole, as those that go down into the pit:

13 We shall find all precious substance, we shall fill our houses with spoil:

14 Cast in thy lot among us; let us all have one purse:

15 My son, walk not thou in the way with them; refrain thy foot from their path:

[b] Isai. 59. 7. Rom. 3. 15. 16 [b] For their feet run to evil, and make haste to shed blood.

† Heb. in the eyes of every thing that hath a wing. 17 Surely in vain the net is spread † in the sight of any bird.

18 And they lay wait for their own blood; they lurk privily for their own lives.

19 So are the ways of every one that is greedy of gain; which taketh away the life of the owners thereof.

† Heb. Find out, that is, exercise wickedness. 20 ¶ [c] Wisdom crieth without; she uttereth her voice in the streets:

[c] Chap. 8. 1. 21 She crieth in the chief place of concourse, in the openings of the gates: in the city she uttereth her words, saying,

22 How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity? and the scorners delight in their scorning, and fools hate knowledge?

23 Turn you at my reproof: behold, I will pour out my spirit unto you, I will make known my words unto you.

[d] Isaiah 65. 12. & 66. 4. Jer. 7. 13. Ezek. 8. 18. 24 ¶ [d] Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded;

Before CHRIST about 1000.

25 But ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof:

26 I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh;

27 When your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you.

[e] Job 27. 9. Isaiah 1. 15. Jer. 11. 11. & 14. 12. Micah 3. 4. 28 [e] Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me:

29 For that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the LORD:

30 They would none of my counsel: they despised all my reproof.

31 Therefore shall they eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices.

‖ Or, case of the simple. 32 For the ‖ turning away of the simple shall slay them, and the prosperity of fools shall destroy them.

33 But whoso hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely, and shall be quiet from fear of evil.

CHAP. II.

1 Wisdom promiseth godliness to her children, 10 and safety from evil company, 20 and direction in good ways.

MY son, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee;

2 So that thou incline thine ear unto wisdom, and apply thine heart to understanding;

† Heb. giuest thy voice. 3 Yea, if thou criest after knowledge, and † liftest up thy voice for understanding;

17. Surely in vain the net is spread &c.] The general sense seems to be, Surely a bird has sense enough to fly from the net when he sees it: but these persons are by their wicked deeds laying snares for their own lives.

18. And they lay wait for their own blood.] These men are setting a trap for themselves, when they lie in wait to take away the lives of others: for they shall not always escape the hand of justice. Bp. Patrick.

19. — which taketh away the life of the owners thereof.] Which (evil gain) bringeth destruction on those who pursue it. Bp. Hall.

20. Wisdom crieth without; &c.] Men cannot fail to be as well acquainted with the excellent instructions of wisdom, as they are with that which is proclaimed in the streets. Bp. Patrick.

Wisdom is opposed to folly, and folly in the sacred style is all impiety; so by wisdom is meant universal piety, or obedience of all sorts due unto God; and so the precepts of universal righteousness are those things which wisdom proclaims. Dr. Hammond.

20, 21. — in the streets: — in the chief place of concourse, &c.] Here seems to be an enumeration of all the publick places where proclamations were made: the highways, the streets, the tops of houses, the gates where all go in and out, and particularly the chief city Jerusalem, from which all laws were proclaimed and dispersed to the lesser cities and regions. Dr. Hammond.

22. — the scorners] Profane persons, who mock at religion and piety.

27. When your fear cometh as desolation, &c.] When calamities and dangers come upon you, which, the less they are before expected, will the more frightfully, tumultuously, and dismally seize you.

The Hebrew word translated "a desolation" seems to signify an occasion of great noise and tumult, when men are thrown into an alarm of approaching danger, and, not knowing what it is, are unable to prepare for avoiding it. Dr. Hammond.

28. Then shall they call upon me, &c.] This awful menace of God's judgment upon impenitent and hardened sinners is incorporated by the Church into the solemn and impressive exhortation contained in her Commination Service.

31. — be filled with their own devices.] Be glutted with that which they have chosen, receive the just rewards of their own ways and works. Dr. Hammond.

32. — the prosperity of fools shall destroy them.] Foolish sinners are hardened in their wicked courses by the sense of their continuing prosperity, and are therefore harried on to their own destruction. Bp. Hall.

CHAP. II. 1—6. Solomon in this passage teaches us, that God is the only fountain of all true wisdom; and that the only way by which we can draw wisdom out of this fountain is, by studying and practising the sacred law of God. Reading.

desire of it, as men do of that for which they have the most ardent affection. Bp. Patrick.

The Chaldee version expresses "eriest" by a word which signifies the impatient crying of a child to its mother, aptly describing that vehement desire of grace and wisdom here, which is a special ingredient in piety. Dr. Hammond.

4. If thou seekest her as silver.] If thou seekest her with as much earnestness as covetous men search for money. Perhaps it is a proverbial expression, taken from those who dig in mines. Bp. Patrick.

8. He keepeth the paths of judgment,] He preserves pious men in their integrity, encouraging them not to swerve from the rules of justice, or to cease to exercise mercy and kindness, being their Keeper and Defender in all their proceedings. Bp. Patrick.

12. — from the man that speaketh froward things:] Not to suffer thee to be perverted by the mouth of him, who would subtilely insinuate his evil principles into thee. Bp. Patrick.

13. — to walk in the ways of darkness;] In the melancholy gloomy crooked path that leads to eternal misery. Dr. Hammond.

16. — the strange woman,] The proper meaning of the Hebrew word is, one who is estranged or alienated in her affections from her husband or her God. Dr. Durell.

The practice here alluded to was chiefly and more openly carried on by women who came from neighbouring and heathen countries; and these being of another religion, if they were of any religion, would probably seduce those who frequented them into the additional and heinous crime of idolatry, as Solomon afterwards knew by his own woful experience. Dr. Jortin.

17. Which forsaketh the guide of her youth,] The adulteress which forsakes her husband, to whom she was joined in her youth, and whom she took for her guide and governour when love was in its greatest warmth, and has wickedly broken the laws of God, and violated the solemn vow of fidelity which she formerly made. Bp. Patrick.

18. — her house inclineth unto death, &c.] Various plagues and miseries of this world attend upon this sin, which promises pleasure at a distance, but in reality ensnares men into an abyss of endless evils. Dr. Hammond.

22. But the wicked &c.] The proper portion of the wicked is, to be cut off and extirpated, either by the hand of human justice, or by the curse of God, which invisibly pursues them till they be rooted out. Dr. Hammond.

The happiness of good and bad men in this world has this signal and important difference: that of the righteous is chiefly internal; less visible, perhaps, but more perfect: the other's is only external; more dazzling and conspicuous, but never lasting nor sincere. When the good man dies, he passes to a state of most consummate felicity: when the wicked man departs, all his prosperity dies with him; he exchanges a mere empty show of happiness for real and eternal misery. So that his end, whenever it comes, is indeed "a cutting off from the earth," earth being the only ground in which his happiness can grow; his end is indeed a "rooting out." Wogan.

Chap. III. ver. 2. For length of days &c.] I can give thee all assurance from God, Solomon says, that, besides the endless advantages of another world, thou shalt thus obtain the blessings of this life, the prolonging of thy days here in peace and prosperity: not that the pious faithful servant of God will be exempt from afflictions in this world; but that, in the general course of things, such a person will, by God's special blessing, and by the very temper of Christian virtues, have a security of much greater real worldly happiness, than those who use unlawful arts to obtain the riches and honours of the world. Dr. Hammond.

wearing on their foreheads and wrists the precepts of the Lord, written on slips of parchment. Dr. Isham.

5. — lean not unto thine own understanding.] Rely not on thy wisdom, contrivances, or artifices, to compass thy designs in this world, but keep thyself to the ways and means which God affords thee, and approves: and this, beyond all worldly policy, will secure to thee a happy and easy passage through the dangers of this life. Dr. Hammond.

7. Be not wise in thine own eyes:] That is, Do not follow the dictates of worldly prudence in opposition to the commands of God.

—— fear the Lord, and depart from evil.] We find these expressions frequently put together in Scripture, as having nearly the same import, differing only as cause and effect; the proper fear of the Lord producing a departure from evil. Abp. Tillotson.

8. It shall be health to thy navel, &c.] This is the means of preserving a good habit both of body and soul, and of remaining, under all circumstances, cheerful, happy, and without dejection. These peculiar expressions seem to be merely a metaphorical representation of that firmness, and vigorous health and cheerfulness of mind, which virtue imparts. Bp. Patrick.

In the East, it is usual, for the most part, to apply medicines externally, and especially to the stomach. The expression "health to thy navel" seems to bear allusion to this custom. Harmer.

9. Honour the Lord with thy substance,] Honour the Lord in His ministers, by paying them their dues, and bringing oblations to His house at the three solemn feasts, (Exod. xxiii. 14, 15.) together with the firstfruits of all that thy estate produces, (Exod. xxii. 29, 30.) in token of thy gratitude to Him for His blessings. "So shall thy barns be filled," &c. So will God pour His blessings upon thee more abundantly, and convince thee, by sending a seasonable and plentiful harvest and vintage, that this is the method, not to diminish, but to increase the possessions which He hath given thee; Deut. xxviii. 4, 5. 2 Chron. xxxi. 10. Bp. Patrick.

11. My son, despise not the chastening] Neither disregard the chastening of the Lord, nor be impatient under it.

15. — than rubies:] The meaning of the Hebrew word is not well ascertained: there are reasons for thinking that pearls are meant by it, as they were esteemed at a very high rate, not only by the Jews, but by the Romans, and even by the Medes, Persians, and Indians. Bochart.

16. Length of days is in her right hand;] Wisdom is here represented figuratively as a queen, holding in one hand length of days, and in the other, riches and honours.

17. Her ways are ways of pleasantness,] Thus it is most true that religion gives us the greatest delights and advantages in this life, even if there were no life hereafter; and hence is most apparent the extreme folly of Atheists, who, besides running a most desperate hazard after death, deprive themselves here of that very pleasure and tranquillity, for which they so anxiously seek. Dr. Bentley. When Solomon observes that the ways of wisdom, that is, of piety, are ways of pleasantness, he means, that this is not only the excellence, but the peculiar excellence of religion; and consequently that the ways of folly and vice, all things considered, are not ways of pleasantness. Thus the sense of this text is, that the good will infallibly enjoy a satisfaction and delight, of which the wicked will as certainly be deprived. Dr. Jortin. See note on ver. 2.

18. She is a tree of life] This seems an allusion to the tree of life which God planted at first in paradise, and which was to give to man life, health, and immortality. Such is wisdom to those who possess it; it preserves to them a long and happy life in this world, and a blessed immortality in the next. Calmet.

17 For they eat the bread of wickedness, and drink the wine of violence.

18 But the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

29. Devise not evil, — seeing he dwelleth securely] Let not the quietness of any man's temper, much less the confidence he has in thy honesty and goodness, tempt thee to contrive any mischief against him; for the more securely he relies on thy virtue, and the less mistrust he has of any harm from thee, the greater wickedness will it be to entertain even the thought of doing him an injury. Bp. Patrick.

32. — the froward] He that perversely departs from all the rules of truth and justice. Bp. Patrick.

— his secret is with the righteous.] Rather, "His counsel is with the righteous," as the Hebrew words admit, and as the Greek translators give the sense. Dr. Hammond. "His secret counsel is with the righteous." Schultens.

35. — shall inherit glory:] The glory here mentioned as the inheritance of the wise is threefold; the approbation of their own minds, of their fellow creatures, and of the Supreme Being, the great Searcher of hearts. Dr. J. Balguy.

— shame shall be the promotion of fools.] "The branding of infamy ennobles or distinguishes fools." Schultens.

Chap. IV. ver. 1. Hear, ye children, &c.] So great are the sluggishness and forgetfulness of mankind in their principal concernments, that we need not wonder the wise man repeats nearly the same things, and quickens our attention to them in the beginning of this chapter. The very first step to wisdom is to have a mind to be wise. Bp. Patrick.

3. — and only beloved] According to some readings of the Hebrew Bible, the expression is, "only beloved among the sons of my mother." Dr. Hammond.

8. Exalt her, and she shall promote thee:] Whatever value or love thou expressest for this sort of wisdom, shall be abundantly repaid to thee by her. Dr. Hammond.

12. When thou goest, &c.] If thy actions and designs have no other rule than this which I give thee, thou shalt be at ease and free from those straits and difficulties with which others meet: if thy business should require haste, this will be the safest, as well as the most inoffensive way to accomplish thy ends. Bp. Patrick.

17. — they eat the bread of wickedness,] They live by robbery and spoil; having no other meat and drink but that which is the fruit of their rapine and violence, and not of their honest labours. Bp. Patrick.

18. — the shining light, that shineth more and more &c.] The whole course of righteous men, the beginning, progress, and consummation, is all imitable and exemplary, fit to attract all others to it, whether in respect to its inward lustre and excellency, or the present satisfaction and peace which attends it. In all these respects it cannot better be represented than by the light of the sun, when it is come above the horizon, continually increasing till it come to perfect noon, the day continually arraying and adorning itself, and putting on new lustre, till the whole face of nature is fully illuminated, no degree of shade or darkness any where remaining. Dr. Hammond.

14 I was almost in all evil in the midst of the congregation and assembly.

21. — keep them in the midst of thine heart.] Preserve them studiously, and lay them up as a most precious treasure, in the closest affections of thy heart. Bp. Patrick.

23. Keep thy heart with all diligence.] The heart is here used to denote the seat of the affections, passions, and desires; and by the precept "to keep our hearts," is meant, that we should diligently preserve our good dispositions, and correct our bad ones; for which two things principally are necessary, a frequent examination of our own heart, and a constant endeavour to wean our affections from this world, and to fix them on another. Dr. Waterland.

—— for out of it are the issues of life.] The genuine and natural sense of this is, that all the actions of a man's life issue and proceed from the heart; which is the fountain, not only of our natural life, but of our moral too; so that, as a man's heart is, so will his life be: if his heart be kept clear and pure, his life cannot be wicked and vicious; and if his heart be wicked and vicious, his life cannot be kept clean and pure from sin; as our Saviour Himself teaches, Matth. vii. 16—20. Bp. Beveridge.

24. Put away from thee a froward mouth,] Never speak any thing thyself contrary to truth, honesty, and religion, nor listen to, or associate with, those that do so. Bp. Patrick.

25. Let thine eyes look right on, &c.] Let neither thine eyes, nor thy other senses, be drawn aside to the right hand or to the left, but let them be directed aright, according to the law of thy God. Bp. Hall.

27. Turn not to the right hand &c.] Let no temptation either of hope or fear, passion or interest, be able to seduce or divert thee from the straight and even path of virtue, but exactly and carefully preserve thyself from every thing that is evil. Dr. Hammond.

Chap. V. ver. 3. For the lips of a strange woman] The wise man here gives a new caution against those impure desires, which he had before noticed (chap. ii. 16, 17.) as great obstructions to religious wisdom; and he describes their miserable effects by several apt resemblances, ver. 4, 5, which shew how by these vices men lose their honour, their time, their health and estates, and at last lie down in sorrow, and end their days in an unprofitable repentance. Bp. Patrick.

—— drop as an honeycomb,] Are full of sweet enticements. Bp. Hall.

5. Her feet go down to death;] She leads those that follow her steps to certain and inevitable destruction, not only here, but in another world. Bp. Patrick.

—— her steps take hold on hell.] Rather, "Her steps lead on to the tomb." By the English term "hell," is commonly understood the place of torment; whereas here in meant the grave, the place where the body is consumed. Dr. Hodgson.

6. Lest thou shouldest ponder the path of life,] The Hebrew words admit of being translated in the third person, "She ponders not the path of life," and this seems a preferable construction. Dr. Durell. "Her paths are always moveable," "wandering," "dangerous," "unstable," according to different versions. Dr. Hammond. She gives herself up to pleasure without reflexion: her ways are inconstant, she has no fixed attachments, has neither knowledge, wisdom, or discernment, and follows no rule but her passion. Calmet.

9. Lest thou give thine honour unto others, &c.] Lest thou put thy reputation in the power of others, and even thy life; that is, of those who may divulge or revenge thy adultery, chap. vi. 34.

11. And thou mourn] "Mourn" is too feeble a word to convey the meaning of the original. It signifies more properly, "and thou roar" with pain. Dr. Hodgson.

12. — How have I hated &c.] How stupidly foolish have I been, in not considering all this sooner; how senselessly bent on my own ruin! I am amazed to think how I hated the timely cautions and just reproofs which were given me. Bp. Patrick.

14. I was almost in all evil &c.] Better, perhaps, "I was in almost all evil." I have plunged myself into all sort of evil, in the midst of my people, being too well known for my vices, and obtaining no compassion. Calmet.

MY son, if thou be surety for thy friend, if thou hast stricken thy hand with a stranger,

Before CHRIST about 1000.

2 Thou art snared with the words of thy mouth, thou art taken with the words of thy mouth.

3 Do this now, my son, and deliver thyself, when thou art come into the hand of thy friend; go, humble thyself, ‖ and make sure thy friend.

‖ Or, so shalt thou provoke with thy friend.

4 Give not sleep to thine eyes, nor slumber to thine eyelids.

5 Deliver thyself as a roe from the hand of the hunter, and as a bird from the hand of the fowler.

6 ¶ Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise:

7 Which having no guide, overseer, or ruler,

8 Provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest.

9 [a] How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard? when wilt thou arise out of thy sleep?

[a] Chap. 24. 33.

11 [b] So shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth, and thy want as an armed man.

[b] Chap. 13. 4. & 20. 4.

15. Drink waters &c.] The wise man, having thus represented the dangers and wasting miseries of incontinence, gives the seasonable and necessary advice, that every man should strictly abstain from wandering lusts, and remain in the society of his own wife. Dr. Hammond.

16. Let thy fountains be dispersed &c.] Besides many other blessings, thou wilt hence derive the comforts of a numerous flourishing offspring, which, as streams or rivers from a fountain, will flow from a chaste conjugal bed. Dr. Hammond.

17. Let them be only thine own,] Thou wilt thus have the assurance, that the children thou ownest are truly thine. Dr. Hammond.

19. — as the loving hind and pleasant roe;] Rather, "as the beloved hind and the favourite roe." The comparison is here very appropriate, for it is well known that all the males of the deer-kind are remarkably fond of the females which they have selected for their partners; and, although timid animals in general, will, on their account, encounter any danger to the hazard of their lives. Dr. Durell.

22. — he shall be holden with the cords of his sins.] The wicked man engages in these shameful and illicit pursuits, without foreseeing their mournful consequences; he thinks he will be able to disengage himself from them whenever he pleases, but he is forging chains for himself which he will not be able to break; when he has contracted the habit, he will not have the power to quit it. Calmet.

23. He shall die without instruction;] He shall die for want of instruction. Dr. Waterland.

Chap. VI. ver. 1. — if thou be surety for thy friend,] My son, be advised by me not to pass thy word rashly for the money which thy neighbour or friend borroweth of another, much less stand bound to a stranger, of whose honesty or ability thou art not assured; for if thou hast been so incautious as to be drawn into such engagements, "thou art snared with the words of thy mouth," look upon thyself no longer as a free man, but hampered and enslaved by dangerous obligations. Bp. Patrick.

—— if thou hast stricken thy hand &c.] To strike hands with another person was a general emblem of agreement, bargaining, or suretiship. Thus the ancient poets often represent it. Burder. Solomon frequently exhorts to the avoiding of suretiship, as a most dangerous indiscretion; by which he seems to mean, that we should never be bound in behalf of another for more than we can afford to lose, without any considerable detriment to our fortunes or families. Dr. Jortin.

3. — go, humble thyself, &c.] These words may rather be rendered, "Go, stir up thyself, and prevail with thy companion;" "give not sleep to thine eyes," ver. 4; that is, without the least delay take this course to disentangle thyself. Dr. Hammond.

6. Go to the ant, thou sluggard; &c.] As in the matter just mentioned, the least delay is pernicious, so, in all things else, sluggishness or negligence of those things which concern us most nearly, should ever be avoided; and if we need any instructor on this head, we may go to one of the least and meanest of creatures. Dr. Hammond.

8. Provideth her meat in the summer,] The industry of the ant has been frequently noticed by the ancient poets. It has been generally believed that these animals lay up stores of corn for their winter's provision, and that they gnaw off the buds of the grains so as to prevent their growing in the earth. This fact is asserted by Pliny; Bochart produces many writers asserting the same. La Pluche says, "A prevailing passion in these little animals is to amass stores of grain; and, lest the humidity of the cells should make the corn shoot up, we are told for a certainty, that they gnaw off the buds which grow at the point of the grain." Parkhurst.

10. Yet a little sleep, a little slumber,] By the repetition of the words here seems to be implied, sleep and slumber often repeated at different intervals. The change of the person speaking, from the preceptor to the sluggard, in this verse, is extremely beautiful.

11. — as one that travelleth, — as an armed man.] "As one that travelleth," that is, by surprise: "as an armed man," with irresistible violence. Bp. Patrick, Calmet.

Before CHRIST about 1000.

20 ¶ [d] My son, keep thy father's commandment, and forsake not the law of thy mother:

21 Bind them continually upon thine heart, and tie them about thy neck.

22 When thou goest, it shall lead thee; when thou sleepest, it shall keep thee; and when thou awakest, it shall talk with thee.

[g] Matth. 5. 28.

† Heb. the woman of a man, Or, a man's wife.

27 Can a man take fire in his bosom, and his clothes not be burned?

28 Can one go upon hot coals, and his feet not be burned?

29 So he that goeth in to his neighbour's wife; whosoever toucheth her shall not be innocent.

30 Men do not despise a thief, if he steal to satisfy his soul when he is hungry;

31 But if he be found, he shall restore sevenfold; he shall give all the substance of his house.

32 But whoso committeth adultery with a woman lacketh † understanding: he that doeth it destroyeth his own soul.

† Heb. heart.

33 A wound and dishonour shall he get; and his reproach shall not be wiped away.

34 For jealousy is the rage of a man: therefore he will not spare in the day of vengeance.

35 † He will not regard any ransom; neither will he rest content, though thou givest many gifts.

† Heb. He will not accept the face of any ransom.

12. A naughty person,] In the Hebrew, "a man of Belial;" denoting probably an idle foolish wicked man, who cares not for God's directions of his tongue or life. "With a froward mouth;" in the Hebrew, "with perverseness of mouth," in the sense of detracting from the actions of other men, and so perverting all to the worst sense that is possible. Dr. Hammond.

13. He winketh with his eyes, &c.] Such a person, when he has nothing of weight to say against a man, will, by significant gestures of all sorts, intimate matters to his disadvantage, and so persuade others, without laying any particular thing to his charge. Dr. Hammond. Such a person composes all his parts to deceit; every gesture of his tends to fraud; the very motion of his eyes, of his feet, of his fingers, is significant, and expresses some secret intimation of guile. Bp. Hall.

15. Therefore shall his calamity come suddenly;] Such a person shall be brought to utter ruin, when he fancies he has carried his matters so cunningly, that no one discerns his villany. Bp. Patrick. "He shall be broken without remedy;" alluding, it appears, to an earthen vessel which, when broken into pieces, cannot be made whole again. Dr. Wells.

16. These six things &c.] These six things, which are commonly found in such profligate persons, "doth the Lord hate:" yea, three is one more, and so in all there are seven things commonly found in such persons, which are an abomination to him. Dr. Wells. The seven things are these: pride or haughtiness; lying or fraudulence; guilt of blood; malice or projecting of evil; a pleasure in doing mischief; false witness or calumny; a causing of discord or ill-will among those who live friendly together. Dr. Hammond.

25. — with her eyelids.] See note at 2 Kings ix. 30.

26. — will hunt for the precious life.] Will bring the adulterer to his grave. See Ezek. xiii. 18. Dr. Isham.

The general meaning of this verse and the following is, How ever odious is the sin of theft, yet if the thief be compared with the adulterer, we shall find much difference made in the heinousness of the offence. Men are not wont to be inexorably cruel against him who steals out of pure necessity; but if he be detected, however dearly he may pay for his fault by way of satisfaction, the sum is yet accepted of the injured party; but he who committeth adultery, destroyeth his own soul. Bp. Hall.

31. — he shall restore sevenfold.] The law of Moses does not enjoin a restitution of sevenfold, but in a smaller proportion, Exod. xxii. 1, 4. Bp. Patrick. Seven seems only put here for a number of perfection: the meaning is, he shall make perfect and full restitution according to the law, so far as his substance or estate will reach. Abp. Tillotson.

32. But whoso committeth adultery &c.] The adulterer robs a man of his wife, without any such necessity, and therefore is destitute of all excuse, and must be looked upon as void of all understanding; and when he is discovered, he will be punished, not merely in his estate, but with the loss of his life, Lev. xx. 10. Bp. Patrick.

34. For jealousy is the rage of a man:] No translation can fully express the force of the original here. "The inflammation of jealousy is the setting a man on fire:" as much as to say, The jealousy with which a man is inflamed, so heats him and rages within him, that he can never be appeased, but is borne with irresistible violence to the revenge of his defiled bed. Schultens.

25 Let not thine heart decline to her ways, go not astray in her paths.

26 For she hath cast down many wounded: yea, many strong men have been slain by her.

Chap. VII. ver. 2. — as the apple of thine eye.] Rather, "as the pupil of thine eye." Dr. Durell.

3. Bind them upon thy fingers, &c.] It is sufficiently evident that Solomon could not mean this precept to be understood literally, any more than the next expression, which frequently occurs, "Write them on the table of thine heart;" yet it was on such texts as these (see Exod. xiii. 16. Deut. vi. 8. xi. 18.) that the Pharisees founded the practice of binding on their foreheads phylacteries, or slips with particular precepts of the law inscribed upon them. Dr. Durell. See note at Exod. xiii. 9.

4. Say unto wisdom, Thou art my sister,] Be as familiar with wisdom, as if she were thy own natural sister. Bp. Hall. The name of "sister" occurs often as the name of friendship, and is employed to express the affection of the husband to his bride, Cant. iv. 9. v. 1, &c. It here marks the chaste love which we ought to bear to wisdom. Calmet.

9. In the twilight, &c.] He seems to enumerate the several periods of the night, intending to imply that he had frequently observed the scene which he describes, although he professes to be describing only one particular instance. Schultens.

11. (She is loud and stubborn;] Translators have differed in rendering these words; they seem rather to mean, "She is prating, petulant, and wandering, running about from house to house." Dr. Hammond.

14. I have peace offerings with me; &c.] "I have peace offerings with me," that is, "I have an entertainment or feast at my house;" for in sacrifices of this sort, the person that offered reserved a part of the victim for convivial purposes. Dr. Durell. This narrative is strongly expressive of the woman's character; of her levity in making the payment of vows a prelude to sin, and of her shameless falsehood, ver. 15.

16. — with carved works,] Meaning probably figured tapestry or carpeting, from its resemblance to carved work. Parkhurst.

17. — aloes,] See note at Cant. iv. 14.

—— cinnamon.] It is remarkable that the name of this tree in Hebrew is the same as in English. Parkhurst.

19. — the goodman] Literally in Hebrew, "the man," meaning her husband. In the earlier English writers, "goodman" was a common appellation for the master of a family.

20. — at the day appointed.] Some interpreters prefer the reading of our margin, "at the new moon," or, "at the day of assembly," which the time of the new moon was amongst the Jews. The Greek translators render it, "after many days." Dr. Hammond.

23. Till a dart strike through his liver; &c.] Thus he yields to his lust, until the revenging husband, actuated by jealousy, give a deadly stroke to the adulterer, or till the just judgment of God seize upon body and soul, being thus heedlessly drawn in as a bird is into the snare, not considering that its life is brought into danger. Bp. Hall.

26. For she hath cast down &c.] For many have been the examples of no mean persons, who have fallen in their reputation, their estates, their healths, and comforts of life, and in truth have utterly perished by her; immunerable are the mighty men, both for valour and wisdom, whom she has brought to ruin. Solomon himself, as well as Samson, became an example of the "mighty

27. — the chambers of death.] The Jewish sepulchres consisted of large vaults and caves, in the sides of which were cut out distinct niches for receiving each a dead body. Parkhurst.

Chap. VIII. ver. 1. Doth not wisdom cry? &c.] We may consider this chapter as connected with the preceding, and forming with it a continued discourse. The wise man had before been representing the dangerous seductions of false pleasure. He now describes to us wisdom, who invites us to love her by a noble, grand, elevated discourse, and by magnificent promises of substantial good. Calmet.

A sublime allegory is here introduced, of wisdom standing in the most conspicuous and frequented places of the city, and proclaiming aloud to men those great precepts of truth, religion, and virtue, by which they may rise from the vanities of the world to life and immortality. Schultens.

10. Receive my instruction, and not silver;] That is, receive it in preference to silver. Calmet. Make no comparison of my instruction with silver and gold, for these are base and corruptible metals, not worthy to be mentioned together with those heavenly treasures, which are contained in, and conveyed by, my Divine precepts. Bp. Hall.

12. I wisdom dwell with prudence,] I alone endow men with real prudence, always giving the most safe and least fallible advice, and directing men to more discreet resolutions in difficult cases than the most subtle head in the world that consults not with me. Bp. Patrick.

—— and find out knowledge of witty inventions.] Implying, that no advice or subtle contrivances can be good, or can have a happy event, which are not agreeable to true piety. Dr. Wells.

14. — I have strength.] I inspire men with true and rational courage to persist in good resolutions which are neither rashly taken up, nor wrongly pursued. Dr. Wells.

15, 16. By me kings reign, &c.] Meaning, that all lawful authority, the power of all kings and magistrates, are most surely founded in wisdom.

17. — those that seek me early shall find me.] This holds true in every useful acquisition: youth is the time when the foundation of knowledge, either secular or religious, is to be laid; and they who begin any useful study or pursuit late in life, seldom become great proficients. Dr. Jortin.

19. — and my revenue] Rather, "my produce," which answers better to "my fruit," in the preceding clause. Dr. Durell.

21. That I may cause &c.] That I may confer on all those who sincerely love and adhere to me a happy settlement in a state of eternal peace and substantial satisfaction. Bp. Patrick.

22. The Lord possessed me &c.] The passage which follows is expressed in such magnificent language, that the ancient Christians thought the application of the words was to the wisdom revealed to us in the Gospel by the Son of God, nay to the Son of God Himself, the Eternal Word and Wisdom of the Father. Bp. Patrick.

The wisdom, he says, which directs us to all this, is but a ray of that Eternal wisdom of the Father, the Word and Son of God, which, in the fulness of time, was to be incarnate, but before all time was present with God, before any part of this world, earth, sea, fountains, hills, mountains, or valleys, were created. Dr. Hammond. God has possessed the Son from all eternity, since "the Word was with God," from the beginning, John i. 1. Calmet.

"The Lord possessed me in the beginning of His way;" rather, "The Lord possessed me when He first went forth," that is, when He first exerted Himself in the work of creation. Dr. Durell.

30. Then I was by him,] Then was I very near to Him, contriving all things; nor had He greater delight in any thing than in me, who day by day, during the creation of the world, produced some lovely work or other, in which He rejoiced, to see how good and agreeable they were, Gen. i. 4, &c. Bp. Patrick.

31. — my delights were with the sons of men.] Beholding them made in the image of God, and after His likeness, and capable of holding converse with me. Bp. Patrick.

34. — waiting at the posts of my doors.] Going to the places where true religion and piety are taught. Dr. Wells.

36. — all they that hate me love death.] These words can scarcely signify any thing else than the destruction brought upon the soul by death eternal. Dr. Graves.

Chap. IX. ver. 1. Wisdom hath builded her house, &c.] Wisdom is represented as a glorious queen, the daughter of heaven, adorned with all excellencies and perfections, inviting all misguided souls to her stately palace, and promising to them the most delicious entertainment, if they will forsake their follies. By this notion of a feast the sacred writers are wont to express the high satisfaction, joy, and pleasure, with which the principles of virtue and wisdom fill the hearts of men when they have a true relish for them. This is the substance of the allegory here given, but the several parts of it are not to be too minutely scanned. Bp. Patrick.

2. She hath killed her beasts; &c.] She hath made a plentiful provision for all hungry and thirsty souls, who will find no less life, and vigour, and strength, and joy communicated to them from her sacred instructions, than the body does when it partakes of a liberal and delicious feast. Bp. Patrick

3. She hath sent forth her maidens:] She hath sent forth her attendants and ministers, persons of uncorrupted purity and sincerity, to invite men with a loud voice, which cannot but be heard by whole cities and countries. This expression may be illustrated by a passage from Hasselquist, who at Alexandria, in Egypt, saw ten or twelve women going about and inviting people to a banquet by a particular kind of cry or noise. Parkhurst.

—— upon the highest places of the city.] The schools of the prophets were seated on "high places," as appears from 1 Sam. x. 5, 10, &c.; which seems to be the allusion here of wisdom crying upon the highest places of the city, to invite those who had a disposition towards her to come and hear her instructions. Bp. Patrick. Or the expression may allude merely to the tops of the houses and parapets, to which it was customary to go for the purpose of proclaiming any thing aloud, agreeably to the expression of our Saviour, "Preach ye upon the housetops," Matt. x. 27. Calmet.

7. He that reproveth a scorner &c.] He who performs the charitable office of reproving those who deride religion, and scoff at all good admonition, not only loses his labour, but will probably be requited with reproaches. Bp. Patrick.

—— getteth himself a blot.] Suffers vile and unworthy usage. Dr. Wells.

X. ver. 1. The proverbs of Solomon.] Here now properly begins the Book of the Proverbs, as the title of this chapter tells us; what has been delivered hitherto being rather a preface, to awaken attention, and form sundry arguments to commend the wise instructions which now follow to every one's practice, and to caution those who would receive benefit by these instructions, to avoid such things as may hinder their edification in the school of wisdom. Bp. Patrick.

From this chapter to the twenty-fifth, are contained more particularly the theorems of the doctrine of morality; which, under sundry observations concerning virtue and vice, or moral good and evil, may form a full and complete system of Divine ethicks. The virtues and vices are for the most part set in opposition the one to the other, and compared together; that so the wisdom and beauty of the one, and the folly and deformity of the other, may the more convincingly appear. Wogan.

3. — he casteth away the substance of the wicked.] He dissipates or destroys the estate, the possessions of the wicked. Dr. Hammond.

4. — that dealeth with a slack hand:] That dealeth or worketh with a lazy hand. Dr. Wells.

6. — violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.] Their own wickedness shall violently overwhelm, to their utter confusion, those who wickedly defraud and oppress their neighbour. Bp. Patrick.

8. The wise in heart will receive &c.] It is the part of wisdom to open the ear and heart to all good advice, especially to the commandments of God; whereas they who keep no guard on their tongues, frequently discover things which bring ruin and mischief on themselves. Dr. Hammond.

9. He that walketh uprightly walketh surely:] "To walk surely," is to be in safe condition, to be out of danger of falling into any extreme calamity, and to have our main interest so secured, that, notwithstanding whatever may happen for a time, yet our chief and great design shall certainly succeed happily in the end. The sum therefore of Solomon's assertion is this: He that in the whole course of his life acts sincerely and justly, with a continual respect to the reason of things and the law of God, that carries on his undertakings by fair and equitable means, avoiding all fraud and deceit, all base and unworthy practice, this man takes the wisest and surest course to succeed in all his designs, respecting either his present, or his future happiness. Dr. S. Clarke.

10. He that winketh with the eye &c.] The double dealing and dissembling person causes much sorrow at the last, both to himself and to those who have been deceived by him. Bp. Hall.

11. The mouth of a righteous man is a well of life:] The discourse of a good man, like a perpetual spring of wholesome water, always tends to the profit, comfort, and refreshment of those who receive it. Bp. Patrick.

12. — love covereth all sins.] Love induces men to cover or overlook several great offences. Dr. Wells. See James v. 20.

14. — the mouth of the foolish is near destruction.] The fool is always talking, and seldom opens his mouth but it proves a present mischief to himself or to others. Bp. Patrick.

15. The rich man's wealth &c.] Riches, being a powerful defence to their owners against numerous evils, naturally raise men's minds, and make them confident; whereas poverty exposes men to injuries and abuses, and is apt to depress and deject their spirits. Bp. Patrick.

19. In the multitude of words &c.] There are so many ways of offending God or man, by profanations, falsehoods, slanders, &c. that there cannot be a more necessary part of moral wisdom, or wherein the exercise of true piety is more concerned, than the art of restraining the tongue, and keeping it within proper bounds, as to all such matters. Dr. Hammond.

24. The fear of the wicked, it shall come upon him:] The evil which the wicked fears shall come upon him.

26. As vinegar to the teeth, &c.] Vinegar is not more offensive to the teeth, nor smoke more vexatious to the eyes, than a remiss and negligent servant is to him that employs him, and relies on him in a weighty business. Bp. Patrick.

27. — the years of the wicked shall be shortened.] See note at Prov. iii. 2.

This truth here announced is confirmed by the nature of things, and the positive appointments of Providence. In the nature of things, men destroy themselves and shorten their days by many kinds of wickedness. By wars and desolations, they unpeople whole countries; by private quarrels, they bring each other to untimely ends; by capital crimes, they cause themselves to be cut off by the hands of justice; by luxury and intemperance, they destroy their bodies; by envy and malice, they consume themselves in the midst of their iniquity. In like manner, according to the same tendency, by peace and charity, men are preserved from destruction; by temperance, their bodies are maintained in health; by quiet of conscience and satisfaction of mind, new life is added to their spirits. Dr. S. Clarke.

31. — the froward tongue shall be cut out.] That is, he that does mischief with his tongue shall be duly punished. Dr. Wells.

32. — know what is acceptable:] What is pleasing to God and edifying to man. See Eph. iv. 29. and v. 3, 4. Dr. Isham.

Chap. XI. ver. 2. When pride cometh, then cometh shame:] Pride makes men foolish and void of caution, and this puts them upon doing things which bring them to dishonour. Dr. S. Clarke.

7. — his expectation shall perish:] The wicked man, having no other expectation than in his own means of strength, will see all his projects dissipated by death. Calmet.

8. — the wicked cometh in his stead.] That is, the wicked falls into those very distresses from which the just is happily freed. Bp. Patrick. See Esther vii. 9.

9. An hypocrite &c.] A dissembling friend, with fair and false words, and semblances, draws his neighbour into some dangerous inconvenience; but a wise and just man will soon perceive his fraud, and will avoid the mischief plotted against him. Bp. Hall.

11. By the blessing of the upright &c.] By God's benediction for their wikes. Dr. Isham.

12. — despiseth his neighbour: &c.] That is, speaks contemptuously of him, or ridicules him. Dr. Wells. Speaks spitefully and scornfully of him; but a man of understanding conceals his thoughts, and will not utter any thing to the reproach of another. Bp. Hall.

14. — in the multitude of counsellers there is safety.] A country is safe when there are many wise men to govern affairs; for, if one fail, others still remain; and what one or two discover not, others may be able to discern. Bp. Patrick.

16. A gracious woman &c.] Beauty and virtue in a woman advance her to honour, as formidable power and strength in men advance them to riches: and, as their principal care is to keep their treasures, so should her's be to preserve her reputation. Bp. Patrick.

21. Though hand join in hand, &c.] Though the wicked man endeavour to strengthen himself and his family by powerful leagues and confederations, he shall not be able to escape the punishment his iniquity deserves. Bp. Patrick. To join hands was anciently, and still continues in the East, a solemn method of taking an oath on making an engagement. To this circumstance allusion seems clearly to be made in these words of Solomon.

22. As a jewel of gold &c.] Allusion is here made to the Eastern custom of wearing valuable rings in the nostril. As such an ornament would be very ill placed in the snout of a swine which grovels continually in the mire, so beauty is equally misplaced in a woman who is without virtue and discretion. Bp. Patrick. See Sir J. Chardin's note on Gen. xxiv. 22.

24. There is that scattereth,] That is, that giveth liberally on all proper occasions. Dr. Wells.

25. The liberal soul shall be made fat:] The liberal "soul," or the liberal "man;" "soul" being often in Hebrew put for "man." Dr. Durell. "Shall be made fat," or rich; and he that "watereth," or giveth plenteously to others, shall be watered, or receive plentifully from God himself. Dr. Wells.

26. He that withholdeth corn,] He that hoardeth up corn in a time of scarcity, on purpose to raise the price. Bp. Patrick.

29. He that troubleth &c.] He that troubleth his own house or family, or whatever else he holds under his authority, by making or fomenting dissensions therein, "shall inherit the wind," shall be deceived as to any advantage he may expect thereby, and gain nothing; and the fool of this description shall be, as is often found by experience, "servant to the wise of heart," who manages his affairs after a prudent manner. Dr. Wells. "He that troubleth his own house," either by improvidently dissipating his property, or by sowing divisions and discord among the members of his family. Calmet.

30. — he that winneth souls] That draws souls to the love of virtue by communicating wisdom seasonably and charitably. Bp. Patrick.

31. — shall be recompensed in the earth:] Shall be recompensed for their righteousness.

ertion loses even the fruit of his former labours; but the diligent man sets a just value on it, and converts it to its proper use.

28. In the way of righteousness is life; &c.] This is, as it were, the sum and substance of the chapter, and a proper conclusion of all that we have been taught in the foregoing maxims of Divine philosophy; namely, that religion and a holy conversation are the only sure and infallible way to happiness. So excellent, and so far beyond every other scheme, is this "way of righteousness," that out one of all the actions and pursuits in which it engages us shall ever end in misery and disappointment. "In the pathway thereof there is no death;" but, saith the Gospel, seconding the royal moralist, "All things work together for good to them that love God," Rom. viii. 28. Wogan.

Chap. XIII. ver. 2. A man shall eat good &c.] He that speaks well of others, and gives them faithful counsel, shall reap the benefit thereof himself; and they that perfidiously calumniate or deceive others, shall suffer themselves the injury which they design to do their neighbours. Bp. Patrick.

7. There is that maketh himself rich, &c.] There are those who are rich in their poverty, because they are content, and use generously what they have: there are others, who in the midst of their riches are really poor, from their insatiable covetousness or profusion. Calmet.

8. The ransom of a man's life &c.] The rich, on account of their wealth, are sometimes accused of high crimes, that they may pay a large sum to save their lives; but nobody takes the trouble of finding fault with the poor, or bringing charges against him. Bp. Patrick.

9. The light of the righteous &c.] The happiness of the righteous shines like the sun, and increases to their endless joy; but the happiness of the wicked is as feeble as the light of a candle, and will soon be extinguished. Bp. Patrick.

Or, "The lamp of the wicked shall be put out:" the seeming and false mirth of wicked men, with which they are vainly elated, will soon be put out and end in sorrow. Bp. Hall.

12. Hope deferred maketh the heart sick:] He speaks of a case, when by repeated disappointments the hope seems to be removed farther off from day to day; which is justly said to sicken the heart. Dr. Durell.

13. Whoso despiseth the word &c.] Despiseth the good counsels and admonitions that are given him. Bp. Patrick.

14. The law of the wise &c.] The law of God, which is the matter and scope to which all the instruction of wise teachers tends, is that fountain, from which spiritual and eternal life flows, and the only means of delivering the soul from the snares of eternal death. Bp. Hall.

15. Good understanding giveth favour:] A prudent, pious, and regular behaviour, is most amiable and acceptable to all men; but the conversation of those who live by no law but their own lusts, like a rough way, is grievously uneasy. Bp. Patrick.

20. He that walketh with wise men] That is, who chooses wise persons for his companions, and loses no opportunity of receiving their advice and instruction. Dr. Jortin.

21. — to the righteous good shall be repayed.] This sentence expresses the general truth, that the practice of righteousness is men's true interest, even in the present life; and that wickedness is attended with great misery generally, even here as well as hereafter. Dr. S. Clarke.

16 A wise man feareth, and departeth from evil: but the fool rageth, and is confident.

17 He that is soon angry dealeth foolishly: and a man of wicked devices is hated.

14. The backslider in heart &c.] He that is froward and perverse, and willingly falls from his former good purposes, shall be sure to suffer the punishment of his wicked courses. Bp. Hall.

—— a good man shall be satisfied from himself:] A good man hath the pleasure of being wise and acting reasonably, the pleasure of being justified to himself in what he does, and of being acquitted by the sentence of his own mind. There is great pleasure in being innocent, because that prevents guilt and trouble; it is pleasant to be virtuous and good, because that is to excel others; and it is pleasant to grow better, because that is to excel ourselves. *Abp. 24. The crown of the wise &c.] Riches are a singular advantage and ornament to a wise and virtuous man, who knows how to use them; but such is the folly of wicked men, that their wealth makes them the more vile, and serves to render their folly more conspicuous. Bp. Patrick.

29. — he that is hasty of spirit exalteth folly.] Exposes his own folly, and makes it apparent to every one. Bp. Patrick.

Anger is certainly one of the most foolish passions of human nature, and commonly betrays men to the most imprudent and unreasonable things. Abp. Tillotson.

30. A sound heart is the life] A quiet, honest, contented mind, is "the life of the flesh," conduces much to health and happiness. Dr. Wells.

32. — the righteous hath hope in his death.] These words have no sense or meaning except on the supposition of a future state: for hope always looks forward, and has respect unto something that is future: but, if death puts an end to our being; if, according to the creed of the unbeliever, we die like brute animals, and have no after-existence; what hope can the righteous have in his death, any more than the wicked, or how can either of them have any hope at all? This hope can be built on nothing, but the belief of the soul's immortality, and a future state of retribution. Dr. Ibbot.

Patrick.*

3. The eyes of the Lord &c.] A continual sense of the Divine presence is the best and only true restraint from vice, the strongest and most encouraging motive to virtue. Wogan.

4. A wholsome tongue] A sound (or a healing) tongue, a tongue which imparts sound advice, or pacifies anger. Dr. Durell. "Is a tree of life;" is an incomparable blessing to all within its influence. But perverseness therein hurts or wounds the soul. Bp. Patrick.

8 The sacrifice of the wicked &c.] The sacrifice of the wicked, however costly it may be, is an abomination to the Lord; but the bare prayer of the upright, though he be unable to bring any costly offerings or sacrifices, is His delight. Dr. Wells.

18. — by sorrow of the heart the spirit is broken.] When grief and sorrow seize on the heart, they deject, enfeeble, and break the most courageous spirit. Bp. Patrick.

16. — and trouble therewith.] That disquiet and confusion of thoughts which, where there is no religious fear of God, is apt to attend on abundance of wealth. Bp. Patrick.

17. — a dinner of herbs where love is.] That is, It is better to have peace without plenty, than plenty without peace. Sced. "A dinner of herbs," or of green pottage, was the poorest entertainment in Eastern countries, and "a stalled (or crammed) ox," an ox put up in a stall, and there fatted, was esteemed the best entertainment. Thus in the New Testament, the marriage provision which the king made for his son's wedding was "oxen and fatlings," Matt. xxii. 4. And "the fatted calf" was brought forth to entertain the returning prodigal. In the same manner Homer describes the entertainments of his greatest princes and heroes, as consisting almost entirely of fatted oxen and other animals. Bochart.

19. The way of the slothful man &c.] The proceedings of the slothful man are full of embarrassments and uneasiness; like a man breaking through a hedge of thorns, he moves with difficulty and pain.

23. A man hath joy &c.] It is a great pleasure to a man to give wholesome counsel, and to see the good success of it; and the greatest of all, both to himself and to others, is to have it given so seasonably, that a business has been easily effected by it, which would not have been done without it. Bp. Patrick.

24. The way of life is above to the wise.] He that is truly wise has his affections and conversation above; and in the holy way of obedience walketh to eternal life. Bp. Hall.

25. — he will establish the border of the widow.] He will preserve the poor widow, who has no helper, in her right, when insolent persons invade it. Bp. Patrick.

27. — troubleth his own house;] Throweth his house or family into confusion.

—— he that hateth gifts] That hateth bribes and all unlawful gains, "shall live" and prosper. Dr. Wells.

28. The heart of the righteous &c.] A good man does not speak without consideration: but bad men are rash, and forward to utter their mind. Bp. Patrick.

30. The light of the eyes &c.] As light gives pleasure to the eye, and pours joy into the recesses of the heart, so a good reputation creates inward satisfaction, and contributes to the health of the body. Calmet.

31. — the reproof of life] Salutary reproof.

33. — before honour is humility.] Humility, docility, the fear of God, are the means which lead to honour and true wisdom. Calmet. Our Lord Himself has made "humility" the first entrance to the "honour" of being His disciple, as well as the first step in His scale of blessings, Matt. v. And with this important maxim the chapter concludes, as the sum total of the foregoing precepts, "Before honour is humility." Wogan.

Chap. XVI. ver. 1. The preparations of the heart &c.] The literal version of the original gives the best and truest sense of this text, "To man are the dispositions of the heart, but from the Lord is the answer of the tongue;" that is, Man hath a power over his thoughts to propose and design, to intend and contrive; but to bring such thoughts to effect, or even to utter them with the tongue, especially to utter them wisely, depends wholly upon God. A similar sentence occurs in this chapter at ver. 9; also chap. xx. 24, &c. Wogan.

6 By mercy and truth iniquity is purged: and by the fear of the LORD men depart from evil.

7 When a man's ways please the LORD, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him.

14 The wrath of a king is as messengers of death: but a wise man will pacify it.

15 In the light of the king's countenance is life; and [i] his favour is as a cloud of the latter rain.

16 [k] How much better is it to get wisdom than gold? and to get understanding rather to be chosen than silver?

17 The highway of the upright is to depart from evil: he that keepeth his way preserveth his soul.

18 [l] Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall.

19 Better it is to be of an humble spirit with the lowly, than to divide the spoil with the proud.

20 ‖ He that handleth a matter wisely shall find good: and whoso [m] trusteth in the LORD, happy is he.

21 The wise in heart shall be called prudent: and the sweetness of the lips increaseth learning.

Before CHRIST about 1000.

2. All the ways of a man &c.] Every man is apt to think the best of his own actions, and to justify himself in his own courses; but the Lord judgeth and examineth the inward disposition, the soul and spirit of a man. Bp. Hall.

3. Commit thy works &c.] When thou undertakest any thing, implore the Divine blessing; and, committing the success of it to God's providence, leave it to Him to give what issue to it He pleases; which is the surest way to have thy honest designs accomplished. Bp. Patrick.

4. The Lord hath made &c.] This text may be rendered, with much better sense, and much nearer to the Hebrew, "God hath ordained every thing to that which is fit to it, and the wicked hath He ordained for the day of evil;" that is, The wisdom of God hath fitted one thing to another, punishment to sin, the evil day to the evil doer. Abp. Tillotson.

"Even the wicked for the day of evil;" that is, Even the most wicked and the worst of men are under His direction and control; however they may be set on mischief, they can proceed no further than God permits, being instruments only in His hands to afflict others, and bring evil upon them. Dr. Waterland.

The meaning is, as Scripture elsewhere expresses, "The wicked are reserved to the day of destruction, they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath," Job xxi. 30. Dr. S. Clarke.

The wicked are indeed the work of God's hands, as being a part of the creation; and He gave them the faculties which they have abused and perverted to a sinful purpose: but this power to abuse and pervert is inseparable from the character of a free agent. The true meaning of this passage is, that God made all things to display His own glorious attributes; and that even wicked men, whose existence and frequent prosperity may seem scarcely reconcilable with the Divine perfections, will, in the end, be found to furnish the strongest proof of His longsuffering in bearing with their iniquities, and of His power and justice in punishing their incorrigible depravity; upon such men "the day of evil" will certainly come. Bp. Tomline.

6. By mercy and truth iniquity is purged:] By a sincere observance of God's law, iniquity is most effectually purged away: sorrow for sin may begin repentance, but obedience only completes it. Wogan.

10. A divine sentence is &c.] God is present in an especial manner with a pious king, inspiring his mind with sagacity to penetrate doubtful and obscure things, that all causes may be decided by him so justly and exactly that no man may be wronged in the judgment which he passes. Bp. Patrick.

11. — all the weights of the bag are his work.] That is, God requires exact justice in all our dealings, and therefore it is our duty to take care that the weights and balance be just. Dr. Wells. In the margin, "all the stones."—Stones were anciently used for weights. Dr. Isham.

14. The wrath of a king &c.] The wrath of a king strikes terror into him with whom he is offended, no less than if the sentence of death were pronounced upon him; but a virtuous and prudent man appeases his anger and makes a reconciliation. Bp. Patrick.

— as messengers of death:] It is usual in Turkey, when a warrant for a person's death is procured, for an executioner to carry it to him, and execute it immediately. The same seems to have been the case in Palestine, 1 Kings ii. 25. Matt. xiv. 10. This may perhaps be considered as giving peculiar energy to the term "messengers of death" here used. Harmer.

15. — as a cloud of the latter rain.] As a cloud producing the grateful rain of spring. See note at Deut. xi. 14. Job uses a similar comparison, to express how he was esteemed and desired by his people, Job xxix. 23. Calmet.

17. The highway of the upright] The habitual and accustomed course of the upright. Wogan.

18. Pride goeth before destruction,] That is, pride and haughtiness commonly bring men to shame and destruction; they lead to it, and generally end in it. Dr. Waterland. Pride makes men rash and peevish, obstinate and insolent; and this seldom fails to bring down ruin upon them. Dr. S. Clarke.

26. He that laboureth &c.] A man needs no other inducement to labour than his own profit and necessity; for it is by his labour that he must sustain himself and uphold nature, which craveth it of him. Bp. Hall.

27. — diggeth up evil.] This expression signifies labouring after evil with toil and application, searching for it as a person searching for a hidden treasure. "In his lips there is as a burning fire;" he carries on his tongue a burning fire, which spreads on every side destruction and devastation. Calmet.

30. He shutteth his eyes] Expressing the profound study with which he contrives the ruin of others. Bp. Patrick.

32. — than he that taketh a city.] It is a greater thing, in case of great provocation, to calm a man's own spirit, than to storm and take a strong city. Abp. Tillotson.

33. The lot is cast &c.] The lots are thrown at random, but the overruling hand of God disposeth of them, how they shall light. Bp. Hall.

Hence every good man may draw this comfortable reflexion, that he is not left to the caprice or hazard of a blind chance; but that his least, as well as greatest, concerns, are under the constant and infallible direction of Infinite wisdom, which maketh "all things work together for good to them that love God." Wogan.

— an house full of sacrifices] When sacrifices were offered in the temple, it was usual for the person to have a feast at home with his friends on the remains of the animal slain. Thus a house full of sacrifices means a house full of good provision. See Prov. vii. 14. Calmet.

2. A wise servant shall have rule &c.] Probity and prudence are so much better than mere riches and noble birth, that a wise and faithful servant sometimes arrives at the honour of being appointed the governour of a son, whose folly and wickedness make him a discredit to his family. Bp. Patrick.

9. He that covereth a transgression seeketh love;] He that concealeth within himself an offence done to him by his friend, takes a course to maintain friendship and love. Bp. Hall.

11. An evil man seeketh only &c.] An evil man is so refractory, that he has shaken off all reverence to God or to his governours, and is so wholly bent on mischief, that he cannot be reclaimed; therefore a severe execution shall be done upon him, to cut him off in his folly without mercy. Bp. Patrick.

22. — a broken spirit drieth the bones.] Preys upon the strength, and eats out the vigour of the constitution. Bp. Horne.

23. — taketh a gift out of the bosom.] The Hebrews used to carry in their bosom their purse, money, and all valuables. Thus perhaps the expression here may not be intended to convey any idea of secrecy, but merely to mark out something precious and valuable, as being carried in the bosom. Calmet.

24. — the eyes of a fool &c.] The eyes of a fool are constantly wandering every where, and his thoughts fix on nothing that may avail to his good. Bp. Hall.

26. — princes.] Or, "honourable men." Schultens.

27. — is of an excellent spirit.] In the margin, "of a cool spirit." A man of understanding is of a well tempered spirit, not too forward in putting himself forth. Bp. Hall.

Chap. XVIII. ver. 1. Through desire a man, &c.] He that in a fervent desire of knowledge has set himself apart to its continual study, labours to inform himself in all parts of wisdom, so that he may not be a stranger to any kind of learning. Bp. Hall.

"Having separated himself."—A total separation from society and its pleasures, for the pursuit of wisdom, cannot be the meaning of the text, because that is contrary to the main tenour of the Book of Proverbs; and besides, it is obvious that every one man's sense, however excellent, unless it mixes in society with that of others, always degenerates into singularity and caprice. Scd.

2. A fool hath no delight &c.] A fool will never take pleasure in true understanding, but all the design of his studies is to make a vain ostentation of wisdom unto others. Bp. Patrick.

3. When the wicked cometh,] Wheresoever the wicked cometh, he is apt to cast contempt and reproach on others. Bp. Hall.

4. The words of a man's mouth &c.] This sentence expresses the depth, the abundance, the clearness, and the force of the counsels of the wise man. Calmet.

5. — to accept the person of the wicked,] To shew favour or partiality to the wicked. Calmet. See Job xiii. 8, 10.

6. — his mouth calleth for strokes.] He increases a difference which may arise between others, till from words they come to blows. Bp. Patrick.

8. — are as wounds,] The Hebrew word here rendered "wounds," occurs no where else in the Bible, and translators have differed much in rendering the verse. "The words of the talebearer inflict a deadly wound on those who are the objects of his calumny, and sink deep into the minds of all who hear them." Bp. Patrick. The Hebrew word is allied to one in Arabick, which signifies "to swallow quickly or greedily." Thus perhaps the meaning may be, "are like dainties which are eagerly swallowed up by those who hear them." Schultens. Otherwise, "are like subtle poisons, which insinuate themselves, and produce their effects insensibly, for they penetrate into the inward parts of the belly, where they lie rankling and gnawing the vitals." Dr. Durell.

[e] Ver. 5.

11. The rich man's wealth is his strong city.] This verse seems opposed to the preceding. The righteous rests all his strength on God, the name of God is his strong tower; but the rich man regards his riches as an impregnable fortress. Calmet.

14. The spirit of a man &c.] A resolute and unbounded spirit is able to bear up against infirmities of mind and body: but if the heart of a man be wounded, and dejected with any crosses which befall him, what means has he of any longer sustaining himself? there remains no remedy, but he must needs droop and yield. Bp. Halt.

—— but a wounded spirit who can bear?] The words admit also of being rendered, "a wounded (or dejected) spirit, who can raise it up?" As both senses are true and pertinent, we may well take the passage in both; for the misery of a broken spirit is, that it is very hard to be borne, and that it is without remedy or support. The words may be understood, not of a wounded conscience merely, but of a wounded spirit in general, wounded by grief, and sinking under its load of troubles, no particular cause of trouble being expressed. They contain a caution against yielding too far to any troubles or misfortunes, against letting our spirits sink, or our courage fail us in our day of calamity. Dr. Waterland.

16. — maketh room for him, &c.] Opens a way for him, and procures him admittance before great men. Calmet. See note on Gen. xxi. 27.

17. He that is first &c.] He that is first in telling his own cause, seems to have justice on his side; but his neighbour cometh and examines what was said by him, and then shews the falsity of it. Dr. Wells.

18. The lot causeth contentions &c.] In some cases of difficult adjustment, the casting of lots is an equal way of determining the controversy, and of putting each party in quiet possession of that which falls to his share. Bp. Patrick.

22. Whoso findeth a wife] The Greek and almost all the old versions read, "whoso findeth a good wife." Dr. Durell. The meaning is, "one who truly answers to the character of a wife." Dr. Wells. "Obtaineth favour of the Lord;" hath met with an excellent blessing, and ought thankfully to acknowledge the favour of God in guiding his mind to so happy a choice. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. XIX. ver. 1. — than he that is perverse &c.] Than he that gathers great riches by fraud and circumvention, which he takes to be cunning, but which will prove folly in the end. Bp. Patrick.

2. — he that hasteth — sinneth.] "He that hasteth — stumbleth or falleth." He that comes rashly to his determinations, without weighing all the circumstances, cannot but stumble and err. Bp. Hall.

3. The foolishness of man &c.] Men commit numberless errours through ignorance or inconsideration, and so miss their ends; and then their heart frets not against themselves for their misfortunes, but against the Lord, as if Providence were unkind to them. Dr. Wells.

—— much less for a servant &c.] Power is still less suited to a vile slave, who is intolerably insolent when he can wantonly domineer over the greatest persons. Bp. Patrick.

12. — as the roaring of a lion; &c.] The roaring of a lion, it is said, is so terrible, that, in a wild state, all other animals fly away in consternation at the very sound. In the same manner, cruel and headstrong kings spread on every side alarm and consternation. Calmet.

—— as dew upon the grass.] In hot Eastern climates, where it rarely rains in summer, the copious dews which fall during the night contribute greatly to the nourishment of vegetables in general. The dew, says Hasselquist, speaking of the excessively hot weather in Egypt, is particularly serviceable to the trees, which would otherwise never be able to resist the heat; but with this assistance they thrive well and blossom. Parkhurst.

13. — are a continual dropping.] Like a roof which continually drops with rain. Implying, that it is not more difficult to live in a house with such a roof, than with a quarrelsome woman. Calmet. The old English version explains "continual dropping" by "rain that droppeth and rotteth a house;" perhaps the meaning may be, like the continued dropping of the eaves of a house, or any continued gentle falling of water, than which nothing is apt to be more tiresome or distracting. Dr. Durell.

14. — a prudent wife is from the Lord.] A prudent and virtuous wife is an especial blessing from God. Bp. Hall.

15. — casteth into a deep sleep;] Insensibly sinks the mind into a dull stupidity and unconcernedness about necessary things. Bp. Patrick.

16. — he that despiseth his ways] Cares not in how disorderly a manner he lives. Dr. Wells.

17. He that hath pity &c.] He that hath compassion on the poor, and relieves their necessities, does not impoverish but enrich himself. For the Lord considers that which is given to the poor as lent to Himself, and will not fail to make a full compensation, returning the benefit he hath done to others with large interest and increase of blessings on himself and his posterity. Bp. Patrick.

Sir Thomas More, a famous Lord Chancellor of England, used always to say, "There was more rhetorick," more persuasive argument, "in this little sentence, than in a whole library." Bp. Horne.

19. A man of great wrath &c.] A man that is subject to frequent and extreme passions of anger, cannot avoid many no great inconveniences, which he brings on himself: and if thou in a friendly manner free him from some dangerous effects of his intemperance, he will "do it again," he will repeat the same misconduct. Bp. Hall.

21. — the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand.] That which God has in His everlasting counsels either determined to do Himself, or to suffer to be done by any of His creatures, shall, whether we will or not, undoubtedly so come to pass, as He hath appointed. Bp. Sanderson.

22. The desire of a man is his kindness:] There is nothing more desirable for a man than to have wherewithal to be kind to others, and to confer obligations on his friends and neighbours. Bp. Patrick.

—— a poor man is better than a liar.] If a wealthy man promise much and perform nothing, a poor man, who is unable to undertake or to perform, is better than he. Bp. Hall.

24. A slothful man hideth &c.] The word which we translate "bosom," signifies more properly "a pan" or "dish." Thus the verse is rendered by many, "The slothful man hideth or plungeth his hand in the pan, and will not so much as (that is, it irketh or grieveth him to) bring it to his mouth again." In illustration of which sense it is to be remarked, that, to this day, the Arabs and Moors make use at their meals of neither knives, forks, nor spoons, but only of their hands and fingers, in eating pottage, or what we call spoon meats. To this purpose Le Bruyn says, "The Arabs in feeding on milk use no spoons. They dip their hands into the milk, which is placed before them in a wooden bowl, and sup it out of the palms of their hands." Parkhurst. Harmer.

25. Smite a scorner, and the simple will beware:] Punish severely a derider of religion; and, even if it do him no good, those incautious persons whom he hath deluded will be awakened by it to greater circumspection. Bp. Patrick.

27. — that causeth to err from the words of knowledge.] By "the words of knowledge" we are here to understand, generally, the precepts of virtue and religion; and the sum of the advice given is, that we should be careful to guard against the arts and insinuations of such as set themselves up for teachers of infidelity and irreligion. Bp. Sherlock.

4. The sluggard will not plow by reason of the cold;] In Syria they begin to plough about the latter end of September, and sow their earliest wheat about the middle of October. The frosts are never severe enough to prevent their ploughing all the winter. Dr. Russell.

5. Counsel in the heart of man &c.] Though the designs and intentions of some men are as hard to be sounded as deep waters; yet there are persons of such penetrating understandings, and of so great a reach, that they will find means to discover them, and to draw them out. Bp. Patrick.

6. — but a faithful man who can find?] A faithful man, one who will steadily perform what he has promised, and what he has boasted he would perform. Schultens.

8. A king that sitteth in the throne of judgment &c.] A king who acts justly.

10. Divers weights, &c.] A fraudulent diversity of weights and measures is abominable unto the Lord. Bp. Hall.

11. Even a child &c.] It is not difficult, by the carriage and disposition of a person in childhood, to judge what is to be hoped or feared of him in riper years; either good or evil begins to shew itself betimes. Bp. Hall.

12. The hearing ear, &c.] We are here reminded, that we derive from God all that we have, and all that we are, and that therefore none ought to take glory to himself for any excellent qualities of mind or body which he may possess. Calmet.

12. — open thine eyes,] That is, arise betimes in the morning, and follow some honest employment. Dr. Wells.

14. It is naught, — saith the buyer:] That is, the buyer unjustly tries to overreach the seller, by disparaging his goods: but when he has obtained them at his own price, he boasts of having tricked him. Dr. Wells.

16. Take his garment:] Take a garment (take the uttermost security thou canst) from him who is so inconsiderate as to become surety for an utter stranger; and also take a present pledge of him who has the folly to become surety for a strange or infamous woman. Dr. Wells.

17. Bread of deceit] Under the name of the "bread of deceit" may be included all things wrongfully obtained, which, however they may please in the beginning, will bring sorrow and pain in the conclusion. Bp. Patrick.

20. — his lamp shall be put out in obscure darkness.] His comfort and help shall be taken from him when he has most need of it, and he shall be left utterly miserable and disconsolate. Bp. Hall.

22. Say not thou, I will recompense &c.] Take not revenge for an injury received, where thou art not the proper judge, but leave thy cause to the Lord, and expect His righteous sentence. Bp. Patrick.

24. Man's goings are of the Lord;] No man can take one step towards any thing he designs, without the permission of the Lord; who sometimes overrules the motions of men unto ends so far distant from their thoughts, that it is impossible for them to know what the event shall be of any thing they undertake. Bp. Patrick.

25. It is a snare to the man &c.] That man entangleth his soul in the snares of death, who taketh back to a profane use that which is once consecrated to God, and who, after he has vowed any thing to the Lord, argues within himself how he may alter that holy purpose, and defraud God of His due. Bp. Hall.

26. — and bringeth the wheel over them.] A metaphor, to express the due punishment of the wicked, taken from the custom of threshing corn by means of a wheel drawn over it by oxen. Isa. xxviii. 27, 28. Bp. Patrick.

27. The spirit of man &c.] The soul is a principle of light to guide and direct man in all his motions, enabling him to reflect, not only on his own actions, but on his most secret thoughts, and to discover the good or evil which is in them. Dr. Wells.

30. The blueness of a wound &c.] The meaning seems to be, that a wicked man, who has received due correction for his crimes, will be cured of them, or will not so easily fall into the like again: and that though stripes chiefly affect the body, yet they have likewise an effect on (the chambers of the belly) the inward recesses of the mind; restraining the offender by the fear of punishment. That this is the meaning of the Hebrew, rendered "the inward parts of the belly," appears from that elegant comparison of the conscience or spirit of a man, ver. 27, to a light within him, searching out and discovering his most secret thoughts. Dr. Gray.

Chap. XXI. ver. 1. The king's heart is &c.] It is not in the power of kings, much less of other men, either to do or to design what they please, but their very wills are subject to the great Lord of all, who diverts them as easily from what they intend, or inclines them to that which they resolve against, as the gardener draws the streams of water, through the trenches he cuts, into what part of the ground he thinks good. Bp. Patrick.

4. — the plowing of the wicked,] The designs and contrivances of the wicked. Bp. Patrick.

5. — that is hasty] Who hopes to get rich rapidly by improper means.

6. The getting of treasures &c.] Wealth acquired by falsehood and lying is altogether uncertain and unstable; and will occasion utter destruction both of soul and body to him who unjustly acquires it. Bp. Hall. "Is a vanity tossed to and fro;" is not more durable than heaps of chaff or clouds of smoke, which are soon dissipated by the wind. Bp. Patrick.

8. — and strange:] Alienated from God and goodness. Dr. Isham.

9. — in a corner of the housetop,] During the summer season, it was usual to sleep on the tops of the houses, which were flat and properly guarded by a parapet wall; for which purpose little arbours were formed upon them. This, however pleasant in fine weather, must have been much otherwise in bad weather. Horsley.

12. — but God overthroweth &c.] The word "God" is not in the Hebrew, and is inserted to make up the sense: still the meaning is sufficiently good without this insertion, if by the term "righteous man," we understand not a private person, but a just and upright magistrate. The sense may then be, "A just judge makes a prudent but strict scrutiny into all the actions of a wicked man's family, that he may so punish them for their rapine, violence, and extortion, as to deprive them of all power to do further mischief." Bp. Patrick.

24. Proud and haughty scorner &c.] He that deals proudly in his anger, is worthy to be branded with the name of an insolent scorner. Bp. Hall.

25. The desire of the slothful killeth him;] The slothful man is consumed by vain longings.

29. — hardeneth his face:] He hardens his face against shame, laughs at correction, and impudently defends the evil he has done. The upright, on the contrary, watches over his ways, and corrects them when he is made aware of his errours. Calmet.

30. There is no wisdom &c. — against the Lord.] Wisdom, counsel, &c. avail nothing when they oppose the counsels and decrees of Heaven. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. XXII. ver. 1. — and loving favour] The loving favour of good men. Dr. Wells.

2. The rich and poor meet together: &c.] The obvious meaning of this proverbial speech is, that the rich and poor are mingled, or rather associated together, as members of the same community; under very different circumstances indeed, as to their outward appearance and condition, but with a manifest equality, as to their nature and origin; "the Lord is maker of them all." Dean Moss.

3. — foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself:] Foresees a calamity before it comes, and withdraws himself from the danger into a place of safety. Bp. Patrick.

6. Train up a child &c.] In these words are contained, 1st, the duty of parents and instructors, "Train up a child in the way he should go;" that is, in the course of life which he ought to lead; instruct him carefully in the knowledge and practice of his whole duty to God and man, which he ought to perform and observe all the days of his life: 2d, the fruit and benefit of good education, that, "when he is old, he will not depart from it." This we must understand according to the moral probability of things, not as if this happy effect did always and infallibly follow upon the good education of a child, but that this very frequently is, and may probably be hoped and presumed to be, the fruit and effect of a pious and prudent education: though exceptions may occur, yet they are not sufficient to infringe the general truth of the assertion. Abp. Tillotson.

7. — and the borrower &c.] Loses his liberty, and depends on the will and pleasure of the lender. Bp. Patrick.

9. He that hath a bountiful eye] He who freely gives, and delights to afford pleasure to others; opposed to him who has an evil eye. "Is thine eye evil," &c. Matt. xx. 15. Calmet.

"Good of eye," as in the margin, denotes kindness or benevolence in heart, which quality is usually accompanied with a good natured benevolent eye or look. On the contrary, "evil in eye," is equivalent to envious, grudging, chap. xxiii. 6. xxviii. 22. Parkhurst.

17. Bow down thine ear, &c.] From this verse, all interpreters have observed, that another form of speech, different from the preceding, begins and continues to the twenty-fifth chapter. From the beginning of the tenth chapter, to this place, the instructions of wisdom are delivered in short sentences, and proverbs properly so called, which have seldom any connexion. But now follow exhortations and precepts in the imperative mood, and those comprehended in two, three, or more verses. Bp. Patrick.

29. — he shall stand before kings;] He shall soon be preferred to the service of his prince, and shall not continue long in the service of a private person. Dr. Wells.

Chap. XXIII. ver. 1. When thou sittest to eat with a ruler,] As the foregoing chapter closes with an observation concerning the qualities of a person who is most likely to come to preferment, so this begins with a caution to him, as to his behaviour when he is promoted to it. Solomon advises such a person to be very considerate on such occasions who and what is before him, and to be always on his guard lest he commit excess, or betray want of respect. Bp. Patrick.

2. — put a knife to thy throat,] Be careful by all means to restrain thy wanton appetite, if thou be a man given to please thy palate. Bp. Hall. This is a bold Eastern phrase, expressive of the absolute necessity of restraining the appetites, and intimating that there is as much danger in indulging them, as there is in running against a knife applied to the throat. Dr. Durell.

18. For surely there is an end;] For surely there shall be a blessed reward of all thy holy endeavours, and thy expectation of a joyful retribution shall not be disappointed. Bp. Hall.

20. — among riotous eaters of flesh:] This is a general caution against intemperate and riotous feasting.

23. Buy the truth, and sell it not;] That is, Spare no cost to purchase truth, and sell it not for any gain. Dr. Ibbot.

27. — is a deep ditch;] From which it is difficult to escape. Dr. Isham. See chap. xxii. 14.

29. — who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause?] Who is given to idle obscene words? who suffers stripes and wounds in distempered frays? Bp. Hall.

30. — mixed wine.] The Hebrew word means wine mixed with the lees, which was of a highly intoxicating quality. Parkhurst. Or, spiced wine. Michaelis.

31. Look not thou upon the wine &c.] Suffer not thine eyes to be tempted by beholding with too much pleasure the pure and grateful colour of wine, when it shews itself in the cup and sparkles, through the strength and spirit that is in it. Bp. Hall.

—— when it is red,] Red wine is more esteemed in the East than white; and we are told in the Travels of Olearius, that it is customary with the Armenian Christians in Persia to put Brazil wood, or saffron, into their wine, to give it an higher colour, when the wine is not so red as they like; as they set little value on white wine. Harmer.

34. — thou shalt be as he that &c.] Thy head shall be as giddy, and thy brain as much turned, as if thou wert laid sea-sick in the midst of the ship, or placed on the top of the tottering mast. Bp. Hall.

CHAP. XXIV.

[a] Be not thou [a] envious against evil men, neither desire to be with them.

2 [b] For their heart studieth destruction, and their lips talk of mischief.

3 Through wisdom is an house builded; and by understanding it is established:

4 And by knowledge shall the chambers be filled with all precious and pleasant riches.

5 A wise man † is strong; yea, a man of knowledge † increaseth strength.

6 [c] For by wise counsel thou shalt make thy war: and in multitude of counsellers there is safety.

7 Wisdom is too high for a fool: he openeth not his mouth in the gate.

8 He that deviseth to do evil shall be called a mischievous person.

9 The thought of foolishness is sin: and the scorner is an abomination to men.

10 If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is † small.

11 [d] If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and those that are ready to be slain;

12 If thou sayest, Behold, we knew it not; doth not he that pondereth the heart consider it? and he that keepeth thy soul, doth not he know it? and shall not he render to every man [c] according to his works?

13 My son, eat thou honey, because it is good; and the honeycomb, which is sweet † to thy taste:

14 [f] So shall the knowledge of wisdom be unto thy soul: when thou hast found it, [g] then there shall be a reward, and thy expectation shall not be cut off.

15 Lay not wait, O wicked man, against the dwelling of the righteous; spoil not his resting place:

16 [h] For a just man falleth seven times, and riseth up again: but the wicked shall fall into mischief.

17 [i] Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth, and let not thine heart be glad when he stumbleth:

18 Lest the LORD see it, and † it displease him, and he turn away his wrath from him.

19 [k] ‖ Fret not thyself because of evil men, neither be thou envious at the wicked;

20 For there shall be no reward to the evil man; [l] the ‖ candle of the wicked shall be put out.

35. They have stricken me, &c.] This verse describes the drunken man's insensibility to blows.

Chap. XXIV. ver. 1. Be not thou envious &c.] The proneness of good men to be dejected at the prosperity of the ungodly, and so to be tempted to imitate them, is the reason that the admonition given in this verse is so often repeated. We find it before at ch. iii. 31. xxiii. 17. and it is repeated at ver. 19. of this chapter. Bp. Patrick.

5. — a man of knowledge increaseth strength.] A man of knowledge and understanding imparts a great increase of strength and defence to the whole city or community in which he is. Bp. Hall.

7. Wisdom is too high for a fool:] Wisdom is too high for a vain or inconsiderate person duly to value, and consequently to take sufficient pains to attain; whence it is, that he "openeth not his mouth in the gate," never becomes a judge or publick magistrate. Dr. Wells.

9. The thought of foolishness is sin:] He that is wickedly foolish entertains commonly no thoughts but sinful. Bp. Hall.

—— the scorner is an abomination to men.] It is worthy of remark that Solomon frequently exhorts us not to be scorners or scoffers in religion. Such persons he considers as the worst sort of sinners, as incurable fools and reprobates. The scorner, if he be in a mean and poor condition, does all the mischief he can in his narrow sphere of action; if he be in an exalted station, he is a publick curse and a national calamity. Dr. Jortin.

11, 12. If thou forbear &c.] The sum of the instruction conveyed in these verses is, that every man, according to his place and power, and especially those who are armed with any publick authority, are bound, both in charity and in justice, to use the utmost of their power, and to embrace all lawful opportunities, by all lawful means, to help those to right that suffer wrong; to stand by their poorer brethren and neighbours in the day of calamity and distress, to defend them in their righteous causes, to protect them from injuries, and to deliver them out of the hands of those who are too mighty, or too crafty, for them, who seek, either by violence or cunning, to deprive them of their lives or livelihoods. Bp. Sanderson.

13. — eat thou honey, &c.] The wise man shews with what pleasure the instructions of wisdom should be received, (ver. 14.) and how profitable also and necessary they are, by the example of honey, which was not only esteemed for its grateful flavour in those countries, but deemed most useful for the support of human life. It was held in great esteem for food, for drink, for medicine, for preserving of dead bodies, and particularly for infants. See Isa vii. 15. Ecclus. xxxix. 26. Hence the ancient Christians used to give a little milk and honey to those who were baptized, as persons newly regenerate and born again; because honey, as well as milk, was the nutriment of little children in those countries. See 1 Sam. xiv. 27. Luke xxiv. 41, 42. All this may be applied to heavenly wisdom, from which the mind derives the greatest satisfaction, and therefore it ought to be our daily diet, from the beginning of our days to the end of them. Bp. Patrick.

16. For a just man falleth seven times,] Rather, "Though a just man falleth seven times, yet will he rise again." Dr. Durell. A righteous man, if he fall into manifold miseries and calamities, yet, through the goodness of God, shall be delivered out of them all. Bp. Hall.

18. Lest the Lord see it, &c.] Lest the Lord see thy inward gladness, which man cannot see, and such a sinful and unreasonable feeling displease Him, and "He turn away His wrath" from the wicked man, and transfer it on thee. Dr. Wells.

‖ Or, discover not the secret of another.

21. — and meddle not with them that are given to change:] And have nothing to do with those, whose discontent with the present state of things, or continual love of novelty, makes them desire a change of government, and depart from their duty both to God and man. Bp. Patrick.

26. Every man shall kiss his lips &c.] Every good man shall applaud and bless the mouth of him who giveth an upright sentence in judgment. Bp. Hall.

27. Prepare thy work without, &c.] Get thy estate in good order, and then go, build thy house.

28. — and deceive not with thy lips.] The word which we render "deceive" signifies, in the original, any damage, any inconvenience, brought upon a man in the way of slander, calumny, backsliding, or any other injurious manner of representing him. We must consider every degree of this sin as forbidden in the precept. Dr. S. Clarke.

29. Say not, I will do so to him &c.] That is, whether revenge, or any other feeling, be the temptation to the practice, the sin itself is of the deepest die, and condemned amongst the most detestable crimes, both by reason and Scripture. Dr. S. Clarke.

31. — and the stone wall] Stone walls were frequently used for the preservation of vineyards, as well as living fences. Van Egmont and Heyman, describing the country round about Saphet, a celebrated city of Galilee, tell us, "the country round is finely improved, the declivity being covered with vines supported by low walls." Harmer.

33, 34. Yet a little sleep, &c.] See before at chap. vi. 10, 11.

Chap. XXV. Here begins the third part of the Book of Proverbs; which is a collection made by some belonging to Hezekiah, and acknowledged here, in the entrance of the book, as well as the former, to be Solomon's. Bp. Patrick. See the Introduction.

Ver. 2. It is the glory of God to conceal &c.] It is the peculiar glory of God, as being a prerogative justly due to His transcendant majesty, wisdom, goodness, and justice, "to conceal a thing;" that is, not to make known all the reasons of His providence, or of His decrees or judgments. Dr. Wells.

3. The heaven for height, &c.] It is as impossible for vulgar minds to penetrate into the secrets of state, and understand the counsels and designs of wise princes, and the various ways and means whereby they project to effect their ends, as it is to know how far it is from hence to the highest heavens, or how far to the centre of the earth upon which we tread. Bp. Patrick. Dr. Durell.

6. Put not forth thyself &c.] He here admonishes subjects not to be vainly ambitious, nor bold and forward in thrusting themselves into offices that do not belong to them, but to be modest, and, according to our Saviour's rule, Luke xiv. 8, to be invited to honour, rather than to seek it. Bp. Patrick.

9. Debate thy cause &c.] If there be a difference between thy neighbour and thee, take him aside, and in a friendly manner argue the matter with him alone, and discover not a secret unkindness to a third person, till thou seest no other way of reconciliation. Bp. Hall.

[c] Chap. 16. 32.

28 [c] He that hath no rule over his own spirit is like a city that is broken down, and without walls.

11. A word fitly spoken &c.] The general design of this sentence is manifestly to express the value and gratefulness of a word of counsel, reproof, or comfort, delivered in due time and place. Bp. Patrick. The Hebrew, translated in its most literal form, is, "a word spoken on its wheels," as the margin gives it; figuratively expressing a discourse which is grateful, which flows smoothly, agreeably, and without harshness. Calmet.

—— like apples of gold in pictures of silver.] As oranges or citrons in curiously engraved work of silver. Parkhurst. It may be doubtful whether by "apples of gold" be meant "apples that look like gold," or "apples made of gold." "Like golden balls or beautiful apples presented in a silver network basket." Bp. Patrick. Solomon probably alludes to the pomegranates and network in the temple, 1 Kings vii. 20.

12. —an ornament of fine gold,] The Hebrew words seem to mean any costly ornament wrought with great labour and pains. Parkhurst.

13. As the cold of snow in the time of harvest, &c.] As the mixing of snow with wine in the sultry time of harvest is pleasing and refreshing, so a successful messenger revives the spirit of his master who sent him, and who was ready to faint from an apprehension of his failure. The practice of cooling wines with snow was usual among the Eastern nations. It was derived from the Asiaticks and Greeks to the Romans. Plutarch describes the manner in which they preserved the snow by covering it with straw, and coarse cloths unshorn. In some hot countries it was often difficult to obtain it, and they were obliged to search into the hollow cliffs to collect it. Mount Hebron, which was always covered with snow, plentifully supplied the inhabitants of the country near it, from whence it was often carried to Tyre. Barry.

14. Whoso boasteth himself &c.] He that makes bountiful and deluding promises of great gifts which will never be performed, is like a cloud that makes a shew of rain which it cannot yield. Bp. Hall.

15. —a soft tongue breaketh the bone.] A gentle and submissive answer softens and renders supple the hardest and most inflexible heart. Bp. Hall.

16. Hast thou found honey? &c.] Moderation is here recommended in our pursuits and enjoyments. Dr. Isham.

18. — is a maul,] Or hammer—to beat down a man's fame, or break in pieces his estate. Bp. Patrick.

Solomon very fully and elegantly expresses the destructive nature of this sin; he intimates that, among all the instruments of ruin and mischief which have been devised by mankind, none is of more pernicious consequence to human society than perjury and breach of faith. It is a pestilence that usually walketh in darkness, a secret stab and blow, against which, frequently, there is no possibility of defence. Abp. Tillotson.

20. As he that taketh away a garment &c.] He that offers music to a man in deep heaviness does it as unseasonably as he that takes away a covering in extreme cold weather. Bp. Hall.

—— as vinegar upon nitre,] By the nitrum or nitre of the ancients is not meant what we now call nitre, or saltpetre, but the (mineral) alkali, called soda by chemists, which occasions a strong fermentation with all acids. Thus, in the passage before us, the unsuitableness of the singing of songs to a heavy heart is very finely compared to the opposition which subsists between vinegar and nitre. For the nitre of the ancients, see further, Jer. ii. 22. Dr. Shaw.

22. — thou shalt heap coals of fire &c.] If he have the least spark of goodness in him, it will work a change in his mind, and make him throw off all his enmities; or, if it have the contrary effect, he shall have so much the sorer punishment, and thou shalt not lose thy reward, which the Lord Himself will give thee. Bp. Patrick.

23. The north wind driveth away rain: &c.] It appears, from the version given in the margin, that these words admit of two opposite senses. Either, "as the north wind scatters clouds and drives away rain, so a severe countenance puts a stop to a slanderous tongue;" or, "as the north wind begetteth rain, so a backbiting tongue raiseth up anger and indignation." Bp. Patrick.

27. — is not glory,] Proves at last not honourable, but reproachful, to them. Bp. Patrick.

28. — that hath no rule over his own spirit] Or over his passions, is thereby exposed to innumerable dangers, like a city without walls. Dr. Wells.

23 Burning lips and a wicked heart are like a potsherd covered with silver dross.

24 He that hateth ‖ dissembleth with his lips, and layeth up deceit within him;

Chap. XXVI. ver. 2. As the bird by wandering, &c.] The meaning of this verse has been variously explained. Curses which fly out of men's mouths chaselessly, shall no more fall where they intend, than a swallow which wanders uncertainly, or a dove which flies away swiftly, will settle according to their direction. Bp. Patrick. The meaning may perhaps be, that evils, natural or moral, owe not their being to chance, like the accidental flight of birds in this or that direction, but are all directed by the will of an all-wise superintending Providence. Dr. Durell.

3. — a bridle for the ass,] According to our English notions, we should rather say, A bridle for an horse, and a whip for an ass. It should be considered, however, that the Eastern asses, particularly those of the Arabian breed, are much larger, more beautiful, and better goers, than those in our cold northerly countries, and so, no doubt, they were anciently in Palestine, where, as we find from many passages, they were the beasts on which people usually rode. See Job xxxix. 7. Parkhurst.

4, 5. Answer not a fool &c.] In the first of these verses, the meaning is, Enter not into contest with a fool. In the second, Suffer not his folly to go unreproved: both to be determined by times and circumstances.

6. He that sendeth a message &c.] He that sends a witless man, or one that minds nothing but his pleasure, to treat about his business, will be sure not only to miscarry in it, but to suffer great damage by his ill management. Bp. Patrick.

7. The legs of the lame &c.] A wise saying as ill becomes a fool, as dancing does a cripple: for, as his lameness never so much appears as when he would seem nimble, so the other's folly is never so ridiculous as when he would seem wise. Bp. Patrick.

8. As he that bindeth a stone &c.] The application of this comparison to the moral sentiment seems to be sufficiently obvious; the honour bestowed upon a fool is thrown away, as the stone from a sling. Dr. Durell. Or, the sense of the marginal translation is good and clear, "As he that putteth a precious stone in a heap of stones," &c. The precious stone in the one case, and the honour in the other, is thrown away and lost. Parkhurst.

9. As a thorn goeth up] It is no more fit for fools to meddle with a wise speech, than for a drunken man to handle a bush of thorns. Bp. Hall.

They hurt themselves by the interpretation and application of it, as a drunken man does his hand with a hook or thorn, which he has not steadiness to handle. Parkhurst.

11. As a dog returneth to his vomit, &c.] As a dog which has often vomited by eating too much food which is nauseous to his stomach, yet will do the like again, and so make himself vomit again, so a fool that is not to be reclaimed returns to his folly, though he has suffered often for it before. Dr. Wells. It is said, that, of all animals, the dog is the only one known that will return to eat food which it has vomited. Calmet.

12. Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit?] Pride makes men impatient of good advice and instruction, and that renders them incorrigible in their vices. Dr. S. Clarke.

13. The slothful man &c.] See before at chap. xxii. 13.

16. The sluggard &c.] The sluggard will not be beaten out of his sloth; and, however many wise men may endeavour to persuade him out of his dull idleness, yet he persists in his errour, and thinks himself herein wiser than them all. Bp. Hall.

19. — the man that deceiveth his neighbour, &c.] That is, who leads his neighbour into any mischief. Dr. S. Clarke.

21. As coals are to burning coals, &c.] Provoking language as quickly passes into quarrels, as dead coals do into burning coals, and wood into fire, when they are applied the one to the other. Bp. Patrick.

22. The words of a talebearer] See chap. xviii. 8.

23. Burning lips &c.] "Warm lips," that is, lips making warm and eager professions, and a bad deceitful heart. Parkhurst.

25 When he † speaketh fair, believe him not: for there are seven abominations in his heart.

† Heb. maketh his voice gracious.

26 ‖ Whose hatred is covered by deceit, his wickedness shall be shewed before the whole congregation.

[a] BOAST not thyself of † to morrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth.

† Heb. to morrow day.

2 Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth; a stranger, and not thine own lips.

3 A stone is † heavy, and the sand weighty; but a fool's wrath is heavier than them both.

† Heb. heaviness.

4 † Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous; but who is able to stand before ‖ envy?

† Heb. Wrath is cruelty, and anger an overflowing. ‖ Or, jealousy?

5 Open rebuke is better than secret love.

[b] Psal. 141. 5.

6 [b] Faithful are the wounds of a friend; but the kisses of an enemy are ‖ deceitful.

‖ Or, earnest, or, frequent.

7 The full soul † loatheth an honeycomb; but [c] to the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet.

† Heb. treadeth under foot. [c] Job 6. 7.

8 As a bird that wandereth from her nest, so is a man that wandereth from his place.

9 Ointment and perfume rejoice the heart: so doth the sweetness of a man's friend † by hearty counsel.

Before CHRIST about 700.

† Heb. From the counsel of the soul.

10 Thine own friend, and thy father's friend, forsake not; neither go into thy brother's house in the day of thy calamity: for [d] better is a neighbour that is near than a brother far off.

[d] Chap. 17. 17. & 18. 24.

11 [e] My son, be wise, and make my heart glad, that I may answer him that reproacheth me.

13 [g] Take his garment that is surety for a stranger, and take a pledge of him for a strange woman.

[g] Chap. 20. 16.

14 He that blesseth his friend with a loud voice, rising early in the morning, it shall be counted a curse to him.

15 [h] A continual dropping in a very rainy day and a contentious woman are alike.

[h] Chap. 19. 13.

16 Whosoever hideth her hideth the wind, and the ointment of his right hand, which bewrayeth itself.

17 Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend.

18 Whoso keepeth the fig tree shall eat the fruit thereof: so he that waiteth on his master shall be honoured.

19 As in water face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man.

20 Hell and destruction are † never full; so [i] the eyes of man are never satisfied.

† Heb. are not. [i] Eccles. 1. 8.

25. — there are seven abominations] There is a great variety of secret wickedness in his heart. Bp. Hall.

26. — shewed before the whole congregation.] Openly exposed to the view of all the world. Bp. Patrick. Made to appear before a publick court of judicature. Dr. Wells.

28. A lying tongue hateth &c.] A man of a lying tongue hates those whom he has wronged, from a consciousness of his injurious conduct, and from a knowledge that he has deserved their hatred. Bp. Hall.

Chap. XXVII. ver. 3. — is heavier than them both.] Is more intolerable, is more troublesome to bear. Bp. Hall.

5. Open rebuke is better than secret love.] He that rebukes others freely, when need requires, is a more valuable friend than he who from fear of offending has not courage to tell them of their faults. Bp. Patrick.

6. — the wounds of a friend;] The reproofs of a friend, however sharp and cutting. Dr. Wells.

8. — that wandereth from his place.] From his home or country. Dr. Durell.

10. — neither go into thy brother's house &c.] Neither go to thy brother's house for shelter and relief in the day of thy calamity, only because he is thy brother, unless thou art well assured beforehand that he is thy true friend as well as brother: for better is a neighbour that is near to one in true friendship and affection, than a brother that is only near in kin, but far off in affection. Dr. Wells.

14. He that bleseth his friend &c.] That is, lavishes on him flattering and unseasonable commendations. Dr. Isham.

16. Whosoever hideth her &c.] A contentious woman can no more be hid, than the wind which bloweth on the face, or the perfume of the ointment on the hand; these both will be perceived: so will the unquiet spirit of a contentious woman. Bp. Hall.

17. — so a man sharpeneth the countenance] So a man imparts to his friend alacrity and spirits. Dr. Durell. So, by the conversation of one friend with another, are the good parts and faculties of men improved. Bp. Hall.

18. Whoso keepeth] That is, diligently looks after it and preserves it from injury.

—— he that waiteth on his master] He that faithfully defends his master's person or reputation, and takes care of his estate, "Shall be honoured;" shall be duly rewarded. Bp. Patrick.

19. — so the heart of man to man.] So he that looks into his friend's heart sees there his own heart. Bp. Hall.

20. Hell and destruction &c.] Meaning the grave, the state of the dead. See the note on Job xxvi. 5, 6.

—— so the eyes of man &c.] So the eyes of man, and also his desires, are never satisfied, but require some new object to please them. Dr. Wells.

21. — so is a man to his praise.] There is no way so sure of trying a man's discretion and temper, as by praising him: if he be vain and light, he will be puffed up with it; if he be wise and solid, he will not be moved by it. Bp. Hall.

Before CHRIST about 700.

22 Though thou shouldest bray a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him.

23 Be thou diligent to know the state of thy flocks, and † look well to thy herds.

† Heb. strength.

† Heb. to generation and generation?

25 The hay appeareth, and the tender grass sheweth itself, and herbs of the mountains are gathered.

26 The lambs are for thy clothing, and the goats are the price of the field.

27 And thou shalt have goats' milk enough for thy food, for the food of thy houshold, and for the † maintenance for thy maidens.

† Heb. life.

CHAP. XXVIII.

General observations of impiety and religious integrity.

[a] Lev. 26. 36.

[a] THE wicked flee when no man pursueth: but the righteous are bold as a lion.

2 For the transgression of a land many are the princes thereof: but ‖ by a man of understanding and knowledge the state thereof shall be prolonged.

‖ Or, by men of understanding and wisdom shall they likewise be prolonged.

3 A poor man that oppresseth the poor is like a sweeping rain † which leaveth no food.

† Heb. without food.

4 They that forsake the law praise the wicked: but such as keep the law contend with them.

5 Evil men understand not judgment: but they that seek the LORD understand all things.

Before CHRIST about 709.

6 [b] Better is the poor that walketh in his uprightness, than he that is perverse in his ways, though he be rich.

[b] Chap. 19. 1.

7 [c] Whoso keepeth the law is a wise son: but he that ‖ is a companion of riotous men shameth his father.

[c] Chap. 23. 5.

8 [d] He that by usury and † unjust gain increaseth his substance, he shall gather it for him that will pity the poor.

[d] Chap. 13. 22. Eccles. 2. 26.

9 He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination.

10 [e] Whoso causeth the righteous to go astray in an evil way, he shall fall himself into his own pit: but the upright shall have good things in possession.

[e] Chap. 26. 27.

11 The rich man is wise † in his own conceit; but the poor that hath understanding searcheth him out.

† Heb. in his eyes.

12 [f] When righteous men do rejoice, there is great glory: but when the wicked rise, a man is ‖ hidden.

[f] Ver 28. chap. 11. 10. Eccles. 10. 6.

13 [g] He that covereth his sins shall not prosper: but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy.

‖ Or, sought for.

[g] Psal. 32. 5. 1 John 1. 9. 10.

14 Happy is the man that feareth alway: [h] but he that hardeneth his heart shall fall into mischief.

[h] Rom. 11. 20.

15 As a roaring lion, and a ranging bear; so is a wicked ruler over the poor people.

16 The prince that wanteth understand-

22. — in a mortar among wheat] Before there were any publick mills, it was usual for those who could not afford the expense of a handmill in their houses to beat their corn with a pestle in a mortar. Calmet. The meaning is, So incurable is the folly and wickedness of some men, that though to reproofs and chidings you should add stripes and blows, they would not grow wiser or better. Bp. Patrick.

24. — and doth the crown endure] Even the crown itself will not continue to many generations, without due care to preserve its revenue. Bp. Patrick.

25. The hay appeareth,] Rather, "the herbage." See the note on Isaiah xv. 6.

26. — the goats are the price of the field.] "Are for the price of the field:" by selling thy goats, thou wilt pay for the cultivation of thy land, or purchase it for thyself. Calmet.

Chap. XXVIII. ver. 2. — many are the princes thereof:] The wickedness of a land is the cause of many changes in the princes and governours thereof, whereby both the people and princes, conspiring in evil, are punished. Bp. Hall. "Many are the princes;" that is, none reigns long, or many reign together, opposing and thrusting out one another. Bp. Patrick.

3. A poor man &c.] A rich oppressor leaves a man poor, but a poor oppressor leaves to him nothing. Bp. Hall.

4. They that forsake the law praise the wicked:] They that willingly break and cast off the law of God, by so doing, give approbation and encouragement to wickedness. Bp. Hall.

5. — understand all things.] Understand their whole duty to God. Bp. Hall.

8. — he shall gather it for him that will pity the poor.] According to this remarkable saying of the wise man, the reason why so many estates are blasted so soon, and brought to nothing, is, that men do not render to God the duty and tribute which He has charged upon their estates for Himself and the poor; and then it is no wonder if God in His providence turn them out of their possession, and give their estate to others, who will be better tenants, and more careful to pay the duties He requires. Bp. Beveridge.

9. — from hearing the law,] That is, from obeying it. "Even his prayer shall be abomination;" however men of impious lives may trust to the forms of outward devotion, frequenting the church and service of God, and hearing His word and receiving His sacrament; let them not deceive themselves: God is not mocked. All this is so far from making amends for the impiety of their lives, that, on the contrary, the impiety of their lives spoils all the acceptance of their devotions. Abp. Tillotson.

If we live like Heathens or Infidels, our Christian prayers do but affront God's majesty. Lord Clarendon.

11. — searcheth him out.] Discovers his weakness. Dr. Isham.

12. — a man is hidden.] Good men are forced to hide themselves. Dr. Wells.

13. He that covereth his sins &c.] Here the blessing of God's mercy is declared to sinners, on the condition of their confessing and forsaking their sins; and this condition contains the whole nature of that great and necessary duty of repentance, without which none can have a reasonable hope of the mercy of God. Abp. Tillotson.

14. — the man that feareth] That is, who is cautious always: "but he that hardeneth his heart," that is, who is careless and negligent, shall fall into mischief. Dr. S. Clarke.

ing is also a great oppressor: but he that hateth covetousness shall prolong his days.

17 [b] A man that doeth violence to the blood of any person shall flee to the pit; let no man stay him.

18 [a] Whoso walketh uprightly shall be saved: but he that is perverse in his ways shall fall at once.

19 [i] He that tilleth his land shall have plenty of bread: but he that followeth after vain persons shall have poverty enough.

20 A faithful man shall abound with blessings: [m] but he that maketh haste to be rich shall not be ‖ innocent.

21 [n] To have respect of persons is not good: for for a piece of bread that man will transgress.

22 ‖ He that hasteth to be rich hath an evil eye, and considereth not that poverty shall come upon him.

23 [o] He that rebuketh a man afterwards shall find more favour than he that flattereth with the tongue.

24 Whoso robbeth his father or his mother, and saith, It is no transgression; the same is the companion of † a destroyer.

25 [p] He that is of a proud heart stirreth up strife: but he that putteth his trust in the LORD shall be made fat.

26 He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool: but whoso walketh wisely, he shall be delivered.

27 [q] He that giveth unto the poor shall not lack: but he that hideth his eyes shall have many a curse.

28 [r] When the wicked rise, men hide themselves: but when they perish, the righteous increase.

Before CHRIST about 708.

1 Observations of publick government, 15 and of private. 22 Of anger, pride, thievery, cowardice, and corruption.

† HE, that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.

2 [a] When the righteous are ‖ in authority, the people rejoice: but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn.

3 [b] Whoso loveth wisdom rejoiceth his father: [c] but he that keepeth company with harlots spendeth his substance.

4 The king by judgment establisheth the land: but † he that receiveth gifts overthroweth it.

5 A man that flattereth his neighbour spreadeth a net for his feet.

6 In the transgression of an evil man there is a snare: but the righteous doth sing and rejoice.

7 [d] The righteous considereth the cause of the poor: but the wicked regardeth not to know it.

8 Scornful men ‖ bring a city into a snare: but wise men turn away wrath.

9 If a wise man contendeth with a foolish man, whether he rage or laugh, there is no rest.

10 † The bloodthirsty hate the upright: but the just seek his soul.

11 A fool uttereth all his mind: but a wise man keepeth it in till afterwards.

17. — let no man stay him.] Or, "no man shall stay him." Dr. Wells. He that murders a man shall never think himself safe, being pressed by his conscience, or pursued by the avenger of blood, and shall lead a restless life to his grave: all men shall refuse to succour him, and though they see him falling unawares into the pit, they shall not stop him. Bp. Patrick.

21. To have respect of persons &c.] For a judge to incline to consider the quality of the person, and not the merits of the cause that is brought before him, "is not good." Bp. Patrick.

22. — hath an evil eye.] Hath a covetous eye and a base niggardly heart; and "considereth not," &c. that is, knows not that the ungh the just judgments of God this his immoderate eagerness will be punished with want and beggary. Bp. Hall.

24. — is the companion of a destroyer.] Is, for the heinousness of his sin, in the next degree to a murderer. Bp. Hall.

25. — shall be made fat.] Shall thrive and abound with plenty of all good things. Bp. Patrick.

27. — he that hideth his eyes.] He that regards not the miseries of others, and is not willing so much as to know them. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. XXIX. ver. 1. — hardeneth his neck,] Refuses to be guided by reproofs, and to submit to them. The expression is taken from oxen in the yoke. Bp. Patrick.

5. — spreadeth a net for his feet.] Is so far from being a true friend, as he imagines, that he is a traitor to him, and leads him unawares into danger. Bp. Patrick.

6. In the transgression &c.] Rather, "The wicked is snared by transgression;" so these words are rendered at chap. xii. 13. Dr. Durell.

—— doth sing and rejoice.] Has always cause to be cheerful on account of his righteousness. Dr. Wells.

8. — bring a city into a snare:] Bring down judgments upon the city where they live. Bp. Hall.

9. — whether he rage or laugh, there is no rest.] Whether a wise man deal with him seriously and severely, or jestingly, he will not be able to prevail, either for his own peace or the other's reformation. Bp. Hall.

10. — seek his soul.] Labour to preserve him. Dr. Isham.

12. If a ruler hearken to lies, &c.] If a prince listen to the false suggestions of others, or too easily believe, without my examination, all the stories and accusations that are brought to him by others, he will fill his whole court with wicked men. Bp. Patrick.

13. The poor and the deceitful man &c.] The innocent poor man, and the crafty griping usurer, meet both together; and the Lord causeth his sun to shine on them both, maintaining them both in life, doing good outwardly even to the worst-deserving. Bp. Hall.

Before CHRIST about 700.

14 [f] The king that faithfully judgeth the poor, his throne shall be established for ever.

15 [g] The rod and reproof give wisdom: but [h] a child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame.

16 When the wicked are multiplied, transgression increaseth: [i] but the righteous shall see their fall.

17 [k] Correct thy son, and he shall give thee rest; yea, he shall give delight unto thy soul.

18 Where there is no vision, the people ‖ perish: but he that keepeth the law, happy is he.

19 A servant will not be corrected by words: for though he understand he will not answer.

20 Seest thou a man that is hasty ‖ in his words? there is more hope of a fool than of him.

21 He that delicately bringeth up his servant from a child shall have him become his son at the length.

22 [l] An angry man stirreth up strife, and a furious man aboundeth in transgression.

23 [m] A man's pride shall bring him low: but honour shall uphold the humble in spirit.

24 Whoso is partner with a thief hateth his own soul: he heareth cursing, and bewrayeth it not.

25 The fear of man bringeth a snare: but whoso putteth his trust in the LORD † shall be safe.

26 [n] Many seek † the ruler's favour; but every man's judgment cometh from the LORD.

27 An unjust man is an abomination to the just: and he that is upright in the way is abomination to the wicked.

THE words of Agur the son of Jakeh, even the prophecy: the man spake unto Ithiel, even unto Ithiel and Ucal,

2 Surely I am more brutish than any man, and have not the understanding of a man.

3 I neither learned wisdom, nor † have the knowledge of the holy.

4 [a] Who hath ascended up into heaven, or descended? [b] who hath gathered the wind in his fists? who hath bound the waters in a garment? who hath established all the ends of the earth? what is his name, and what is his son's name, if thou canst tell?

5 [c] Every word of God is † pure: he is a shield unto them that put their trust in him.

6 [d] Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar.

7 Two things have I required of thee; † deny me them not before I die:

8 Remove far from me vanity and lies: give me neither poverty nor riches; [e] feed me with food † convenient for me:

18. Where there is no vision, &c.] Where there is none to instruct the people, and expound the will of God to them. Bp. Patrick.

19. A servant &c.] A slave, and one that is of a servile nature, is not to be amended by reason and persuasions; though he hear and understand too what you say, he will not obey till he be forced to it by blows. Bp. Patrick.

21. He that delicately bringeth up &c.] He that expresses too much kindness for a servant, thereby makes him become saucy, so that he will at last assume too much authority. Dr. Wells.

24. — hateth his own soul:] Brings upon himself the same guilt with the thief himself. Bp. Patrick.

—— he heareth cursing, and bewrayeth it not.] He heareth men urged with oaths respecting the theft, and yet keeps his wicked counsel, and discovers not the malefactor. Bp. Hall.

26. — but every man's judgment cometh from the Lord.] Men eagerly solicit the favour and protection of princes, but they forget God, who is the Judge Supreme both of prince and people. Calmet.

Chap. XXX. ver. 1. — Agur] See the Introduction.

—— even the prophecy:] Even the weighty sentences. Dr. Wells. The lesson or character. Dr. Durell.

2. Surely I am more brutish &c.] It would appear that his scholars came to him admiring his wisdom, and desiring to be resolved in many difficulties; to whom Agur modestly and humbly replied, Do not call me wise, for I am so far from that acuteness which is natural to one excelling in wisdom, that I am stupid in comparison with such a person; nay I cannot arrogate to myself the understanding of a common man. Bp. Patrick.

3. — nor have the knowledge of the holy.] The knowledge of Divine things, of heavenly truths. Calmet.

4. Who hath ascended &c.] Indeed what can man do? How poor and impotent creatures we all are! Is any of us able to ascend up into heaven, and to descend thence again? Have we power to command any thing in these lower regions? Have we the rule of the winds, the waters, or the earth? Shew me the man who can or dares arrogate this power to himself. Bp. Hall.

—— in his fists?] The Hebrew word seems to mean the two hands considered as joined together and capacious, forming a hollow to enclose any thing. Parkhurst.

—— who hath bound the waters in a garment?] Who can confine the waters of the sea within their proper limits, as if he had tied them "in a garment?" Calmet.

6. — thou be found a liar.] Be found guilty of the worst of forgeries in counterfeiting Divine inspiration. Dr. Wells.

7. Two things have I required of thee; &c.] Agur seems here to answer a question of his scholars respecting prayer, and enjoins them to pray as he himself was wont to do, I humbly beg only two things of Thee, O God, which I most earnestly beseech Thee I may not want, as long as I remain in this world. Bp. Patrick.

8. — give me neither poverty nor riches;] We must not consider Agur as praying absolutely against riches, or absolutely against poverty; for poverty and riches are of themselves things indifferent, and the blessing of God may go with them both; but it is a prayer of choice, or a comparative prayer: as if he had said, Give me, O God, if it be Thy will, the middle between both, and feed me with food convenient for me. For though all the three conditions be so far indifferent that a man may be good, and ought to be contented or resigned, in any of them, yet, if it were matter of choice, the middle is the easiest and most desirable. Dr. Jortin.

——feed me with food convenient for me.] "With bread sufficient for me:" in the Syriack, "with the bread of my sufficiency or convenience." Dr. Hales.

This "convenient food" is in the original, "the bread of my competent allowance." It is even that "sufficient bread," that "daily bread," which Christ our Lord in His prayer hath taught us all to pray for. By "bread," or "food," the Hebrews understand all provisions for the use of life. Jos. Mede.

9. Lest I be full, &c.] That is, lest too much plenty make me worldly-minded, profane, and irreligious. To say in a contemptuous manner, Who is the Lord? is to deny the being or the providence of God. We may deny these by our words, or by our behaviour. To deny them by words, is to utter a lie; and to deny them by behaviour, may be called, to act a lie, and a lie of the most detestable kind. Dr. Jortin.

——take the name of my God in vain.] That is, have recourse to perjury to clear myself from the charge of theft. Dr. Wells. Lest poverty tempt me to steal, and stealth involve me in perjury. Bp. Tillotson. It will illustrate this expression to mention, that the danger of perjury, on committing a theft, was greater among the Jews than among us, by reason of a custom or law amongst them, to tender an oath to those who were suspected of theft, and who were thus to clear themselves. Dr. Jortin.

10. — lest he curse thee, and thou be found guilty.] Lest in the bitterness of his soul he curse thee, and God hearing him should punish thy guiltiness. Bp. Hall.

11. There is a generation &c.] There are four descriptions of men (ver. 11—14.) worthy of our avoidance and detestation; the first is of graceless children who curse their parents, the next of false hypocrites and self-pleasers, the third of proud men who are exalted in their own opinions, the fourth of cruel oppressors who kill and devour the poor, &c. Bp. Hall.

13. — O how lofty are their eyes!] Who superciliously overlook other men, as if they were not worthy of the least regard from them. Bp. Patrick.

15. The horseleach &c.] This verse has considerable difficulty in it. It seems to contain an answer to a question which the disciples of Agur had propounded to him, after the manner of enigmatical discourses or riddles, what is most insatiable; to which he answers, The horseleach, which sucks the blood of other creatures till it bursts, as those wicked men (mentioned at ver. 14.) do the livelihood of the poor, till they ruin themselves. And as to this perpetual craving of more, the "horseleach has two daughters," that is, there are two things so like to her in this, that they may be called her daughters, as they always cry, Give more. Bp. Patrick, Dr. Wells.

——There are three things &c.] This he expresses after the manner of the Hebrews, who often, when intending to mention several things, separate them at first, beginning with a lesser number, and proceeding then to the greater. There are examples of this at Amos i. 3, 6, 9, &c. and also at Prov. vi. 16. and in this chapter, ver. 18, 21, &c. Bp. Patrick.

17. — the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, &c.] Meaning, they shall come to an infamous end, and their dead bodies shall be exposed, and become a prey to the ravens and eagles. Bp. Patrick.

18. There be three things &c.] In these words he resolves another riddle, which it appears had been proposed to him, namely, what things are most obscure and unaccountable, though ordinary and common. Bp. Patrick.

19. — the way of a serpent upon a rock;] A serpent seems here to be specified rather than any other animal, because he would be more likely to discover himself by the marks left behind him on the dust; but upon a rock he leaves no more trace than the eagle in the air, or the ship in the sea. Dr. Durell.

——the way of a man &c.] In the Latin translation, the words are rendered with a very different sense, "The way of a man in his youth," alluding to the secret and imperceptible manner in which he advances from the feebleness, mental and bodily, of childhood, to the strength and stature of manhood. Calmet.

20. — she eateth, &c.] A modest way of expressing her unlawful commerce. Dr. Durell.

26. The conies &c.] See note at Levit: xi. 5. That the animal meant is "Israel's lamb," otherwise called Ashkoko, is confirmed by this passage in Proverbs, where they are described to be "a feeble folk," an expression probably alluding to their feet, which appear very inadequate to the work of digging holes in the rock: these feet are frequently round, very pulpy or fleshy; notwithstanding which, they build houses on the very hardest rocks, more inaccessible than those of the rabbit, in which they abide in greater safety, not by exertion of strength, (for, in Solomon's words, they are altogether "a feeble folk,") but by their own sagacity and judgment. Bruce.

27. The locusts &c.] See the notes on Exod. x. 4. and 15. and on Joel ii. 2, &c.

31. A greyhound;] The words in the Hebrew signify literally, "girt or narrow in the loins." Some suppose a horse to be meant. Bochart applies it to the greyhound. Dr. Russell says, that the greyhounds at Aleppo are of a very light slender make, and remarkably fleet. It is probable they had the same breed in Judea. Parkhurst.

Chap. XXXI. ver. 1. The words of king Lemuel,] See the Introduction.

2. What, my son? &c.] "What terms shall I employ, my son?" &c. To shew her son what anxiety she feels to see him wise and happy, she expresses that she knows not how to begin to point out to him his duties, and the dangers he ought to avoid. Calmet.

6. Give strong drink &c.] Rather, Give strong drink to the man that is dejected in spirits, and near to perishing, through extremity of affliction. Bp. Hall.

8. Open thy mouth &c.] Speak thou for them that are not able to speak for themselves, and plead thou for them that are undeservedly marked out for destruction. Bp. Hall.

10. Who can find a virtuous woman?] The instructions of Lemuel seem to end here; and a lesson for daughters begins, ranged in verses according to the letters of the Hebrew alphabet, with which each verse successively begins, for the convenience of the memory.

13. She seeketh wool, &c.] She loves to be always employed in some piece of useful housewifery suitable to her condition. Dr. Wells.

This description of a virtuous woman consists of twenty-two verses. It is well worthy of observation, that eleven of these verses, half the number, are taken up in setting forth her industry, and the effects of it. A variety of magnificent language is made use of to describe her different employments, to recommend simplicity of manners, and make good housewifery and honest labour to be admired in the rich and noble, as well as in the poor and obscure, among women. In works of the several kinds here mentioned, queens and princesses of old time disdained not to be occupied. Bp. Horne.

31 Give her of the fruit of her hands; and let her own works praise her in the gates.

20. She stretcheth out her hand to the poor;] This is another good effect of her economy and management. She is not only able to provide plentifully for her household, but has always something in store for the poor. A charitable disposition avails little, where vanity, folly, and extravagance, have taken away the power to exert it. Bp. Horne.

21. She is not afraid of the snow &c.] She is careful to provide what is requisite for her family in the severest part of the year, and sufficient clothing in the coldest weather. Dr. Wells.

—— are clothed with scarlet.] Or, "with double garments," as in the margin. The Hebrew word signifies literally, "double;" and when applied to clothes, signifies either double in quantity and texture, or "double-dyed;" hence, as the purple and scarlet were the most usual dyes among the Hebrews, the word came to signify, a purple or scarlet dye. Parkhurst. As the sentence seems to refer to a security against cold, it seems better to translate here "double garments." Dr. Durell.

23. Her husband is known in the gates,] That is, he is known as her husband; as a man blessed with such a wife; as indebted, perhaps, for his promotion, to the wealth acquired by her management at home; for the splendour and elegance of his apparel, to the labour of her hands; and, it may be, for the preservation and establishment of his virtue and integrity, to the encouragement, in all that is holy and just and good, furnished by her example as well as by her conversation. Bp. Horne.

24. —girdles] Girdles curiously wrought, which she sells to the merchant. Bp. Patrick. Curiously wrought or embroidered girdles are still an essential part of Eastern finery, both to men and women. Parkhurst. Maillet informs us, that the Arab women have been accustomed to deal in buying and selling things worn of silk, cotton, &c. and simple linen cloth; which is precisely what is here said of the industrious Israelitish women. Harmer.

25. Strength and honour are her clothing;] See the note on Job xxix. 14.

29. Many daughters have done &c.] Her husband will extol her worth and virtue above other women, saying, Other wives have done and deserved well, but thou surpassest them all. Bp. Hall. Happy the children of such a mother; they will be living proofs of the care taken by her in their education, when she taught them to walk, by the paths of honour and virtue, to the mansions of rest and glory. Happy the husband of such a wife, who sees all things prosper under her direction, and the blessing of Heaven derived to his family through her. They will all join in proclaiming, that, among women who do well, honour is chiefly due to the virtuous and diligent wife, the affectionate and sensible mother. Bp. Horne.

30. Favour] A handsome shape and graceful behaviour. Bp. Patrick.

31. Give her of the fruit of her hands; &c.] Let every one extol her virtue; let her not want the just commendations of her pious labours in the greatest assemblies, where, if all men should be silent, her own works will declare her excellent worth. Bp. Patrick.

The picture which is drawn in this chapter of a good housewife is perhaps the most finished of all antiquity. It is drawn at full length, and equally pleasing in every point of view. Dr. Durell.

ECCLESIASTES;

OR,

THE PREACHER.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Book of Ecclesiastes is called in Hebrew "Coheleth," a word which signifies one who speaks in publick; and which indeed is properly translated by the Greek word Ecclesiastes, or the Preacher. It is unquestionably the production of Solomon, who for the great excellency of his instructions is emphatically styled, "the Preacher:" for the writer of it styles himself, "the son of David, king of Jerusalem," chap. i. 1; he describes too his wisdom, his riches, his writings, and his works, in a manner which is applicable only to Solomon; and by all tradition, Jewish and Christian, the book is attributed to him. It is said by the Jews to have been written by him, upon his awakening to repentance, after he had been seduced, in the decline of life, to idolatry and sin; and, if this be true, it affords valuable proofs of the sincerity with which he regretted his departure from righteousness.

The main scope and tendency of the Book have been variously represented by different writers. It may be considered as a kind of inquiry into the chief good; an inquiry conducted on sound principles, and terminating in a conclusion which all on mature reflexion will approve. The great object of Solomon appears to have been, from a comprehensive consideration of the circumstances of human life, to demonstrate the vanity of all secular pursuits. He endeavours to illustrate, by a just estimate, the insufficiency of earthly enjoyment; not with design to excite in us a disgust at life, but to influence us to prepare for that state where there is no vanity. With this view, the Preacher affirms, that man's labour, as far as it has respect only to present objects, is vain and unprofitable; that however prosperous and flattering circumstances may appear, yet, as he could from experience assert, neither knowledge, nor pleasure, nor magnificence, nor greatness, nor uncontrolled indulgence, can satisfy the desires of man; that the solicitude with which some men toil and heap up possessions for descendants often unworthy, is especial vexation; that it is better far to derive those enjoyments from the gifts of Providence which they were designed to furnish, by being rendered subservient to good actions. Solomon at chap. iii. 16. proceeds to observe, that in this life iniquity usurps the place of righteousness; that man appears in some respects to have "no preeminence above the beast" that perishes; and that the consideration of these circumstances may at first sight lead to wrong conclusions concerning the value of life; but that God should not be hastily arraigned, for that "He that is higher than the highest regardeth:" that even here, those who "pervert judgment" are not satisfied by abundance, but that "the sleep of a labouring man is sweet," chap. iii.—vi.: that though the hearts of men be encouraged in evil by the delay of God's sentence, and though the days of the sinner may be prolonged on earth, yet, finally, it shall be well only with them who fear God, chap. viii. 11—13. Solomon then sums up his exhortations to good deeds, and to a remembrance of the Creator in the days of youth, "or ever the silver cord (of life) be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken," chap. xii. 6, 7. when "the dust shall return to the earth, and the spirit unto God who gave it." And the inspired teacher bids us "hear the conclusion of the whole matter," which is, to "fear God, and keep His commandments; for this is the whole duty of man." Dr. Gray.

It has been objected against the Book of Ecclesiastes, that some passages in it savour of irreligion, others of immorality. But these are, in truth, either innocent, when rightly interpreted; or else express, not the wise king's sentiments, but the false opinions of others, in whose name he speaks, in order to confute them; or, however, are not his deliberate sentiments, but such hasty wrong notions as, during the course of his inquiry after happiness, rose up successively in his mind, and were on mature consideration rejected by him, in order to fix at last on the true basis, "the conclusion of the whole matter; to fear God and keep his commandments." Abp. Secker.

The doctrine of a future retribution forms the great basis, and the leading truth, of this Book. In it, the Royal Preacher expatiates on the transitory condition of mankind, if considered as confined to the present state of existence; the vanity and vexation of spirit attending all present human enjoyment, which his own experience had so abundantly proved; the apparent inequality of Providence, (except under the Jewish dispensation,) by which there appears one event to the righteous and to the wicked. But in all the difficulties and perplexities, all that vanity and vexation of spirit, which this partial view of human nature implies, the Royal Preacher brings forward the prospect of a future life and just retribution, as the solution and the remedy, the consolation and the cure. See chap. iii. 17. viii. 11. xi. 9. xii. 14. Dr. Graves.

The style of this Book is different from that of others; the diction is for the most part plain, but particularly obscure; often vague and prosaick; nor is there much of poetick character in the composition and structure of it, which perhaps may be properly attributed to the nature of the argument. The Jews are unwilling to have it reckoned among the poetical books; and if their authority availed much in matters of this kind, we might perhaps in this particular be disposed to agree with their opinion. Bp. Lowth.

The Book may be divided into two general parts; the first, comprising the six first chapters, in which Solomon shews that all things relating to this world only are vain and perishing, and therefore can afford no true, or solid, or lasting satisfaction or happiness; the second, comprising the six last chapters, in which he shews that piety is the only means, by which we can attain true and lasting happiness. Dr. Wells.

I cannot but exhort all men to study this Book diligently, and with great intention of mind; both for the author's sake and for the matter of it. For he handles his subject in such a manner as first to draw us from the desire and love of earthly things, and from the perverse use of them; and then to lead us to the true and lawful use of them; without either offence to God or injury to ourselves. And he teaches us how we may, without an excessive solicitude and anxiety about events, enjoy all things in the fear of God, with tranquillity and satisfaction of mind at present; and at last, by the same fear of God and observance of His commandments, arrive at a never-ending felicity. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. I. ver. 1. The words of the Preacher,] See the Introduction.

—— king of Jerusalem.] The Greek renders, King of Israel in Jerusalem.

2. Vanity &c.] In the eleven first verses, Solomon lays the foundation of his following discourses, and makes his way to the proof of what he intends, that nothing here can make us permanently happy, by shewing how empty all things are, how short a time man has to possess them; and that, while this time lasts, he can only enjoy the same empty things over and over again, till he be cloyed with them. Bp. Patrick.

In this expression that "all is vanity," the wise man principally refers to the labours of mankind, about the things of the present world; and must be understood, not as absolutely condemning the things themselves, or our pursuits about them, but only as the one may be in some cases unsuitable, and the other irregular or excessive. Dr. J. Balguy.

4. —— but the earth abideth for ever.] That is, constantly, notwithstanding these fluctuations. Script. illust.

5. The sun also ariseth, &c.] The sun in a settled course observes its times of rising and setting, whereas man, when he goes down to the earth, cannot, like the sun, return again. The author is representing, in this and the two next verses, by four comparisons, with the earth, the sun, the wind, and the sea, man to be more subject to vanity than other things. Bp. Patrick.

8. All things are full of labour;] He now proceeds to consider more particularly what he said in general words, (ver. 3.) of man's vain endeavour to satisfy himself in worldly designs and contrivances, in which he is tired, and comes to no end of his desires; and how indeed should he, when his whole business here is only to enjoy the same things over and over again, as all men have done before us, and will do after us? ver. 9, 10, 11. Bp. Patrick.

9. —— there is no new thing under the sun.] This expression of the Preacher is only to be understood as a general inference from what he had said, namely, that there is nothing among the appearances of nature which happens now otherwise than it has done for some generations before; and, in the moral world, men being subject to the same passions and affections as heretofore, it is no wonder the same causes should operate in the production of the same effects. Dr. Durell.

15. That which is crooked &c.] The shortness of human wit, however improved, is here represented by two things; first, that it cannot remove what is inconvenient; secondly, that it cannot supply what is deficient, in any condition of life. Bp. Patrick.

17. —— to know madness and folly:] Referring perhaps to all the idle speculations in which men of parts and wit are apt to employ themselves. Bp. Patrick.

18. For in much wisdom &c.] Meaning that, though knowledge is the most excellent of earthly goods, yet the possession of it is insufficient for our happiness, and is often attended with trouble and vexation. Bp. Patrick.

Before CHRIST about 977.

I SAID in mine heart, Go to now, I will prove thee with mirth, therefore enjoy pleasure: and, behold, this also is vanity.

2 I said of laughter, It is mad: and of mirth, What doeth it?

[a] Ch. 1. 17. † Heb. to draw my flesh with wine.

3 [a] I sought in mine heart † to give myself unto wine, yet acquainting mine heart with wisdom; and to lay hold on folly, till I might see what was that good for the sons of men, which they should do under the heaven † all the days of their life.

† Heb. the number of the days of their life.

4 I made me great works; I builded me houses; I planted me vineyards:

5 I made me gardens and orchards, and I planted trees in them of all kind of fruits:

6 I made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees:

† Heb. sons of my house.

7 I got me servants and maidens, and had † servants born in my house; also I had great possessions of great and small cattle above all that were in Jerusalem before me:

[b] 1 Kings 9. 28. & 10. 14.

8 [b] I gathered me also silver and gold, and the peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces: I got me men singers and women singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as † musical instruments, and that of all sorts.

9 So I was great, and increased more than all that were before me in Jerusalem: also my wisdom remained with me.

10 And whatsoever mine eyes desired I kept not from them, I withheld not my heart from any joy; for my heart rejoiced in all my labour: and this was my portion of all my labour.

11 Then I looked on all the works that my hands had wrought, and on the labour that I had laboured to do: and, behold, all was [c] vanity and vexation of spirit, and there was no profit under the sun.

Before CHRIST about 977.

[c] Chap. 1. 3.

12 ¶ And I turned myself to behold wisdom, [d] and madness, and folly: for what can the man do that cometh after the king? ‖ even that which hath been already done.

[d] Chap. 1. 17. 25.

‖ Or, in those things which have been already done.

13 Then I saw † that wisdom excelleth folly, as far as light excelleth darkness.

† Heb. that there is an excellency in wisdom more than in folly, &c.

14 [e] The wise man's eyes are in his head; but the fool walketh in darkness: and I myself perceived also that one event happeneth to them all.

[e] Prov. 17. 24. ch. 8. 1.

15 Then said I in my heart, As it happeneth to the fool, so it † happeneth even to me; and why was I then more wise? Then I said in my heart, that this also is vanity.

† Heb. happeneth to me, even to me.

16 For there is no remembrance of the wise more than of the fool for ever; seeing that which now is in the days to come shall all be forgotten. And how dieth the wise man? as the fool.

17 Therefore I hated life; because the work that is wrought under the sun is grievous unto me: for all is vanity and vexation of spirit.

18 ¶ Yea, I hated all my labour which I had † taken under the sun: because [f] I should leave it unto the man that shall be after me.

† Heb. laboured. [f] Psal. 49. 10.

19 And who knoweth whether he shall be a wise man or a fool? yet shall he have rule over all my labour wherein I have laboured, and wherein I have shewed myself wise under the sun. This is also vanity.

20 Therefore I went about to cause my

Chap. II. ver. 2. I said of laughter,] Meaning excessive laughter, dissolute and frantick merriment. Bp. Patrick.

3. — and to lay hold on folly, &c.] That is, not altogether to follow the study of wisdom, nor yet altogether to pursue pleasure, but to mix them together; "till I might see," &c. that is, till I might sufficiently try whether herein lay that so much desired good, which men pursue here all their lives. Dr. Wells.

6. — the wood that bringeth forth trees:] That is, the nurseries of young trees. Desvoeux.

7. I got me servants and maidens,] The servants among the Hebrews were chiefly slaves, either bought or taken in war. Dr. Hodgson.

8. — the peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces:] That is, I procured whatever was choice and precious in other kingdoms, and especially in those countries which were subject to me. Dr. Wells.

12. — for what can the man do that cometh after the king?] For who is there that can give a better account than I the king, who have had such advantages, beyond any private man, to know the history of former times, as well as my own; so that, I am confident, they who come after can pass no better judgment on things than I do now. Bp. Patrick.

13. — as far as light excelleth darkness.] Meaning, that religion and virtue are as much more excellent and profitable to men than wickedness, as it is possible for one thing to be preferable to another. Dr. S. Clarke.

14. The wise man's eyes &c.] A wise man, looking around him and before him, is cautious and well aware of danger, into which the fool, blinded with the sottish love of pleasure, falls rashly and inconsiderately. Yet, with all his circumspection, he is not able to avoid many calamities which are common to all mankind. Bp. Patrick.

17. Therefore I hated life; &c.] I became quite out of love with this life, because the toil attending it is grievous; and yet, after all, it affords no solid or lasting satisfaction. Dr. Wells.

18. — because I should leave it unto the man that shall be after me.] Solomon seems here to speak with a melancholy reflexion on his own son Rehoboam. "Who knoweth," he adds, "whether he shall be a wise man, or a fool?" He appears to speak doubtfully, but he had a very shrewd guess, what kind of man his son would make, for he speaks more despondingly in the words which follow; and he feelingly expresses how much the very fear and apprehension of this embittered the fruit of all his labour. Abp. Tillotson.

20. Therefore I went about &c.] Therefore I bent my thoughts to do away all hope of any good issue to all my earthly labours and endeavours. Bp. Hall.

23 For all his days are [b] sorrows, and his travail grief; yea, his heart taketh not rest in the night. This is also vanity.

Chap. 8. 12. 1. 22. & 5. 18. & 8. 15.

24 ¶ [d] There is nothing better for a man, than that he should eat and drink, and that he ‖ should make his soul enjoy good in his labour. This also I saw, that it was from the hand of God.

‖ Or, delight his soul.

25 For who can eat, or who else can hasten hereunto, more than I?

26 For God giveth to a man that is good † in his sight wisdom, and knowledge, and joy: but to the sinner he giveth travail, to gather and to heap up, that [e] he may give to him that is good before God. This also is vanity and vexation of spirit.

[e] Job 27. 17.

CHAP. III.

1 By the necessary change of times, vanity is added to human travail. 11 There is an excellency in God's works. 16 But as for man, God shall judge his works there, and here he shall be like a beast.

TO every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven:

† Heb. to bear.

2 A time † to be born, and a time to die; a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted;

3 A time to kill, and a time to heal; a time to break down, and a time to build up;

Before CHRIST about 977.

4 A time to weep, and a time to laugh; a time to mourn, and a time to dance;

5 A time to cast away stones, and a time to gather stones together; a time to embrace, and a time † to refrain from embracing;

† Heb. to be far from.

6 A time to ‖ get, and a time to lose; a time to keep, and a time to cast away;

‖ Or, seek.

7 A time to rend, and a time to sew; a time to keep silence, and a time to speak;

8 A time to love, and a time to hate; a time of war, and a time of peace.

9 [a] What profit hath he that worketh in that wherein he laboureth?

[a] Chap. 1. 3.

10 I have seen the travail, which God hath given to the sons of men to be exercised in it.

11 He hath made every thing beautiful in his time: also he hath set the world in their heart, so that no man can find out the work that God maketh from the beginning to the end.

12 I know that there is no good in them, but for a man to rejoice, and to do good in his life.

13 And also that every man should eat and drink, and enjoy the good of all his labour, it is the gift of God.

14 I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him.

15 [b] That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth † that which is past.

[b] Chap. 1. 9. † Heb. that which is driven away.

24. There is nothing better for a man, &c.] He here teaches, that all the benefit of mere human labour is the moderate or sober enjoyment of what we have acquired by it. Dr. Wells. For the truth of which, he says in the next verse, you may rely on my experience. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. III. ver. 1. To every thing there is a season, &c.] Solomon proceeds to shew that the vicissitude of the seasons, and of all earthly things, teaches us that we should enjoy what we get, as well as labour to get it; and that it also adds to the vanity of all things connected with human life. Dr. Wells.

3. A time to kill,] A time, whether in a just war, or in a peaceable execution of justice, in which it is warrantable to kill. Bp. Hall.

5. A time to cast away stones, &c.] This may signify, "A time to cast away stones with a sling, and a time to collect them again in a bag;" or, "a time to cast stones on a field to render it barren, and a time to collect stones out of a field to render it fertile;" or, "a time to cast away stones improper for building, and to collect proper ones." Calmet.

7. A time to rend, and a time to sew;] The "rending" here mentioned undoubtedly refers to the oriental mode of expressing sorrow, by rending the clothes. The "sewing" is designed as the opposite to it, and may mean the making up of new garments; for in the East it is thought essentially necessary for the due solemnization of a time of rejoicing, to put on new clothes. Harmer.

9. What profit hath he &c.] What stability or lasting profit can a man expect from that which he does, since there is such a changeable vicissitude in all actions and events? Bp. Hall.

11. — he hath set the world in their heart,] Solomon here declares not obscurely, that God has framed the mind of man as a mirrour capable of the image of the whole world, not only delighted in beholding the variety of things and the changes of times, but ambitious to find out and discover the immovable and settled laws and decrees of nature. And, though he intimates that this whole economy of nature (which he calls "the work that God maketh from the beginning to the end") cannot be found out by man, it does not derogate from the power and capacity of his mind, but is to be imputed to the impediments of human learning, &c. Lord Bacon.

12. — but for a man to rejoice, and to do good] So true it is that the pleasure of doing good remains after a thing is done, the thoughts of it lie easy in our minds, and the reflexion upon it afterwards ministers to us, ever after, joy and delight. In this passage Solomon, after all his experience of worldly pleasures, pitches at last upon this as the greatest happiness of human life, and the only good use which is to be made of a prosperous fortune. Abp. Tillotson.

Before CHRIST about 977.

16 ¶ And moreover I saw under the sun the place of judgment, that wickedness was there; and the place of righteousness, that iniquity was there.

[c] Ver. 1.

18 I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, ‖ that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts.

‖ Or, that they might clear God, and see, &c.

19 [d] For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast: for all is vanity.

Before CHRIST about 977.

9 ¶ Two are better than one; because they have a good reward for their labour.

19. For that which befalleth &c.] Among the passages of this book with which, for want of discerning the true design and scope of it, vain and wicked persons would encourage themselves in their follies and impiety, is this, from ver. 19. to 21, "that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts," &c. as if the end of man and beasts were the same, and therefore men might lead sensual lives, as beasts do, without concern for the future; whereas Solomon, speaking of "the estate of the sons of men," (ver. 18,) not in the next world but in this, pursues his main purpose, in shewing the vanity of earthly things and designs, that, whatever content or satisfaction men may propose to themselves in this world, all is but vanity, they are in many respects like beasts, they draw in the same air, their breath will fail them, they will die and be turned to dust as well as the beasts. Yea, so vain is man, and so like the beasts as to outward appearance, that, although when he dieth "his spirit shall return unto God," and he shall be judged in order to be rewarded suitably to his deeds, (ver. 17. and chap. xii. 7, 14.) yet no one knoweth "the spirit of man that goeth upward," &c. that is, no one can experimentally, or by sense and reasoning, discern a man's soul that ascends or goes upwards, any more than that of the beast which descends or goes downwards: so great is man's ignorance of such matters. This thought should wean us from too much care for the future, and make us thank God for our portion in this world, disposing us to do good with it to others, and to enjoy it without solicitude. Collyer.

21. Who knoweth the spirit of man &c.] The sense may be, How few men live as if they knew that the soul of man is immortal, and that, when the body dies, it goeth upward to God to be judged by Him; and that the spirit of the beast dying with the body, and going downward to the earth, there utterly perishes. Dr. Wells.

22. — that a man should rejoice in his own works;] That he should make a cheerful use of God's good blessings, as the only fruit and alleviation which the earth will afford of all his painful labours here. Bp. Hall.

Chap. IV. ver. 1. So I returned,] He proceeds to consider the power which many times falls into the hands of unjust and cruel men, and to represent the miserable estate of those that are subject to them, as a further argument of the vanity and vexation to which all men are liable in this troublesome world; and, having noted some of the principal mischiefs of this sort, he concludes this chapter with some animadversions on the condition of the greatest and best of princes, who are not so happy as the world is apt to think them. Bp. Patrick.

2. Wherefore I praised the dead &c.] Considering the various oppressions which were so frequent in the world, Solomon considered those persons happier who were out of it, than those who still lived in it. Abp. Tillotson.

5. — eateth his own flesh.] Consumes his own substance.

8. There is one alone, &c.] In opposition to the character of the idler, he here introduces (ver. 8—12.) the character of an indefatigable covetous man, who, having nobody with whom to share his fortune, cannot resolve either to leave off heaping up riches, or quietly to enjoy what he has already acquired. Dewsbury.

9. — because they have a good reward for their labour.] How much wiser, Solomon says, is he who not only enjoys what he has himself, but takes others into his society for purposes of common counsel and mutual assistance, and of mutual partici-

1 Vanities in divine service, 8 in murmuring against oppression, 9 and in riches. 18 Joy in riches is the gift of God.

3 For a dream cometh through the multitude of business; and a fool's voice is known by multitude of words.

7 For in the multitude of dreams and many words there are also divers vanities: but fear thou God.

pation in the good things which God has given him! Bp. Patrick. "Two are better than one;" implying generally, that society is productive of much comfort and benefit. Bp. Hall.

13 Better is a poor and a wise child &c.] He proceeds to shew, that still it is not society alone which will make men happy, without wisdom or virtue. For who are better attended or guarded than kings? and yet the poorest man that is, if he be wise and good, is far happier than the wealthiest prince on earth who foolishly abuses his power. Bp. Patrick.

14. For out of prison &c.] For it has been known that he who was poor and abject as the vilest slave in a prison has come to reign by singular prudence, while he that is born of royal ancestors is sometimes through his folly deserted by his subjects, loses his kingdom, and "becometh poor." By the expression "out of prison," it is not improbable that Solomon has here respect to the case of Joseph in Egypt. Dr. Wells.

15. I considered all the living &c.] If what is mentioned at ver. 13, 14. happen not to a king, I have seen, he adds, another great unhappiness which more usually befalls kings; namely, their being left with only the bare title of royalty, while the hearts and affections of the kingdom incline to "the second son," that is, to the child who was second to him, or heir of the kingdom. Dr. Wells.

16. There is no end of all the people,] There will be no end of this disposition in all mankind, so deeply is it rooted in them; for, as it has always been the disposition "of all that have been before them" to be weary of what they have long enjoyed, and pleased with novelty, and therefore to slight an old king and court his successor, so "they that come after shall not rejoice in him;" that is, shall in like manner slight the present heir when he comes to be old, and pay court to his son or heir, as they now do to him. Dr. Wells.

Chap. V. ver. 1. Keep thy foot when thou goest &c.] Beware how thou treadest, be always on thy guard, in the house of God. Let thy carriage be adjusted to the ideas of His presence whose courts thou enterest: let thy whole deportment there be such as best suits the sacredness of the place, and the majesty of Him to whom it is dedicated. Archdeacon Sharp.

—— and be more ready to hear, &c.] The meaning is, Be more ready to hear practically, that is, to obey the commandments of God: a similar expression to that of 1 Sam. xv. 22, "To obey is better than sacrifice." Have a care rather to approach the Divine Majesty with an offering of an obedient disposition, than with the bare rites of outward service. Jos. Mede.

—— to give the sacrifice of fools:] That is, barely to offer outward sacrifice, without giving due care to lead also a holy life. Dr. Wells.

2. Be not rash with thy mouth,] That is, when thou art going to pray, recollect thyself, consider that thy Creator is great, and wise, and good above all, and thou a poor dependant mortal being; weigh thy expressions, think before thou speakest, and take heed to use few words, and to ask for nothing improper. Dr. Jortin.

—— for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth:] God is in heaven, a great, infinite, eternal, all-glorious, incomprehensible Being; heaven is His throne, and earth His footstool: thou art a poor silly worm, a creeping, crawling, sinful dust and ashes: have therefore a care what thou sayest unto Him, and fear to speak any thing amiss before Him. Bp. Beveridge.

3. For a dream cometh &c.] For, as in a multitude of business, there will be troublesome and confused dreams, so in a multitude of words there will be futility and errour. Bp. Hall.

9 ¶ Moreover the profit of the earth is for all: the king himself is served by the field.

10 He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver; nor he that loveth abundance with increase: this is also vanity.

11 When goods increase, they are increased that eat them: and what good is there to the owners thereof, saving the beholding of them with their eyes?

12 The sleep of a labouring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much: but the abundance of the rich will not suffer him to sleep.

13 There is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely, riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt.

14 But those riches perish by evil travail: and he begetteth a son, and there is nothing in his hand.

15 [e] As he came forth of his mother's womb, naked shall he return to go as he came, and shall take nothing of his labour, which he may carry away in his hand.

16 And this also is a sore evil, that in all points as he came, so shall he go: and [f] what profit hath he that hath laboured for the wind?

17 All his days also he eateth in darkness, and he hath much sorrow and wrath with his sickness.

18 ¶ Behold that which I have seen: [g] † it is good and comely for one to eat and to drink, and to enjoy the good of all his labour that he taketh under the sun † all the days of his life, which God giveth him: for it is his portion.

19 Every man also to whom God hath given riches and wealth, and hath given him power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, and to rejoice in his labour; this is the gift of God.

20 ‖ For he shall not much remember the days of his life; because God answereth him in the joy of his heart.

CHAP. VI.

1 The vanity of riches without use. 3 Of children, 6 and old age without riches. 9 The vanity of sight and wandering desires. 11 The conclusion of vanities.

THERE is an evil which I have seen under the sun, and it is common among men:

2 A man to whom God hath given riches, wealth, and honour, so that he wanteth nothing for his soul of all that he desireth, yet God giveth him not power to eat thereof, but a stranger eateth it: this is vanity, and it is an evil disease.

3 ¶ If a man beget an hundred children, and live many years, so that the days of his years be many, and his soul be not filled with good, and also that he have no burial; I say, that an untimely birth is better than he.

† Heb. there is a good which is comely, &c.

11. — they are increased that eat them:] He implies, that it is but a small portion of his wealth that a rich man can enjoy personally; since, as his riches increase, he must maintain a greater family and retinue, who have a greater share than himself in the daily provision that is made by his expenses. Bp. Patrick.

14. But those riches perish &c.] Besides, these riches often perish by some disaster, so that the son, whom he thought to have left possessed of abundance of wealth, hath nothing at all left to support him. Bp. Patrick.

—— there is nothing in his hand.] He is a beggar, hath nothing in his possession. Jos. Medc.

17. All his days also he eateth in darkness,] He deprives himself of all comfort, through the too eager pursuit of wealth, and pinches his body, and tortures his mind with many vexations and discontentments. Bp. Hall.

18. — it is good and comely — to eat and to drink,] When Solomon utters this expression, it is sufficiently obvious his meaning cannot be that we should give way to sensuality and pleasures. We cannot ascribe such a thought to him, if we consider what he has just said, of the reverence with which we ought to present ourselves before God, of the judgments which God will pass on those who judge others, and of the joy which He sheds abroad in the hearts of good men. His meaning is only this, that, when God gives us wealth, we ought to be content with it, to receive it and possess it as His gracious gift, and use it with sobriety and gratitude. Osterwald.

20. For he shall not much remember &c.] For such an one will not think his life here tedious or irksome, because God gives him his very heart's desire, in enjoying comfortably the fruits of his honest labours. Dr. Wells. Otherwise it may be rendered, "He will not be anxious about the duration of his life, since God blesseth him with cheerfulness of heart." Dr. Hodgson.

Chap. VI. ver. 2. — God giveth him not power to eat thereof,] God, in His just judgment, permits him to be so far overruled by his covetous temper, that he has not power or heart to eat thereof for fear he should come to want; and so he leaves his wealth, and perhaps a stranger becomes master of it, and "eateth it," or lives plentifully upon it. Dr. Wells.

3. — and his soul be not filled with good,] And he will not allow himself what is fitting while he lives. Dr. Wells.

—— also that he have no burial,] In opposition to the blessings of a numerous progeny and long life, are placed want of contentment in this life, and want of burial after death, which, Solomon says, are such abatements of happiness, that abortion would have been preferable to life under such circumstances. Dr. Durell.

4. For he cometh in with vanity, &c.] For the stillborn child comes into the world without noise, and to no use, and passes away obscurely without notice; and, as he lived not to have a name, so the memory of him vanishes into darkness and oblivion: still (ver. 5.) "this hath more rest than the other;" that is, he is freed by so early a death from those vexations which an old covetous man draws on himself. Bp. Hall.

[d] Prov. 14. 17. & 16. 32.

7. All the labour of man &c.] All the labour of man that is necessary to be taken is only for his mouth, or what is required to sustain him; and yet the appetite of the covetous is never satisfied. Dr. Wells.

8. — knoweth to walk before the living?] Knoweth to behave himself among men suitably to his condition, and to be contented with it. Dr. Wells.

9. Better is the sight of the eyes &c.] The meaning is, It is better to make a wise use of what lies before us, and to enjoy quietly and contentedly what we have, than to let our desires be continually running out after fresh objects, and shifting from point to point; such restless pursuits being not only vain and unprofitable, but creating abundance of needless trouble and perplexity. Dr. J. Balguy.

10. That which hath been &c.] The sense seems to be, What if a man be renowned? It is known that he is but man, made out of dust, and therefore subject to much evil which he cannot overcome. Bp. Patrick.

12. — all the days of his vain life &c.] The reflexions which Solomon here makes are very proper to moderate the heat of men's pursuit after earthly goods. The vanity of their labours appears not only in their not knowing how to enjoy the good things which they so eagerly pursue, but chiefly in this, that they often deprive themselves of the greatest blessing of life, which is ease and a contented mind, and cannot secure themselves any thing for the future. The Gospel gives us clearer directions on this head, when we are told that "godliness with contentment is great gain," 1 Tim. vi. 6. Ostervald.

Chap. VII. Having discoursed, in the foregoing part of the book, of the courses which men usually take to make themselves happy; the Preacher now seems to proceed to prescribe the best remedies that can be found against that vanity to which we are subject, by setting down many wise precepts for our direction, comfort, and support in a troublesome world. Of this nature are the doctrines which begin this chapter, quite opposite to the common opinions of the world; but they are the maxims of true wisdom and policy, which must be learnt in order to the settlement of our minds in peace and tranquillity, notwithstanding the vanity that is in all things. Bp. Patrick.

Ver. 1. — and the day of death than the day of one's birth.] The day of a good and faithful man's death is better than the day of his birth; for his death puts an end to those miseries which his birth begins, and opens that more perfect happiness, of which the present life is not capable. Bp. Hall.

As death to a good man is more advantageous than life, so is a wise man the contemplation of the former is more desirable than all the enjoyments of the latter. Bp. Atterbury.

2. It is better to go &c.] When the wise man bids us go to the house of mourning, when he tells us that sorrow is better than laughter, he is not to be understood as prohibiting all mirth, as requiring us to wear a perpetual cloud on our brow, and to sequester ourselves from every cheerful entertainment of social life. His true meaning is, that there is a certain temper and state of mind which is of far greater consequence to real happiness, than the habitual indulgence of giddy and thoughtless mirth; that, for the attainment and cultivation of this temper, frequent returns of grave reflexion are necessary; that, upon this account, it is profitable to give admission to those views of human distress, which tend to awaken such reflexions in the mind; and that thus, from the vicissitudes of sorrow which we either experience in our own lot, or sympathize with in the lot of others, much wisdom and improvement may be derived. Dr. Blair.

6. — as the crackling of thorns under a pot,] Like a blast, noisy but soon spent. In the East they commonly use the dung of animals for fuel, which burns very slow: the burning of thorns and furze affords a striking contrast to this, and it is probably this contrast which gives energy to the comparison. Harmer.

7. — a gift destroyeth the heart.] A bribe destroys, or tends to corrupt the heart. Dr. Wells.

8. Better is the end of a thing] Better is it, toward the right conduct of life, to consider what will be the end of a thing, than what is the beginning of it; for what promises fair at first may prove ill, and what seems at first a disadvantage, may prove very advantageous. Dr. Wells.

10. Say not thou, What is the cause &c.] Be not discontented and complaining at the present condition of things, so as to murmur at the providence of God; for this would be foolish and unjust: rather, in a humble thankfulness and submission, make use of the present. Bp. Hall.

13. Consider the work of God: &c.] Complain not of times and events; but consider well the wise, just, and powerful proceedings of God: for when He has thought good, for the punishment of men's sins, to give them up to disorder, it is not in the power of human means to rectify them. Bp. Hall.

14. In the day of prosperity &c.] In the day of prosperity rejoice: yet have an eye towards the day of adversity; for the Lord hath placed the one near unto the other, "that man should find nothing after him," that is, that he should be uncertain what next may befall him. Dr. Hodgson.

15. — there is a just man that perisheth.] There is an innocent and just man that miscarries, notwithstanding his righteousness, through the cruelty and injustice of others. Bp. Hall.

16. Be not righteous over much; &c.] Perhaps the meaning may be, Do not exercise justice with too much rigour. Dr. Waterland. These expressions must by no means be understood as a caution against being too wise or too good, since no man can possibly be wise or good enough, or can use sufficient endeavours to become so. But Solomon speaks these words against those, who, when insisting on their own right, or passing judgment on others, proceed with the utmost rigour and severity, not observing the rules of moderation and equity, and are so presumptuous as busily to intermeddle with what does not concern them. Osterwald.

17. Be not over much wicked.] Let not impunity tempt any man to grow enormously wicked, and foolish in following the lewdest opinions; for this may awaken publick justice, or the Divine vengeance, so as to cut him off before he come to the natural term of life. Bp. Patrick.

18. — he that feareth God shall come forth of them all.] The Greek translators render it, "To him that feareth God, all things shall succeed." Dr. Wall.

26. — the woman, whose heart is snares and nets,] The following method of ensnaring travellers, sometimes practised by robbers in Eastern countries, affords a lively comment on these words of Solomon. They send out a handsome woman upon the road, with her hair dishevelled, and in tears, who seems to be in the deepest distress, complaining of some misfortune which she pretends had befallen her. She easily draws the traveller into conversation with her, and engages him to assist her; but he has no sooner taken her up on horseback behind him, than she throws a snare about his neck, and strangles him; or, at least, stuns him, till the robbers, who are lying in wait, come running to her aid, and complete what she has begun. Thevenot.

28. — but a woman among all those &c.] That which Solomon here says should be well understood. As the Scriptures often speak of women illustrious for their virtues, and Solomon himself praises such, (Prov. xii. 4. xviii. 22. xxxi. 10.) he could not mean that a virtuous woman was no where to be found. There is, in this respect, no difference between the two sexes. But Solomon's meaning is, that, having searched out the reason of all the wickedness that passes in the world, ver. 25, he had found that there was nothing more dangerous and wicked than a disorderly woman, such as he describes at ver. 26, whose malice and artifice are scarcely to be conceived; nor can they, who have suffered themselves to be surprised by her, without great difficulty escape her snares. Solomon therefore does not here speak of women in general, but of such as he had been describing. One reason, no

Chap. VIII. ver. 1. Who is as the wise man? &c.] What creature under heaven is so excellent as a wise man? He only can find out the secrets of nature and of art: his wisdom makes him gracious, and respected of all men; it alters and improves his disposition and his carriage, and from rude and harsh makes him gentle and ingenuous. Bp. Hall.

—— maketh his face to shine,] Gives him fair reputation and honour.

3. Be not hasty &c.] Let not thy passion transport thee to shew the least disrespect to him; if thou hast offended him, let thy care be, not to persist obstinately in the error, but to humble thyself, and beg his pardon; for his power is so great, that it will one time or other lay hold on thee and punish thee. Bp. Patrick.

5. —— a wise man's heart &c.] The heart of the wise man discerneth both the time when every thing should be done, and the best method of doing it. Bp. Hall.

6. Because to every purpose] Because God has so ordered things, that to every purpose there is a proper time, and judgment or proper manner of doing what is intended, and therefore the misery of man is often great upon him, because he does not duly observe the said time and manner. Dr. Wells.

8. There is no man that hath power &c.] No man hath power to keep his soul when God calls for it, neither hath he power to protract the day of death; there is no possibility of avoiding that last conflict; the bold and presumptuous wickedness of men cannot deliver them from it. Bp. Hall.

10. —— who had come and gone from the place of the holy,] Who had been honoured as gods while they were living, because they were God's ministers, and sat in the judgment seat, in that very place where He Himself is present. Bp. Patrick.

11. Because sentence against an evil work &c.] Because the punishment does not immediately follow the offence.

—— therefore the heart — is fully set in them] In the original, "their heart has filled them," they are presumptuous, to do evil. Dr. S. Clarke.

15. Then I commended mirth, &c.] Then I resolved that it is good for man to be cheerful in his calling, and in the good and holy use of God's blessings. Bp. Hall. We must well remember, that when he in this manner "commends mirth," he speaks of reasonable pleasures, which proceed from a moderate and lawful use of the good things which God has given us, which have nothing in them irregular and contrary to piety. Osterwald.

[a] Mal. 3. 15. Psal. 73. 3, 12, 13.

2 [a] All things come alike to all: there is one event to the righteous, and to the wicked; to the good and to the clean, and to the unclean; to him that sacrificeth, and to him that sacrificeth not: as is the good, so is the sinner; and he that sweareth, as he that feareth an oath.

3 This is an evil among all things that are done under the sun, that there is one event unto all: yea, also the heart of the sons of men is full of evil, and madness is in their heart while they live, and after that they go to the dead. Before CHRIST about 977.

6 Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun.

7 ¶ Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart; for God now accepteth thy works.

17. — that a man cannot find out &c.] For there is little or nothing that any man can know of the secrets of God's counsels, or of any of His works; which are inscrutable to us, whatever pains we take: nay, though the wisest man in the world make it his constant business, he will still be forced to confess his ignorance; and the height of his knowledge will be to know, that God's ways are past finding out. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. IX. ver. 1. — no man knoweth either love or hatred] No man knows or can know the love or hatred of God towards particular individuals, "by all that is before them;" that is, by all that befalls them visibly. Dr. Wells.

2. All things come alike to all:] There is no certain and constant distinction made between one man and another, in the distribution of things in this world; but they all fare alike in publick calamities especially. Bp. Patrick.

—— and he that sweareth,] The character of "him that sweareth" is here mentioned as blameable; but Solomon does not mean to disapprove the taking of an oath on any occasion whatever; but only to commend the fearing or avoiding of any oath, whenever it can be avoided, consistently with other obligations. Abp. Secker.

3. This is an evil &c.] There is this evil in all which is done under the sun, that "there is one event" unto all men; whence arise errours in their notions concerning the living, and with respect to the dead hereafter. Dr. Hodgson.

4. For to him that is joined &c.] If we compare the state of the living and the dead, with respect to the present world, that of the living is the best; for, while we here live, we may still be in hope, either of amending or of receiving further graces and blessings, both of which are cut off from the dead: and, according to a common proverb, the most vile and contemptible animal, as a dog, that is alive, is better than the most generous of all beasts, the lion, when dead. Bp. Hall.

5. — but the dead know not any thing,] When men are gone from this world, they become perfect strangers to all things here, and can no longer enjoy any benefit of their labour, the fruit of which falls into the hands of other men, who think not what is become of them. Bp. Patrick.

—— neither have they any more a reward;] It is not meant that there is no reward after death for the righteous in heaven; but that, after death, there will be no enjoyment of any worldly felicity, as he himself explains in the next verse. Collyer.

7. Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy,] Therefore, shaking off all anxious cares and perplexing thoughts about God's providence, excite thyself, by the remembrance of death, to a cheerful enjoyment of those good things present which thou possessest; believing, that if thou hast approved thyself to God in the rest of thy works, it is acceptable to Him that thou shouldest thus rejoice in those gifts which His benevolence has afforded thee. Bp. Patrick. Solomon's design is, that we should improve the advantages of life, and make a wise use of what we have in possession; but we must beware of abusing this notion, and imagining ourselves to be at full liberty to indulge in worldly joys and pleasures, and to say with the ungodly, "Let us eat and drink, for to morrow we die." Osterwald.

8. Let thy garments be always white;] In opposition to the habit of mourners. The meaning is, Live not sordidly and sadly, but entertain thyself at all seasonable times. Bp. Patrick.

10. Whatsoever thy hand &c.] That is, the work that is before thee, which is most proper for thee to propose to thyself, as the great end and design of thy life, the province and charge appointed to thee. "Do it with thy might;" that is, set about it with great care, use all possible diligence and industry for effecting and accomplishing it. He enforces his precept by the consideration that this life is the proper season of activity and industry, of designing and doing those things which tend to our future happiness; and, when this life is ended, there will be no further opportunity of working, and nothing will remain but to receive the recompense of that which we have before done. Abp. Tillotson.

Before CHRIST about 977.

11 ¶ I returned, and saw under the sun, that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favour to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all.

12 For man also knoweth not his time: as the fishes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare; so are the sons of men snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them.

* Proverbs 28. 6.

13 ¶ This wisdom have I seen also under the sun, and it seemed great unto me:

14 There was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a great king against it, and besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it:

15 Now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city; yet no man remembered that same poor man.

* Proverbs 21. 22. ch. 7. 19.

16 Then said I, Wisdom is better than strength: nevertheless the poor man's wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard.

17 The words of wise men are heard in quiet more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools.

18 Wisdom is better than weapons of war: but one sinner destroyeth much good.

11. I returned, and saw under the sun, &c.] I saw and observed that here on earth all things do not fall out according to the probability of second causes, but by the appointments of an overruling Providence: the swiftest does not always win the race, nor the strong prevail in battle, &c. but every one in his time hath a several issue, according to the determination of the Almighty, beyond or contrary to his own hopes. Bp. Hall.

—— neither yet bread to the wise,] Meaning, that the most learned and able men are not always secured against poverty and want. Abp. Tillotson.

—— but time and chance happeneth to them all.] That is, There is a secret providence of God, which sometimes presents men with unexpected opportunities, and interposes accidents which no human wisdom can foresee; which grants success to very improbable means; and defeats the swift, the strong, the learned, the industrious, and those who are best versed in men and business, of their several ends and designs. Abp. Tillotson.

15. — yet no man remembered that same poor man.] This little parable sets forth the depraved and malignant nature of mankind, who in extremities and straits commonly fly to men of wisdom and courage, whom they before slighted; but, as soon as the storm is over, they become unthankful wretches to their preservers. Lord Bacon.

17. The words of wise men &c.] The words of a wise poor man though spoken softly, out of a fearful and lowly kind of bashfulness, are worthy of more respect than the imperious loud clamours of him that ruleth among fools. Bp. Hall.

Chap. X. ver. 1. Dead flies cause &c.] This is a well known fact, especially in hot climates, that dead insects cause syrups, and other such preparations, to ferment and putrefy, which makes it necessary to be careful in preventing flies from coming to them. Schreuckzer.

—— so doth a little folly] In the same manner, in however good reputation a man may be for wisdom and honour, yet some one foolish humour and weak miscarriage of his will mar and stain his reputation. Bp. Holl. A little folly in a very wise man a small sin in an honest man, and a slight indecency of manners in a man of courtly behaviour, often greatly derogate from their fame and reputation. Lord Bacon.

2. A wise man's heart is at his right hand;] That is, ready to be employed with dexterity and effect. Parkhurst. Herein a truly wise man's worth is discovered, that his judgment never fails him in the greatest difficulties, in which he not only resolves right, but takes things by the right handle; whereas a fool mistakes in his aim, and stumbles so much in the easiest business, that he commonly miscarries. Bp. Patrick.

3. Yea also, when he that is a fool &c.] Yea, let a fool but walk by the way, and his very motion and gesture shew what he is, and proclaim his want of sense; much more do his words and actions betray him. Bp. Hall.

4. If the spirit of the ruler &c.] If thy prince be angry with thee, quit not the duty of a subject. Bp. Patrick.

5. — an error which proceedeth from the ruler:] An error which proceeds from princes in the ill choice which they make of those whom they promote; for (ver. 6.) "folly is set in great dignity, and the rich sit in low place;" that is, those who are truly able, both for their parts and their estates, and are well worthy of eminent places, are neglected and disregarded. Bp. Hall.

7. — servants upon horses,] In the East, to ride on a horse is deemed an honourable circumstance, and ideas of stateliness are always attached to it. The Turks at this day, when they ride on horseback, proceed in a very stately manner: it is contrary to their dignity to advance beyond a footpace, and they are attended by a number of servants. Harmer.

8. — whoso breaketh an hedge, a serpent shall bite him.] By this men are warned, that the overthrowing of an established government and settled laws is often fatal to those that attempt it. Other proverbs to the same effect are given at ver. 9. Dr. Wells.

10. — but wisdom is profitable to direct.] Wisdom will still find out how to make it execute its office. Dr. Hodgson. Wisdom does, as it were, whet the edge of the ax, and direct men to do that with ease, which otherwise cannot be achieved without much labour. Bp. Hall.

11. Surely the serpent &c.] Surely the serpent will bite, if it be not hindered by enchantments: and a babbler, or one that secretly traduces his governours, and irritates the people against them, is no better; for he injures thereby his governours as much as the serpent does one whom he bites. Dr. Wells.

12. — the lips of a fool will swallow up himself.] The words of a fool will be the occasion of his own undoing. Bp. Hall.

15. — because he knoweth not how to go to the city.] Because out of simplicity he wanders about over untracked ways, and does not so much as know the beaten road to the city. Bp. Hall.

16. — thy princes eat in the morning!] That is, spend in riot and revelling that portion of their time which ought to be set apart for the administration of justice. Bp. Hall.

18. By much slothfulness the building decayeth;] In like manner a whole kingdom is ruined by the sloth and inattention of those who have the government of it. Dr. Wells.

19. A feast is made &c.] There are proper times for the feasting and mirth of kings, and those who have the care of the government; but then care must be taken that too much money be not spent on such occasions, so as not to leave enough for the publick supplies of the kingdom. Dr. Wells.

Chap. XI. ver. 1. Cast thy bread &c.] Bestow thy beneficence on those from whom there is no probability of a return of kindness; for He that seeth in secret will, when thou hast forgotten it, restore it unto thee with a happy increase. Bp. Hall.

2. Give a portion to seven, &c.] Be not narrow and confined in thine alms, but bestow them liberally on all that have need. Bp. Hall. See the note on Job v. 19.

3. If the clouds be full of rain, &c.] In this verse, Solomon illustrates the duty of charity, and the reason for the timely exercise of it: the former by the clouds, which are a fit emblem of charity, in pouring down general plenty on the earth; the latter by the trees, which can bring forth fruit no longer than they continue joined to the earth by their roots, as man can no more be fruitful in good works, when he has ceased to live. Bp. Patrick.

4. He that observeth the wind shall not sow;] Let not every circumstance of vain fear discourage thee from doing good and distributing; he, that is too curious in observing every wind that blows, will never find an opportunity of sowing. Bp. Hall.

6. In the morning sow thy seed, &c.] That is, take all proper occasions of exercising thy charity, as long as thou livest; for thou knowest not what occasion may suit to do the greatest good to others, and to bring the greatest blessing on thyself; and whether all occasions may prove equally beneficial. Dr. Wells.

9. Rejoice, O young man, &c.] When thou art inclined, O young man, to rejoice in thy youth, &c. know, that is, remember, that for every sin committed "God will bring thee into judgment."

Before CHRIST about 977. and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment.

10. Therefore remove sorrow from thy heart,] Sorrow is here put for the cause of sorrow. Live not so in youth as to bring sorrow in old age.

Chap. XII. Solomon, to prove that a future state of retribution was the object which he held out through the whole of his exhortation, as the only adequate sanction of virtue, the only sure prop of religion, closes this admirable work with the solemn admonition, "Remember now thy Creator," &c. Then, after describing, with singular beauty and philosophick precision, the symptoms of decay preceding that awful hour, when "the dust shall return to the earth as it was," &c. he imprints upon the heart, in the two last verses, that great truth which it was his chief object to promulgate and enforce. Dr. Graves.

Ver. 1. Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth,] "Remember thy Creator;" that is, honour, fear, love, obey, and serve Him; in a word, act as becomes one who is mindful of God, and bears Him continually in his thoughts. Abp. Tillotson.

—— thy Creator] The Hebrew is, "thy Creators," in the plural. The plural is employed to shew the plurality of Persons in the unity of essence, namely, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. For these three Divine Persons consulted together concerning the creation of man, Gen. i. 26. Jones of Nayland, Parkhurst.

2—7. While the sun, &c.] The striking description of old age which here follows may thus be paraphrased. Before thine eyes grow dim with age, so that thou dost not clearly discern the sun, moon, and stars; and before the evils and miseries of age succeed one another in a woful vicissitude: before the time that thine arms, which are the guard of this thy house of clay, shall tremble with palsies; and thy legs, which are thy strong supporters, shall bow themselves; and thy teeth grind slowly and with difficulty, because they are few; and thine eyes, which are as glasses in the windows of the head, are dusky and darkened: when the street doors shall be shut upon thee, as now retired to thine own home, without care of others' visits or business; when thy slow feeding shall make thee unfit for other men's tables: when every little noise, even that of a bird, shall wake thee out of thy sleep; and when thy spirits shall be so dull and dejected, that thou shalt take no pleasure in hearing the most melodious musick: when thy decrepid age shall make thee so unfit to move, that thou shalt be afraid of every rub or clod that lies in thy way; when the white blossoms of age shall cover thy head, and every light thing (though it be but the weight of a grashopper) shall seem burdensome to thee; and all those lusts and desires, which haunted thy stronger times, are now gone and past; for there is no way but this one; man goeth to his long home the grave, and the mourners in hired formality go about the streets: before all thy natural and vital spirits be utterly exhausted, and all the functions and offices of life be quite discharged, which shall be in the last act of death; for, as when the cord is loosed and the bucket broken, and the pitcher broken at the well, or the wheel at the cistern, no water can any more be drawn; so, when these vital parts fail, there can be no further prolongation of life: when this frame of man's body shall thus be dissolved; then shall the dust, of which it was formed, return to the earth, and the soul or spirit shall return to the God who gave it. Bp. Hall.

Hence let us learn to bestow on each part of our composition that portion of our time and attention, which, on a just consideration of their relative value, they may be found to deserve. Bp. Horne.

6. Or ever the silver cord &c.] The expressions of this verse are by many understood (in a sense differing from that of Bp. Hall, just given) to bear allusion to different parts of the human body. The "silver cord" is thought to mean the thread of life, the spinal marrow; "the golden bowl" to express the heart; and "the wheel at the cistern" the tubes and arteries about it. Bp. Horne, Dr. Hodgson.

11. The words of the wise &c.] The words of the wise, and so these instructions, are intended, and ought to excite men to virtue, as goads excite the ox to go forward: and, as nails fastened in a board stick fast, so should these instructions stick fast in the minds of men; which they will the less fail to do, if duly inculcated by "the masters of assemblies," or those who rule and govern in the sacred assemblies; which masters or teachers are appointed and directed by "one Shepherd" or Supreme Governour, namely, God. Dr. Wells.

12. And further, by these, my son, be admonished: &c.] Therefore be advised, my son, (or whoever thou art that shalt read these things, whose happiness I wish as my own,) be advised by me, and not only believe these things, but rest contented with such useful knowledge, and do not trouble thyself with composing or reading many books; for all that is needful to instruct men how to be happy may be comprised in a few wise precepts; and, if thou extendest thy desires beyond this, thou mayest turn over infinite volumes, which are continually increasing, and serve only to distract thy mind and tire thy spirits, and impair thy health, but yield little profit after the expense of much time and labour. Bp. Patrick.

13. Let us hear the conclusion &c.] Solomon, to whom God gave a wise and understanding heart, so that before him there was none like him, neither shall any like him arise after him, who had carefully considered, and thoroughly examined, all things under the sun, and was therefore most likely to give a true judgment, gives his clear opinion in this affectionate conclusion of his book, "Fear God, and keep His commandments; for this is the whole," the whole duty and happiness, "of man;" this is that alone which will carry him securely through the world, and lead him without errour to his final happiness. Dr. S. Clarke.

INTRODUCTION.

THIS Book was written by Solomon, to whom it is expressly ascribed by the Hebrew title. It is almost universally allowed to have been a marriage song of that monarch, composed on the celebration of his nuptials with a very beautiful woman, called "the Shulamite," the daughter, as has been supposed, of Pharaoh, and the favourite and distinguished wife of Solomon.

Solomon was eminently skilled in the composition of songs, and he is related to have produced above one thousand, 1 Kings iv. 32; out of which number, probably, this alone was attributed to the suggestion of the Holy Spirit; for this alone has escaped the waste of time, by being preserved in the Sacred Volume, into which it was received as unquestionably authentick; and it has uniformly been considered as canonical by the Christian Church.

The royal author appears, in the typical spirit of his time, to have designed to render a ceremonial appointment descriptive of a spiritual concern; and this song is accordingly considered by judicious writers to be a mystical allegory of that sort which induces a more sublime sense on historical truths, and which, by the description of human events, shadows out Divine circumstances. The sacred writers were, by God's condescension, authorized to illustrate His strict and intimate relation to the Church by the figure of a marriage; and the emblem must have been strikingly becoming and expressive to the conceptions of the Jews, since they annexed ideas of peculiar mystery to this appointment, and imagined that the marriage union was a counterpart representation of some original pattern in heaven. Hence it was performed among them with very peculiar ceremonies and solemnity, with every thing that could give dignity and importance to its rites. Solomon therefore, in celebrating the circumstances of his marriage, was naturally led, by a train of correspondent reflexions, to consider that spiritual connexion which it was often employed to symbolize; and the idea must have been the more forcibly suggested to him, as he was at this period preparing to build a temple to God, and thereby to furnish a visible representation of the Hebrew Church. The spiritual allegory, thus worked up by Solomon to its highest perfection, was very consistent with the prophetick style, which was accustomed to predict evangelical blessings by such parabolical figures: and Solomon was more immediately furnished with a pattern for this representation by the author of the forty-fifth Psalm, who describes, in a compendious allegory, the same future connexion between Christ and His Church.

But though the work be certainly an allegorical representation, many learned men, in an unrestrained eagerness to explain the Song, even in its minutest and most obscure particulars, have too far indulged their imaginations; and, by endeavouring too nicely to reconcile the literal with the spiritual sense, have been led beyond the boundaries which a reverence for the sacred writings should ever prescribe. The ideas which the sacred writers furnish concerning the mystical relation between Christ and His Church, though well accommodated to our apprehensions by the allusion of a marriage union, are too general to illustrate every particular contained in this poem; which may be supposed to have been intentionally decorated with some ornaments appropriate to the literal construction. When the general analogy is obvious, we are not always to expect minute resemblance, and should not be too curious in seeking for obscure and recondite allusions. Solomon, in the glow of an inspired fancy, and unsuspicious of misconception or deliberate perversion, describes God and His Church, with their respective attributes and graces, under colourings familiar and agreeable to mankind, and exhibits their ardent affection under the authorized figures of earthly love. No similitude could indeed be chosen so elegant and apposite for the illustration of this intimate and spiritual alliance, as the marriage union; if considered in the chaste simplicity of its first institution, or under the interesting circumstances with which it was established among the Jews.

This poem may be considered, as to its form, as a dramatical poem of the pastoral kind. There is a succession of time; and a change of place, to different parts of the palace and royal gardens. The persons introduced as speakers, are the bridegroom and bride, and their respective attendants. The interchange of dialogue is carried on in a wild and digressive manner, but the speeches are adapted to the persons with appropriate elegance. The companions of the bride compose a kind of chorus, which seems to bear some resemblance to that afterwards adopted in the Grecian tragedy. Solomon and his queen assume the pastoral simplicity of style which is favourable to the communication of their sentiments. The poem abounds throughout with beauties, and presents every where a delightful and romantick display of nature, painted at its most interesting season, and described with every ornament that an inventive fancy could furnish. It is justly entitled A Song of Songs, or most excellent song, as being superiour to any that an uninspired writer could have produced, and tending, if properly understood, to purify the mind, and to elevate the affections from earthly to heavenly things. Dr. Gray.

It was the practice of the Jews to forbid their children the reading of this Book till their judgment was sufficiently matured; lest, in the fervour of youth, they should give too wide a scope to fancy, and interpret to a bad sense the spiritual ideas of Solomon. This was a very prudent and judicious precaution; and may well serve to restrain the practice, which has unfortunately prevailed among some Christians of modern times, of applying in an indecorous manner the strong figurative expressions which occur throughout this poem. Dr. Gray, Edit.

Chap. I. ver. 1. The song of songs,] This title denotes the excellence of the song, not only in its structure and composition, but more particularly in regard to the subject of which it treats, as representing the earnest desire of the Church of God, which is the spouse or bride of Christ, to enjoy the great blessing of Christ's coming, as being her bridegroom; or He, by whose merits all the faithful are blessed or made happy. Bp. Patrick, Dr. Wells.

For a general notion of the allegorical sense conveyed by the different parts of this Book, the reader is referred to the heads of the several chapters.

2. Let him &c.] The bride here breaks out into expressions of tenderness, and addresses him when absent, as if he were present; being interrupted at times by the bridemaids who attend her, ver. 4, 8. Bp. Percy.

3. — the savour of thy good ointments] Fragrant ointments were especially used at nuptials, and on other festival occasions; see Ps. xlv. 8. Prov. vii. 17. Amos vi. 6: hence the odour of sweet ointments became a common metaphor to express the extensive acceptableness of a good name. Bp. Percy.

5. — as the tents of Kedar,] Volney says, the tents of the Bedoween Arabs, woven of goats' or camels' hair, are black or brown. Parkhurst. The tents of the wild Arabs are to this day of a very dark or black colour, being made of the shaggy hair of their black goats. D'Arvieux.

— as the curtains of Solomon.] Rather, "as the tapestry of Solomon:" perhaps comparing her to one of the beautiful figures on fine tapestry. Dr. Hodgson.

"I am black but comely," &c. The expressions are to be divided as is sometimes the case in Hebrew diction, "I am black as the tents of Kedar, but comely as the curtains of Solomon." Bp. Lowth.

6. Look not upon me, &c.] Do not despise me, by considering my outward hue, for my brothers and sisters have done me injury by making me a slave to the meanest employments, in which I was exposed to the rays of the sun, and could not preserve my beauty. Bp. Patrick.

7. — where thou makest thy flock to rest at noon:] In hot countries, the shepherds and their flocks are always forced to retire for shelter during the burning heats of noon.

9. I have compared thee, &c.] The bridegroom, seeing perhaps, at some little distance, the bride anxiously seeking for him, here commends her conjugal affection by various compliments to her charms, and the dialogue is thus carried on to chap. ii. 8. in a very poetical, but unconnected, manner. Bp. Percy.

— to a company of horses] This comparison will not be deemed coarse or vulgar, when it is considered what beautiful and delicate creatures the Eastern horses are, and how highly they are valued. It is very remarkable that a Greek poet, Theocritus, has made use of a similar comparison to a Thessalian steed, to express the beauty of Helen. Bp. Percy.

10. — comely with rows of jewels, &c.] Olearius supposes the headdress of the bride here referred to, to be the same with that which is now frequently used in the East. He says that all the headdress of the Persian ladies consists in two or three rows of pearls, which are not there worn about the neck, but round the head, beginning at the forehead, and descending down the cheeks, and under the chin, so that their faces seem to be set in pearls. Harmer.

12. — my spikenard] Spikenard, or nard, is a plant growing in the East, whose root is very small and slender; it puts forth a long small stalk, and has several ears or spikes even with the ground; whence it has the name of spike-nard. Calmet.

14. — as a cluster of camphire] Interpreters have been much puzzled by these words which we translate "cluster of camphire." That which we call camphire was then unknown; and therefore the word is better translated in the margin by "cypress;" not meaning the tree known by that name, but an aromatick plant, (properly called cyprus,) known in the East, which produced a sweet-scented bush of flowers, and also berries, not much differing from the fragrancy of spikenard. These shrubs seem to have been cultivated at En-gedi near Jericho, after the manner of vines; and hence probably the nurseries of them are here called vineyards. Bp. Patrick.

15. — thou hast doves' eyes.] To understand the force of this expression, we must not refer it to our common doves or pigeons, but to the doves of Syria, which have large and beautiful eyes. Those, who have seen the fine Eastern bird, the carrier pigeon, will require no further commentary on this verse. Sir T. Brown. Or perhaps, as the dove is always considered as emblematick of conjugal tenderness and affection, the comparison to "doves' eyes" may bear reference to the soft qualities which the eyes of the bride expressed. Harmer. But see note at chap. v. 12.

17. The beams of our house are cedar,] Perhaps the translation should be, "The beams of our house are cedar, and fir our roof;" and the expression, concurring with that of the last verse, may shew, that they were not in a house, but in a grove, where the heads of the firs and the cedars are poetically called the beams and roof of their chamber. Dr. Hodgson.

Chap. II. ver. 1. — rose of Sharon,] Sharon, or Saron, was a town which gave name to a spacious and fruitful valley, reaching from Cesarea to Joppa. Dr. Wells. It is meant, "I am a mere rose of the field." The bride now speaks, and seems with becoming modesty to represent her beauty as nothing extraordinary, as a mere common wild flower: this the bridegroom in the next verse denies, insisting that she as much surpasses the generality of maidens, as the flower of the lily does that of the bramble. Bp. Percy.

—— lily of the valleys.] Not the beautiful flowers known among us by the name of "lily of the valley," but probably a Syrian plant of the lily kind, wont to grow in low lands. Harmer.

3. As the apple tree among the trees] Perhaps rather, according to the Chaldee paraphrase, "as the citron tree." Parkhurst.

5. Stay me with flagons,] This verse is a description of one falling into a swoon; in which it is usual to call for strong reviving smells. Bp. Patrick.

7. I charge you, — by the roes, &c.] This is a rural form of adjuring. The bride entreats her virgin companions by those delicate and sprightly creatures, which add so much to the beauty of the sylvan scenes, and in pursuit of which, as nymphs fond of rural sports, they may be supposed to have taken frequent pleasure. It is natural to conjure a person by whatever is most affecting, dear, or valued. Bp. Percy.

"By the roes." The animal designed seems rather the gazelle or antelope. Parkhurst.

8. The voice &c.] The bride here takes up the discourse to chap. iii. 6. Bp. Percy.

The voice of my beloved!] This would be more intelligible, if we were to supply, as in the old version, "It is the voice." Dr. Durell.

— he cometh leaping &c.] Allusion is here still made to the roes, ver. 7.

9. — behold, he standeth behind our wall, &c.] The Eastern buildings generally surrounded a square inner court. The bridegroom seems here to be described as entering the outward apartments, and gradually seen, as he made his approach; first behind the wall, then looking through the window, and lastly putting his head through the lattice. Bp. Percy.

12. — the turtle] This bird is in some sense, and sometimes, if not always, a bird of passage, as appears from Jer. viii. 7, where it is said to "know its time." Aristotle, Varro, and Cicero say the same. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

13. — the vines with the tender grape] In many versions these words are rendered, "the vines in blossom." That the blossom of the vine may give a fragrant smell in hot countries, is shewn by the practice of the ancients, who used to put the dried flowers of the vine into their new wine, in order to give it fragrancy and a pure or flosculous spirit. Bp. Percy.

14. — in the clefts &c.] Solomon having in the language of affection called her his dove, nothing was more natural, in an oriental imagination, than the immediate comparing of the then residence of the Jewish queen to the rocky clefts in which their doves were wont to build. It appears that doves in those countries usually take up their abode in the hollow places of rocks and cliffs. The word, which we translate "stairs," occurs but once more; namely in Ezek. xxxviii. 20. and there is translated "steep places." It might be better perhaps here to translate the word, "steep places or lofty cliffs." Harmer.

15. — foxes, that spoil the vines.] As foxes in England do not destroy vines, this passage has sometimes been objected to; but we learn from Dr. Shaw, that "jackalls of the lesser kind eat roots and fruits, and frequent the gardens every night." So Hasselquist says, "There is plenty of these animals near the convent of St. John, in the desert, about vintage time; insomuch that the owners are obliged to set guards over the vines, to prevent these creatures from destroying them." These then are clearly the animals, which are here meant. Fragments to Calmet.

17. Until the day break.] "Until the day breathe," literally; or, "till the day blow fresh." There is peculiar beauty in this expression: in those warm climates the dawn of day is attended with a fine refreshing breeze, of the most delightful kind. Bp. Percy.

—— turn, — and be thou like a roe] That is, come to me with the swiftness of a roe or antelope, from thy lurking places. Dr. Durell.

—— upon the mountains of Bether.] In the margin, "mountains of division," "craggy, intersected mountains;" which is preferable perhaps to considering Bether as a proper name. Parkhurst.

Chap. III. ver. 6. Who is this &c.] The dialogue seems to be taken up by the companions of the bride; afterwards (ver. 11.) by the bride, and (chap. iv. 1.) by the bridegroom. Bp. Percy.

—— like pillars of smoke,] It is customary at Eastern marriages for virgins to lead the procession with silver-gilt pots of perfumes. In the present instance, so liberally were these rich perfumes burnt, that, at a distance, a pillar or pillars of smoke arose from them; and the perfume was so rich, as to exceed in value and fragrancy all the powders of the merchant. Burder.

10. — the midst thereof &c.] The words may be rendered, "the middle of it" (that is, the couch of the palanquin or litter) "spread with love by the daughters of Jerusalem;" that is, with needlework or loom-work, wrought by the daughters of Jerusalem in token of their love and regard to Solomon. The Jewish women were famous for these curious works. See Judg. v. 30. Prov. xxxi. 22, 24. Parkhurst.

11. — the crown wherewith his mother crowned him] It was usual with many nations to put crowns or garlands on the heads of new-married people. It seems from this passage, that among the Jews this ceremony was performed by one of the parents. Among the Greeks, the bride was crowned by her mother. With the Greeks and Romans, the nuptial crowns were only chaplets of leaves and flowers. With the Hebrews they were sometimes also of richer materials, as gold, silver, &c. according to the rank of the persons. Bp. Percy.

Chap. IV. ver. 1. — thy hair is as a flock of goats,] Thy hair is as fine as that of a flock of goats: it seems to be a comparison with the hair of the eastern goats, which is of a delicate silky softness, and bears a great resemblance to the fine curls of a woman's hair. Bochart. Some of them had a fleece so fine, that it was almost as soft as silk; such as was that spun by the women for the use of the tabernacle, Exod. xxxv. 26. To this hair allusion seems here to be made in respect to its softness, as well as length and thickness. Bp. Patrick.

—— that appear from mount Gilead.] The sense of the whole may be, "Thy hair is like a flock of ascending goats, which is seen from mount Gilead;" and the point of comparison may chiefly turn on the head being covered with fine flowing locks, as mount Gilead was with the shaggy herd, reaching in an extended line from its foot to its summit. Michaelis.

2. Thy teeth are like a flock of sheep] By this comparison are admirably expressed the evenness, whiteness, just proportions, and unbroken series of the set of teeth. Bp. Lowth.

Lowth.*

4. Thy neck is like the tower of David] Her neck, tall and slender, erect, and moulded according to the most elegant proportions, and adorned with gold and jewels, is happily compared with a tower of well-known elegance and distinction in the citadel of Zion, adorned with every variety of splendid armoury. Bp. Lowth.

6. — to the mountain of myrrh, &c.] Myrrh and frankincense were among the most valued perfumes of the East. The bridegroom therefore concludes his compliments on the bride's person, by comparing her to an entire heap of those precious essences. Bp. Percy.

8. Come with me — my spouse,] Here begins a new representation, the style of the bridegroom being altered towards the bride, whom he had before called by the name of "love," but now for the first time addresses under that of "spouse." Bp. Patrick.

—— from the top of Amana,] Amana was a part of mount Libanus; Shenir and Hermon were parts of the same ridge of mountains. Bp. Patrick. This invitation of the bridegroom is not to be taken literally, but the words are to be understood in a figurative sense. He invites the bride to his arms, as to a place of safety, and encourages her to look down in security amidst any dangers with which she was threatened. Lebanon, Amana, Shenir, and Hermon, were all places where some dangers were to be apprehended; and it is an usual beauty in poetry, to represent a general idea by particulars that largely partake of it. Bp. Percy.

9. — my sister, my spouse;] Or, perhaps, more literally, "my sister spouse." "Sister" seems here used as a term of endearment. Bp. Percy.

—— with one of thine eyes,] The words may be translated, "with one glance of thine eyes." Bp. Percy.

—— with one chain of thy neck.] The Latin translation is not inelegant, "with one curl or ringlet of thy neck." Bp. Percy.

11. Thy lips, — drop as the honeycomb:] Expressing her sweet and melting words; a metaphor common to Greek and Oriental writers. Bp. Percy.

—— like the smell of Lebanon.] The trees which grew upon mount Lebanon produced many aromatick gums and spices, and frankincense among others. Bp. Patrick.

12. — a fountain sealed.] This alludes no doubt to what was sometimes practised in the East, in order to secure the water of fountains to the proper owners. Parkhurst.

13. Thy plants are &c.] The bridegroom, having in the foregoing sentence called the bride an "inclosed garden," here carries on the metaphor, and compares her virtues and accomplishments to all the choicest productions of an Eastern orchard. Bp. Percy.

14. — calamus] Sweetscented cane. Parkhurst.

—— and aloes,] By "aloes" here seems plainly meant the ligualoes or wood-aloes, the finest sort of which is the most resinous of all the woods with which we are acquainted. Its scent, while in the mass, is very fragrant and agreeable. The smell of the common aloe wood is also pleasant, but not so strongly perfumed as the former. Parkhurst.

Chap. V. ver. 1. I am come into my garden, &c.] The bridegroom here returns an answer to the invitation of the bride in the latter part of the foregoing chapter; and testifies his acceptance by coming to taste and feast upon the fruit of his garden; and, after the manner of those countries, he calls his friends and companions to be partakers of it with him. His receiving fruit from the garden is expressed by these words, "I have gathered my myrrh," &c. Then follows the feast, (which they always made when they gathered the fruits of the earth,) in these words; "I have eaten my honeycomb with my honey," &c. Honey is mentioned in preference to other things, because in Eastern countries it was a principal and favourite food, as appears from its having been among the presents sent to Joseph, when governour of Egypt, Gen. xliii. 11, and among those brought to David by the great men of his country, 2 Sam. xvii. 29. As honey comprehends all the royal dainties which were to be eaten, so the wine and milk mentioned comprehend all the liquors given at the feast. Bp. Patrick.

2. — my undefiled:] Rather, "my perfect one;" so the Hebrew word properly signifies, one possessed of all accomplishments, both of mind and body. Bp. Percy.

11. His head is as the most fine gold,] Though the ancients prized golden or flaxen locks, yet this cannot be the sense here, as his hair is said to be black. The expression probably alludes to the custom which then prevailed of using a powder of a golden colour, as also golden ornaments in the hair. Dr. Durell. Allusion may perhaps be made to the Eastern custom of tinging the hair and face with a vegetable substance called henna, which gives them a yellowish or golden tincture. Michaelis. Or it is only a metaphorical expression to denote consummate excellence and beauty. Sanctius.

12. His eyes are as the eyes of doves &c.] In the original, "His eyes are like doves." The most common pigeon in the East is of a deep blue colour; and the meaning here seems to be, "His eyes are like blue pigeons by the foam of waters," by which the blue iris of the eye, surrounded by the white, is compared to a pigeon amidst the white foam of waters. But, as if the foam of water was not sufficient to satisfy the poet, it is added, "washed in milk," "dipping themselves in milk," thus further contrasting the blue centre of the eye with the surrounding white. Fragments to Calmet.

13. His cheeks are as a bed of spices,] The word translated "spices," sometimes signifies odoriferous plants and flowers of the garden. Perhaps then it may here mean, "roses;" and the words may convey a comparison of the pleasing ruddiness which health diffused over his cheeks to the colour of a bed of roses. Harmer.

—— his lips like lilies,] According to some, this comparison is made from the fineness and delicate softness of his lips: but Pliny mentions lilies of a deep red colour, which, he says, were much esteemed in Syria; and to this perhaps allusion is made: or perhaps the comparison may be not to the colour, but to the odoriferous sweetness of the lily. "Dropping sweet smelling myrrh;" that is, from which words flow, more precious and more pleasant than the richest and most fragrant myrrh. Bp. Patrick. Parkhurst. Allusion seems to be made to honeydrops, observable in inverted-flowered lilies, similar to the standing sweet dew on the crown imperial, now common among us. Sir T. Brown.

14. His hands are as gold rings] His hands are as gold finely turned, beset with a chrysolite. Bp. Percy. Or the meaning may be, that "he had on his fingers golden rings, set with a chrysolite." Bp. Patrick.

—— bright ivory overlaid with sapphires.] Perhaps, "is as an ivory plate, enclosed with sapphire," meaning to express the white skin covered with a purple robe. Michaelis.

15. His legs are as pillars of marble,] Alluding perhaps to the strength and firmness of his stature; or else to the colour of the garments. Bp. Patrick.

——his countenance is as Lebanon,] Of the two celebrated mountains in Judea, Lebanon and Carmel, the former was celebrated for its height, ruggedness, and the abundance of its vast and towering cedars; the latter for its richness and fertility, abounding with vineyards, olive grounds, and corn fields. Hence the former is here employed to express masculine dignity, as the latter is (chap. vii. 5.) to convey an idea of female beauty. Bp. Lowth.

1 A further description of the church's graces. 10 The church professeth her faith and desire.

[c] Chap. 6. 3 [d] Thy two breasts are like two young roes that are twins.

4 Thy neck is as a tower of ivory; thine eyes like the fishpools in Heshbon, by the gate of Bath-rabbim: thy nose is as the tower of Lebanon which looketh toward Damascus.

Chap. VI. ver. 4. — beautiful — as Tirzah,] Tirzah was a beautiful situation in the tribe of Judah, chosen by Jeroboam for the seat of his kingdom. The name implies "a delightful city." Bp. Patrick.

—— comely as Jerusalem,] Jerusalem was esteemed the most charming place in all Palestine, and is called by Jeremiah, "the perfection of beauty," Lam. ii. 15. Bp. Percy.

—— terrible as an army with banners.] These words may be rendered, "dazzling as bannered hosts." The word translated "terrible," properly signifies "amazing," exciting awe and consternation. Bp. Percy. Some refer the expression to the gravity, or rather severity, of her countenance, which forbade all near approaches to so great a beauty. Bp. Patrick.

8. There are threescore queens, &c.] It is the common opinion that Solomon here alludes to the number of his own wives, and that he composed this song before he multiplied his wives to the prodigious extent related at 1 Kings xi. 1, &c. But it is more probable that he alludes generally to the custom of other princes in the East, who, besides their principal wives that were solemnly espoused and endowed, had also others who were called concubines. The terms "threescore" and "fourscore" are probably used for an uncertain number. Bp. Patrick.

12. — ever I was aware,] The meaning of this verse seems to be, that the spouse, hearing such high commendations of herself, both from the bridegroom, and from the persons mentioned at ver. 10, says with great humility, that she was not conscious to herself of such perfections, (for so the first words appear to signify in the Hebrew, "I did not know it," or "I did not think so,") but is incited thereby to make the greatest speed, so as to preserve the character which he had given her; and to go along with him into his garden, (which she had neglected before, ver. 2,) there to give a good account of her proficiency. For which purpose she seems on a sudden to take leave of her friends, (who had charitably accompanied her to seek him,) that she might for some time enjoy his society alone; which is the ground of their calling upon her to return, in the next verse. This is the best account I can give of these two last verses. It is supposed that Ammi-nadib was some great captain, who industriously pursued his victories or advantages with very swift chariots. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. VII. ver. 1. — thy feet with shoes,] Rather perhaps, "thy feet within thy sandals." The Hebrew women were remarkably nice in adorning their sandals, and in having them fit so neatly as to display the fine shape of the foot. Thus Judith's sandals are mentioned, together with the bracelets and other ornaments of jewels, with which she set off her beauty when she went to captivate the heart of Holofernes, (Judith x. 4.) and it is expressly said, that "her sandals ravished his eyes," chap. xvi. 9. Bp. Percy.

—— the joints &c.] The Greek translators render this word, "the whole proportion," or "model." The expression here seems to refer to the clothing which the bride wore; which agrees with the words which follow, "the work of the hands of a cunning workman." Bp. Patrick.

2. — an heap of wheat set about with lilies.] It was usual with the Jews, when their wheat had been threshed out and fanned, to lay it in heaps, (Ruth iii. 7. Hagg. ii. 16.) and, as their threshing floors were in the open air, in order to keep off the cattle, they stuck them round with thorns, (Hos. ii. 5, 6.) These, in compliment to the spouse, are here converted into a fence of lilies. Or we may suppose that Solomon here alludes to a custom, which they might have in Palestine, of strewing flowers round the heaps of corn after it was winnowed. Bp. Percy.

4. — thine eyes like the fishpools] "Thine eyes are clear and serene as the pools in Heshbon by the gate of Bath-rabbim," (which was one of the gates of Heshbon:) "thy nose is finely formed as the tower of Lebanon which looketh toward Damascus." Bp. Percy.

10 I am a wall, and my breasts like tow-

5. — the hair of thine head like purple;] Meaning perhaps the colour which we call auburn. Dr. Hodgson. The meaning of the word translated "hair" is not certain: it may admit the sense "hair lace," "a fillet or bandage." Bp. Patrick, Dr. Durell.

7. — thy stature is like to a palm tree,] The palm tree is remarkable for its slenderness and height. At present there are but few palms to be seen in Judea; but formerly, it is probable, they were very abundant, as they are stamped on the Roman coins which belonged to this country, and are much spoken of by Roman writers, when they treat of this country. Harmer.

8. I said, I will go up to the palm tree,] The comparison is made to the palm tree, because that tree rises straight as well as high, and therefore sets forth that part of comeliness which consists in stature. Sir T. Brown has ingeniously observed, that the expression "I will go up, and take hold of the boughs," is peculiarly appropriate, since the palm tree bears its boughs only at the upper part. Some understand by the words which we translate "clusters of grapes," dates, which are the fruit of the palm. Bp. Patrick. The word for "boughs" is rendered in the Latin translation "fruits," and, in the Greek, to the same sense, "tops," since the clusters or fruit in the palm tree really grow on the top of the stalk. Parkhurst.

9. — the roof of thy mouth &c.] The word literally signifies, "thy palate," which is here figuratively put for "thy speech," which issues thence. Bp. Percy.

13. The mandrakes give a smell,] The Hebrew word, translated "mandrakes," occurs only here and at Gen. xxx. 14. Conjectures about its meaning have been most various.

—— at our gates] It has been supposed that this passage relates to the custom of decking the gates of new-married persons with festoons of fruits and flowers. Or perhaps the meaning may be, "in our hoards." As the gates in Judea were usually large buildings, it is not improbable that the repositories for fruit were either over them, or near them. Bp. Percy.

Chap. VIII. ver. 2. — to drink of spiced wine] This is thought to allude to a custom of the parties drinking wine from the same cup in one part of the marriage ceremony. We know that spiced wine was a great delicacy in the East. It was not peculiar to the Jews; the Romans lined their vessels with odoriferous gums, to give the wine a warm bitter flavour; and it is said, that the Poles and Spaniards have a similar method of giving their wines a favourite relish. The word rendered "juice" by our translators, is properly new wine or must; and "the juice of the pomegranate" is either new wine made acid with the juice of pomegranates, which the Turks about Aleppo still mix with their dishes for this purpose; or rather wine made of the juice of pomegranates, of which, Sir J. Chardin says, they still make considerable quantities in the East. Harmer.

6. Set me as a seal &c.] These are the words of the bride, beseeching her beloved to keep her always in mind: for that was the purpose of having the name or picture of a beloved person engraven on a seal or jewel, and wearing it near the heart, to testify great esteem, and a constancy of affection. Bp. Patrick. O set me as a seal, &c.; that is, place me so that I may never slip out of thy memory or affection: this request I make out of fervent love, which is strong and irresistible as death, especially when heightened by jealousy, or a fear of losing the beloved object. Bp. Percy.

Before CHRIST about 1014. ers: then was I in his eyes as one that found † favour.

† Heb. Peace.

11 Solomon had a vineyard at Baal-hamon; he let out the vineyard unto keepers; every one for the fruit thereof was to bring a thousand pieces of silver.

12 My vineyard, which is mine, is before me: thou, O Solomon, must have a thousand, and those that keep the fruit thereof two hundred.

Before CHRIST about 1014.

13 Thou that dwellest in the gardens, the companions hearken to thy voice: cause me to hear it.

14 ¶ † Make haste, my beloved, and be thou like to a roe or to a young hart upon the mountains of spices.

11. Solomon had a vineyard &c.] The bride now promises her diligence, in this and the next verse, to do him the best service, and to make the greatest improvement she could, of the talents committed to her. For whereas Solomon, as she here says, let out his vineyard, which he had in Baal-hamon, a place near Jerusalem, (where abundance of people had vineyards, and he a very large one,) "unto keepers," each for a thousand pieces of silver, or shekels, and every one of whom made two hundred pieces for his own profit, she implies that much greater would be the increase which she was likely to make by her own care and diligence. Bp. Patrick.

14. — upon the mountains of spices.] Upon the mountains where spices grow: what particular mountains are meant, cannot be ascertained. Bp. Patrick.

Thus, the nuptial ceremony being finished, the poem concludes with a few pastoral expressions of mutual tenderness and affection. Bp. Percy.

The opinion that the whole of this poem is allegorical, is confirmed by the consent and authority both of the Jewish and Christian churches, and by the analogy which it bears to other parts of Scripture, confessedly allegorical. But in tracing the allegorical sense through the several parts, great caution is required; and it is especially necessary that we should be extremely careful how we pursue the allegory too far into every particular expression. If this caution be not well observed, there is considerable risk of impairing the dignity of Holy Writ. Bp. Lowth.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

TO

THE PROPHETS.

IT is universally acknowledged, that the remaining books of the Old Testament, namely, the sixteen prophetical books, and the Lamentations of Jeremiah, were written by the persons whose names they bear. The Prophets profess themselves to be the respective authors of these books: and this internal testimony is confirmed both by Jewish and Christian tradition. Bp. Tomline.

The Prophets were those illustrious persons, who were raised up by God among the Israelites as the ministers of His dispensations. They flourished in a continued succession for above a thousand years, (Luke i. 70,) reckoning from Moses to Malachi: all cooperating in the same designs, and conspiring in one spirit to deliver the same doctrines, and to prophesy concerning the same future blessings. Moses, the first and greatest of the Prophets, having established God's first covenant, those who followed him were employed in explaining its nature, in opening its spiritual meaning, in instructing the Jews, and in preparing them for the reception of that second dispensation which it prefigured. Their pretensions to be considered as God's appointed servants were demonstrated by the unimpeachable integrity of their characters; by the intrinsick excellence and tendency of their instructions; and by the disinterested zeal, and undaunted fortitude, with which they persevered in their great designs. These were still further confirmed by the miraculous proofs which they displayed of Divine support, and by the immediate completion of many less important predictions which they uttered. Such were the credentials of their exalted character, which the Prophets furnished to their contemporaries: and we, who, having lived to witness the appearance of the second dispensation, can look back to the connexion which subsisted between the two covenants, have received additional evidence of the inspiration of the Prophets in the attestations of our Saviour and His Apostles; and in the retrospect of a gemminant and gradually maturing scheme of prophecy, connected in all its parts, and ratified in the accomplishment of its great object, the coming of the Messiah. We have still farther incontrovertible proofs of their Divine appointment in the numerous prophecies, which in these latter days are fulfilled, and still under our own eyes continue to receive their completion. Dr. Gray.

The prophetical writings present us with the worthiest and most exalted ideas of the Almighty, the justest and purest notions of piety and virtue, the most awful denunciations against wickedness of every kind, publick and private, the most affectionate expostulations, the most inviting promises, and the warmest concern for the publick good. And, besides all this, they contain a series of predictions relating to our blessed Lord, in which all the remarkable circumstances of His birth, life, ministry, miracles, doctrines, sufferings, and death, are foretold in so minute and exact a manner, (more particularly in the prophecy of Isaiah,) that it might almost be thought they were describing all these things after they had happened, if it were not known, that these prophecies were confessedly written many hundred years before Christ came into the world; and were, during all that time, in the possession of the Jews, who were the mortal enemies of Christianity, and therefore would never set themselves to forge prophecies, which most evidently prove Him to be what He professed to be, and what they denied Him to be, the Messiah, and the Son of God. It is to this part of Scripture that our Lord particularly directs our attention, when He says, "Search the Scriptures; for they are they which testify of Me," John v. 39. No testimony can be more satisfactory and convincing than this, to any one that reads them with care and impartiality, and compares their predictions concerning our Saviour, with the history of His life given by those who constantly lived and conversed with Him. Bp. Porteus.

The language of the Prophets is remarkable for its magnificence. Each writer is distinguished for peculiar beauties; but their style in general may be characterized as strong, animated, and impressive. Its ornaments are derived, not from accumulation of epithet, or laboured harmony, but from the real grandeur of its images, and the majestick force of its expressions. It is varied with striking propriety, and enlivened with quick but easy transitions. Its sudden bursts of eloquence, its earnest warmth, its affecting exhortations and appeals, afford very interesting proofs of that lively impression, and of that inspired conviction, under which the Prophets wrote, and which enabled them among a people, not distinguished for genius, to surpass in every variety of composition the most admired productions of Pagan antiquity. If the imagery employed by the sacred writers appears sometimes to partake of a coarser nature, it must be recollected, that the Eastern manners and languages required the most forcible representations; and that the masculine and indignant spirit of the Prophets led them to adopt the most energetick and descriptive expressions. No style is perhaps so highly figurative as that of the Prophets. Every object of nature and of art, which could furnish allusions, is explored with industry: every scene of creation, and every page of science, seems to have unfolded its rich varieties to the sacred writers, who in the spirit of Eastern poetry delight in every kind of metaphorical embellishment.

It remains to be observed, that the greatest part of the prophetick books, as well as those more especially styled poetical, were written in some kind of measure or verse: this is evident, not only from the peculiar selection of unusual expressions and phrases, but also from the artificial arrangement and regular distribution of many sentences, which run in parallel divisions, and correspond, as it were, in equal periods; but whether this resulted from the observance of certain definite numerical feet, or was regulated by the ear and the harmony of lines of similar cadence, is uncertain. The sententious modulation however, which in consequence obtained, was so strong, as to be transfused, and to predominate, in our translation.

The Prophets probably collected their own prophecies into their present form: indisputably the prophecies were composed and published by those prophets whose names they severally bear. As their genuine productions, they were received into the Jewish canon; and were read in the Jewish synagogues after the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, when the reading of the law was interdicted; and they continued so to be read to the days of our Saviour, from whose time they have formed a part of the service in the Christian churches. They are with great propriety received into our churches as illustrating the grand scheme of prophecy, and as replete with the most excellent instruction of every kind. The predictions which they contain were principally accomplished in the appearance of Christ. Some however, which referred to the dispersion and subsequent state of the Jews, as well as to the condition of other nations, still continue under our own eyes to be fulfilled, and will gradually receive their final and consummate ratification in the restoration of the Jews, in the universal establishment of Christ's kingdom, and in the second advent of our Lord, to "judge the world in righteousness." Dr. Gray.

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET ISAIAH.

INTRODUCTION.

ISAIAH was of the tribe of Judah, and it is supposed that he was descended from a branch of the royal family. He was the earliest of the four great prophets, and entered upon his prophetick office in the last year of Uzziah's reign, about 758 years before Christ. It is uncertain how long he continued to prophesy: some have thought that he died in the fifteenth or sixteenth year of Hezekiah's reign, and in that case he prophesied about forty-five years: but it appears more probable that he was put to death by command of Manasseh, in the first year of his reign; in which case he prophesied more than sixty-one years. It is said that he was sawn asunder with a wooden saw: and that mode of his death is supposed to be alluded to in the Epistle to the Hebrews, chap. xi. 37. Bp. Tomline.

The name of Isaiah is, as Vitringa has remarked, in some measure descriptive of his character, since it signifies "the salvation of Jehovah." He has always been considered as a prophet of the highest eminence, and looked up to as the brightest luminary of the Jewish church. He has been emphatically styled, "the Evangelical Prophet," so copiously and clearly does he describe the Messiah, and characterize His kingdom; favoured, as it were, with an intimate view of the Gospel state, from the very birth of our Saviour to be "conceived of a virgin," to that glorious and triumphant period, when every Gentile nation shall bring a clean offering to the Lord, and "all flesh shall come to worship before Him," chap. lxvi. 20, 23. The author of Ecclesiasticus, in his fine and discriminating encomium on the Prophets, says of Isaiah, that "he was great and faithful in his vision;" and that "in his time the sun went backward, and he lengthened the king's life. He saw by an excellent spirit what should come to pass at the last;" Ecclus. xlviii. 22, 25. It is certain that Isaiah, in addition to his other prophetick privileges, was invested on some particular occasions with the power of performing miracles, 2 Kings xx. 11; 2 Chron. xxxii. 31. It is remarkable, that his wife is styled a prophetess, chap. viii. 3. He himself appears to have been raised up, as a striking object of veneration among the Jews; and to have regulated his whole conduct in subserviency to his sacred appointment. His sons likewise were for types and figurative pledges of God's assurances, chap. viii. 18; and their names and actions were intended to awaken a religious attention in the persons, whom they were commissioned to address and to instruct. See chap. vii. 3; viii. 1. Dr. Gray.

Though Isaiah gives so copious and circumstantial an account of the promised Messiah, and His kingdom, that he has been emphatically called "the Evangelical Prophet," his Book is not confined to prophecies relative to our Saviour: it contains many other predictions, and likewise several historical relations. It may be considered under six general divisions. The first division consists of the first five chapters, containing a general description of the state and condition of the Jews in the several periods of their history, the promulgation of the Gospel, and the coming of Christ to judgment. The second division consists of the seven next chapters, containing in the seventh the promise to Ahaz, which was predictive of Christ, whose nature, birth, and kingdom, are distinctly described in the ninth chapter: the denunciations of punishment upon the Assyrians, in the tenth chapter, seem an interruption to this glorious subject, which is resumed in the eleventh, where the Prophet breaks out into a hymn of praise, celebrating the future triumphant state of the Church. The third division, which reaches from the thirteenth to the twenty-seventh chapter inclusive, begins with a very remarkable prophecy of the destruction of Babylon, which is considered as a type of Antichrist: it then describes the fate of the Jews, Assyrians, Moabites, Philistines, Arabians, Syrians, and Egyptians; and concludes in a manner similar to the last. The fourth division, which extends from the twenty-eighth to the thirty-fifth chapter inclusive, contains predictions relative to the then approaching invasion of Sennacherib: but it is interspersed with severe reproofs and threats against the Jews for disobedience and wilful blindness, and also with consolatory promises to those who should remain faithful in the service of God, alluding frequently to the times of the Gospel. The thirty-sixth and two following chapters, which constitute the fifth division, give an historical account of the invasion of Sennacherib, and of the prolongation of Hezekiah's life. The sixth division reaches from the thirty-ninth chapter to the end of the Book: here the Prophet generally addresses his countrymen as being actually in the captivity which he had previously foretold; he predicts the total destruction of the empire of Babylon, and the restoration of the Jews to their own land by their great deliverer Cyrus, whom he represents the Almighty as calling upon by name to execute His will, about 200 years before he was born. In this latter part of the Book are principally contained the numerous prophecies already noticed, concerning the birth, ministry, death, and religion of Christ, together with a variety of circumstances, which were to precede and follow His incarnation. Bp. Tomline.

In some of his prophecies concerning Christ and the Christian church, Isaiah is so particular, that his discourse in certain parts looks more like a history of things past, than a prediction of that which was to come. St. Jerome, who had often read him, and considered him very carefully, says, "he deserves the name of an Evangelist rather than of a Prophet:" and indeed he is more frequently quoted through the New Testament than any other of the Prophets. For this reason it is, that this Book, by ancient and immemorial custom, is appointed to be read in our churches at a particular season of the year, as being the best preparative for the advent of our Lord, the foundation of the Evangelists and Apostles, the portraiture of the nature, person, and offices of the Messiah, and of the great things which He hath done and suffered for us. Reading.

The style of Isaiah has been universally admired as the most perfect model of the sublime: it is distinguished for all the magnificence, and for all the sweetness, of the Hebrew language. The variety of his images, and the animated warmth of his expressions, characterize him as unequalled in point of eloquence: and if we were desirous of producing a specimen of the dignity and beauties of the Scripture language, we should immediately think of having recourse to Isaiah. St. Jerome speaks of him as conversant with every part of science: and indeed the marks of a cultivated and improved mind are stamped in every page of his Book: but these are almost eclipsed by the splendour of his inspired knowledge. In the delivery of his prophecies and instructions, he utters his enraptured strains with an elevation and majesty, which unhallowed lips could never have attained. See chap. vi. 6, 7. From the grand exordium in the first chapter, to the concluding description of the Gospel; to "be brought forth" in wonders, and to terminate in the dispensation of eternity; from first to last there is one continued display of inspired wisdom, revealing its oracles and precepts for the instruction of mankind. Dr. Gray.

Chap. I. ver. 1. The vision of Isaiah &c.] The vision, or revelation of the will of God made known to Isaiah by the Holy Spirit of prophecy, related chiefly to the kingdom of Judah, and the spiritual circumstances of the Jewish church: but he does incidentally also speak of the ten tribes, of the Moabites, Egyptians, &c.; the kingdom of Judah being a good deal concerned in the good or ill that befell their neighbours; and the vision does not only pertain to the Jewish church, but extends to the Christian also, the New Jerusalem. W. Lowth, Wogan.

The prophecy contained in this first chapter stands single and unconnected, making an entire piece of itself. It contains a severe remonstrance against the corruptions prevailing among the Jews of that time; powerful exhortations to repentance; grievous threatenings to the impenitent; and gracious promises of better times, when the nation shall have been reformed by the just judgments of God. Bp. Lowth.

2. Hear, O heavens, &c.] God is introduced as entering upon a solemn pleading, before the whole world, against His disobedient people. The same scene is more fully displayed in the opening of the fiftieth Psalm. Bp. Lowth. See Deut. xxxii. 1, and the notes there.

6. Why should ye be stricken any more?] God complains here that His judgments (as he had before done, ver. 2. respecting His mercies) had no effect upon His people Israel, and that nothing that He could do would bring them to consideration and make them better. Abp. Tillotson.

6. From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness] The whole frame of the Jewish church is corrupted. W. Lowth.

7, 8, 9. Your country is desolate, &c.] The Prophet speaks (as prophets often do) of things future as present. See the note from Bp. Lowth on Deut. xxxii. 15. The passage may relate immediately to the times of Ahaz and Hezekiah: but it must have a farther reference to the devastations made by the Chaldeans and by the Romans. Bp. Newton.

8. — as a cottage in a vineyard, as a lodge &c.] Little temporary huts, covered with boughs, straw, turf, or the like materials, for a shelter for the watchman who guarded the fruit against foxes, jackalls, &c. See Cant. ii. 15. Fruits of the gourd kind are in great request in the Levant for their cooling quality. Bp. Lowth. See note from Hasselquist on Numb. xi. 5.

10. — ye rulers of Sodom; — ye people of Gomorrah.] The incidental mention of these places in the preceding verse suggested to the Prophet this spirited address to the rulers and inhabitants of Jerusalem, under the character of princes of Sodom, and people of Gomorrah. Bp. Lowth.

11. To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices &c.] Those hypocritical services which had no godliness, no sincerity, no true love of God in them, were not the services which God required, (ver. 12,) or took delight in. God would not accept of vain compliments, nor be bribed with pretended gifts, offered only to excuse from duty, to compound for sin, and to palliate unjust dealing. Dr. Waterland.

15. — I will hide mine eyes from you: — I will not hear:] What is the reason of all this? Because they were defective in the moral duties of religion; as it follows, "your hands are full of blood," &c. No instituted service, no positive part of religion whatsoever, was ever acceptable, when moral duties were neglected: nay, so far from this are they, that God rejects them with abhorrence and disdain. We see from this what was acceptable to God for itself and its own sake in the Jewish religion: and under the Gospel our Saviour prefers a moral duty before any gift, Matt. v. 23, 24. Abp. Tillotson.

What God says here to the Jews for their overmultiplied fasts, and uncommanded sacrifices, He will say to all, who do anything that agrees not with His laws, however specious and plausible, however good and acceptable, it may seem to them. God "cannot away with" anything but the performance of His own will! Bp. Beveridge.

16. Wash you, make you clean;] This refers to the preceding verse, "your hands are full of blood," and alludes to the legal washings commanded on several occasions. Bp. Lowth. The pardon of sin upon repentance is expressed in Scripture by cleansing and purifying, to denote that the outward cleansing of the flesh was designed to put men in mind of the inward purification from sin and unrighteousness. Dr. Jenkin.

16, 17. — cease to do evil; Learn to do well;] The order, in which these words are placed, was evidently designed to teach us that the foundation of acting right is the avoiding of every thing wrong: several parts of Scripture lay down the same rule in almost the same terms, (see Amos v. 15, and places there quoted in the margin,) and many express or imply the same doctrine. Scarce any words are strong enough to express how much good hare cessation from doing evil would produce, and how great is the importance of the plain humble duty of an inoffensive life; in proportion as we root out hurtful inclinations, right ones will not fail to shoot up, and bring forth fruit, if in less quantity, yet such as will be accepted, but probably in plenty. Abp. Secker.

21. How is the faithful city become an harlot!] See the note on Exod. xxxiv. 16.

22. Thy silver is become dross,] Those good graces, which thou didst once profess to have, are now utterly corrupted and depraved; thine obedience, which was once sincere and pure, is now adulterated with abominable wickedness. Bp. Hall.

— thy wine mixed with water:] An image used for the adulteration of wine, with more propriety than may at first appear, if what Thevenot says of the people of the Levant of late times was true of them formerly: he says, "they never mingle water with their wine to drink, but drink by itself what water they think proper for abating the strength of the wine." Whereas the Greeks and Latins by mixed wine understood wine diluted and lowered with water: the Hebrews generally mean by it, wine made stronger by the addition of higher and more powerful ingredients. Drunkards are accordingly described, Prov. xxiii. 30, as "seeking mixed wine;" and Isa. v. 22, as "mighty to mingle strong drink." Such was the "spiced wine," mentioned Cant. viii. 2. And hence the Psalmist took that highly poetical and sublime idea of the cup of God's wrath, (see Ps. lxxv. 8,) called by Isaiah, "the cup of trembling," chap. li. 17. Bp. Lowth.

24. — Ah, I will ease me of mine adversaries,] See the notes on Gen. vi. 6.

25. — take away all thy tin:] A very small quantity of tin makes silver extremely brittle, and it is difficult to separate these two metals: this gives peculiar force to the expression of the Prophet in this passage, as he had employed an allusion to silver at ver. 22. Parkhurst.

26. — I will restore thy judges as at the first, &c.] This relates, at least in its primary sense, to the restoration of the Jews after the seventy years of captivity. The promise contained in the latter part of this verse, taken in its full extent, relates to more flourishing times of the Church than the world has yet seen. W. Lowth.

29. For they shall be ashamed of the oaks &c.] The sacrificing in groves and shady places was an ancient rite of idolatry. This kind of worship is expressly forbidden in the law, Deut. xii. 2, 3; xvi. 21: and yet prevailed so much in the times of idolatrous kings, that the practice was not quite laid aside under religious princes. See 1 Kings xv. 14; xxii. 43. W. Lowth.

30. — as a garden that hath no water.] To enter into the energy of this comparison, we must consider, that in the hotter parts of the Eastern countries, a constant supply of water is necessary for the cultivation and even to the existence of a garden. There are none therefore without such a certain supply, either from some neighbouring river, or reservoirs collected from springs, or filled with rain-water in the proper season. when it overflowed, for such uses, are well known: Solomon mentions his own works of the kind, Eccles. ii. 5, 6. All the gardens of Aleppo, according to Dr. Russell, are on the banks of the river that runs by that city, or on the sides of the rill that supplies their aqueduct; and Maundrell informs us, that at Damascus there is not a garden that has not a fine quick stream running through it. Harmer, Bp. Lowth.

31. — and the maker of it] The marginal reading, "and his work," expresses the sense better, namely, that the idolaters and their devices shall perish together, however supported by secular power, or recommended by worldly grandeur. W. Lowth.

The same sense is conveyed by understanding the text in the following manner: And that mighty idol, whereto ye trust, shall be as tow; and the maker and worshipper of that idol shall be as a spark; and both of them shall burn together with unquenchable fire. Bp. Hall.

Chap. II. The prophecy, contained in the second, third, and fourth chapters, makes one continued discourse. The first five verses of this chapter foretell the kingdom of Messiah, the conversion of the Gentiles, and their admission into the Church. From the sixth verse to the end is foretold the punishment of the unbelieving Jews for their idolatrous practices, their confidence in their own strength, and distrust of God's protection; and moreover the destruction of idolatry in consequence of the establishment of Messiah's kingdom. The whole of the third chapter, with the first verse of the fourth, is a prophecy of the calamities of the Babylonian invasion and captivity; with a particular amplification of the distress of the proud and luxurious daughters of Zion. Chap. IV. 2—6, promises to the remnant, which shall have escaped this severe purgation, a future restoration to the favour and protection of God. This prophecy was probably delivered in the time of Jotham, or perhaps in that of Uzziah. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. The word that Isaiah — saw] That is, the vision. W. Lowth.

2. And it shall come to pass in the last days,] "The last days" signify in the Prophets, the times of the Messiah. This phrase by no means necessarily imports the speedy end of this material world; but only that, how long soever God shall suffer it to endure, He hath no subsequent dispensation in reserve: but hath fixed the Christian for that doctrine, and service, and trial, by which mankind are to express their obedience to Him, so long as there shall continue to be any state of discipline or obedience at all. W. Lowth, Dean Stanhope.

—— the mountain of the Lord's house &c.] From the situation of the Jewish temple on mount Moriah, a mountain is made to stand for the Christian Church: of the exaltation of which, and its wonderful prosperity and enlargement, this passage is a prophetical promise. Bp. Hurd, Jos. Mede. As we see the glorious characters here set forth in part brought to pass long ago, by the enlarging of the Messiah's dominion over the many and distant countries where His doctrine hath been received; so have we reason to embrace those gradual advances of His kingdom in men's hearts, as so many earnests and undoubted pledges of that absolute and unbounded conquest, which He shall make over ignorance and error, when the season of exerting His grace most plentifully shall come, and effectually prepare, as well as proclaim, the nearer approaches of His kingdom of glory. Dean Stanhope.

3. — Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord,] That is, Let us join ourselves to the Christian Church. The phrase alludes to the Jews going up in companies to Jerusalem at the three solemn feasts of the year. W. Lowth.

4. — nation shall not lift up sword against nation, &c.] Throughout the Prophets, the time of the Messiah is represented as a time of universal peace and godliness, in which the natures of men should be changed, and all malice and ill-nature rooted out. He Himself is called "the Prince of Peace," chap. ix. 6. The spiritual sense implies Christ's being the Great Peace-maker; who should reconcile both Jews and Gentiles to God, and to each other. But if we look upon this and the like prophecies, as foretelling the outward peacefulness of the kingdom or Church of Christ, they seem to relate to some future flourishing state of the Church, when, after having subdued all His enemies, He shall give rest unto His faithful servants, 2 Thess. i. 7. Dr. T. Burnett, W. Lowth. See notes on chap. ix. 5.

6. Therefore thou hast forsaken thy people — because &c.] This might more clearly be translated, "For this reason Thou hast forsaken Thy people, because," &c. W. Lowth.

—— they be replenished from the east, and are soothsayers &c.] Chaldea and Syria, situated to the east of Judea, were famous for pretenders to divination, &c. (see chap. xlvii. 13; Numb. xxiii. 7,) as were the Philistines, who lay to the west, 1 Sam. vi. 2. The Jews invited and encouraged these. W. Lowth. Now the consulting of wizards and diviners, as was practised by the nations of Canaan, paying any regard to those pretenders to Divine knowledge, or suffering such to live among them, is prohibited, Deut. xviii. 10—14; as also filling the land with horses, gold and silver, (ver. 7,) is in direct contradiction to God's command in the law, Deut. xvii. 16, 17. Dr. Berriman, Bp. Lowth. God there forbids His people the use of horses and chariots, Deut. xx. 1, 4. He promises that He will be to them instead. This law, therefore, was to be a standing trial of prince and people, whether they had confidence in God their Deliverer. He had taken the defence of Israel upon Himself, and, whenever the people took it out of His hands, they were sure to be undone. There was no moral evil in having a country full of horses, but the kings of Israel were exalted to the throne on condition that they should renounce such assistance, and depend on God for success in the day of battle. Joshua, the Judges, and David, observed this law; and Solomon, for a time; but in his reign things quickly changed; and his successors followed his example. Bp. Sherlock. See the notes on Deut. xvii. 16; Josh. xi. 6; 1 Kings x. 28; 2 Kings xviii. 20.

9. — forgive them not.] That is, Thou wilt not forgive them. The imperative is here taken for the future. See the like instances, chap. vi. 10; xxiii. 16; Zech. xiii. 7. God's judgments are sometimes foretold as imprecations: many of those in the Psalms may be understood as so many predictions. W. Lowth. See notes at Ps. v. 10. Ps. cix.

10. Enter into the rock, &c.] The remainder of the chapter is a prediction of some general judgment, ending in the utter destruction of the Jewish land and government. Such was that of the captivity: many of the expressions, however, are such as relate to the last judgment; for, all God's particular judgments being earnests of the last and general, the same expressions are common to both. Compare chap. xiii. 10; xxiv. 1; Joel iii. 15; Matt. xxiv. 29; 2 Pet. iii. 10. W. Lowth.

13. — upon all the cedars of Lebanon,] In many other places cedars of Libanus, and oaks of Bashan, are used, in the way of metaphor and allegory, for kings, princes, potentates; mountains and lofty hills, for kingdoms, states, cities; towers and fortresses, for defenders and protectors, whether by strength or counsel; ships of Tarshish, and works of art and invention employed in adorning them, for merchants, men enriched by commerce and abounding in all the luxuries and elegancies of life, such as those of Tyre and Sidon. Bp. Lowth. For ships of Tarshish, see notes at 1 Kings x. 22; xxii. 48.

18. — the idols he shall utterly abolish.] The captivity of the Jews had that good effect, that they scarce ever afterwards relapsed into idolatry; this prophecy was fulfilled in the Gentiles also upon their conversion to Christianity. Christianity is the reverse and direct opposite to idolatry; and we may observe, that whenever the Prophets speak of an entire reformation in the state of the Church, they mention the utter extirpation of idolatry out of it, as if that were one of the last enemies of God and His truth, that was to be destroyed, (see chap. xxvii. 9; xxx. 22; xxxi. 7; xlv. 16;) and the accomplishment of the prophecy accordingly will universally take place in that day, that terrible day of Christ's second advent, when He shall come to judge the world. W. Lowth, Wogan.

Idolatry is the reverse and direct opposite of Christianity. To destroy this was the great end of Christ's coming into the world. But, except He were God, the very and eternal God, of one substance with the Father, His religion would be so far from destroying idolatry, that it would be only a more refined and dangerous species of it. The Prophet, therefore, after describing the humbling effects it would have upon the hearts of all sincere converts, concludes all (that so he might acquit the worship of Christ from all charges of idolatry) with this positive assertion, that it would prove the most effectual means of putting an end to all false and idolatrous worship: "The idols He shall utterly abolish." The like conclusion we meet with in the first Epistle of St. John, where having affirmed that Jesus Christ is "the true God and eternal life," he immediately subjoins, and closes all with this advice, "Little children, keep yourselves from idols," 1 John v. 21. Wogan.

19. And they shall go into the holes of the rocks, &c.] The country of Judea being mountainous and rocky, is full of caverns; some natural, and some artificial and made for the sake of security. See Judg. vi. 2; 1 Sam. xiii. 6; xxiv. 3; Jer. xli. 9. Strabo, Josephus, and modern travellers, give accounts of the caverns, which are to be found in the neighbouring countries. Therefore, "to enter into the rock," &c. is to the Jews a very proper and familiar image to express terrour and consternation. Bp. Lowth.

20. — to the moles and to the bats;] They shall carry their idols with them into the dark caverns, old ruins, or desolate places, to which they shall flee for refuge; and so shall give them up and relinquish them to the filthy animals that frequent such places, and have taken possession of them as their proper habitation. Many travellers speak of bats of no enormous size as inhabiting the Great Pyramid. Bp. Lowth, Harmer. "Casting the idols to the moles and bats" denotes the utmost detestation and abhorrence. Wogan.

22. Cease ye from man,] That is, from valuing man. Compare, Prov. xxiii. 4. W. Lowth. This verse is a very apt and most proper conclusion to what is said before of the effect of Christ's coming, namely, that "the lofty looks of man shall be humbled." Happy indeed will be this effect of His first coming, if our pride be thereby humbled, and our lofty looks be brought down:

happy, I mean, if it precede; but fruitless, miserable, and vain, if it follow, His second coming, when the day of grace shall be past, and judgment be begun. Let us conclude, therefore, as the Prophet warns us, to "cease from man, whose breath is in his nostrils," that is, from trusting in mere man; "for wherein is he to be accounted of?" But let us hold fast the profession of our faith in Christ, who is not a mere man, having breath in his nostrils only; but hath life in Himself, yea, is Life itself, and therefore God as well as Man. Wogan.

Chap. III. ver. 1. — the whole stay of bread, &c.] Bread is commonly called the "staff of life," Levit. xxvi. 26; Ezek. xiv. 13. This judgment seems to relate to the siege of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans. See Jer. xxxvii. 21; Ezek. iv. 16. The following verses, 2, 3, are very clearly explained by the sacred historian's account of the captivity of Jehoiachin by Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Kings xxiv. 14. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

4. — I will give children to be their princes,] This also was fully accomplished in the succession of weak and wicked princes, from the death of Josiah to the destruction of the city and temple, and the taking of Zedekiah, the last of them. Bp. Lowth.

5. — the people shall be oppressed, &c.] The character of a weak government, where faction gets the better of authority, and every one does what is right in his own eyes. Bp. Hacon.

7. — I will not be an healer.] The expression seems to apply to repairing what is destroyed in a kingdom or state. Parkhurst.

—— in my house is neither bread nor clothing: &c.] He alleges that he has not wherewithal to support the dignity of the station, by such liberality and hospitality as the custom required of persons of superiour rank. See 1 Kings iv. 22, 23; Neh. v. 17, 18. The Eastern treasures anciently consisted very much in large quantities of clothing; and princes and great men now are obliged to have a large stock in readiness, for presents on all occasions. Bp. Lowth, Sir J. Chardin.

10, 11. Say ye to the righteous, &c.] Thus do the Scriptures represent to us the different condition of good and bad men, which is often true in this world; and, however that happen, will most certainly and remarkably be made good in the next. Abp. Tillotson.

12. — they which lead thee] Thy weak governours, called metaphorically, (as before, ver. 4,) "children, and women." The margin reads, "they which call thee blessed;" which may mean, the false prophets, who soothe thee in thy sins, and foretell nothing but peace and prosperity. Compare chap. ix. 15, 16. W. Lowth.

15. — grind the faces] The expression and the image is strong, to denote grievous oppression; but is exceeded by the prophet Micah, iii. 1—3. Bp. Lowth.

16. — wanton eyes,] The original gives, as the margin reads, "deceiving with their eyes," or falsifying their eyes. Though the colouring of the eyes with stibium, or al-cahol, the mineral commonly used for that purpose, be not particularly here expressed, yet I suppose it to be implied. See 2 Kings ix. 30; Jer. iv. 30; Ezek. xxiii. 40. The Chaldee paraphrase explains it so. This fashion seems to have prevailed very generally among the Eastern people in ancient times, and they retain it still. Bp. Lowth. See the note on Jer. iv. 30.

—— making a tinkling] Dr. Hunt well explains the word thus translated to mean, "skipping, bounding, dancing along;" and the same word used as a noun, (which occurs at ver. 18,) to signify those ornaments of the feet, chains or rings, which the Eastern ladies wore, and which made a tinkling sound as they moved nimbly in walking. Eugene Roger, and other travellers, speaking of Arabian women, mention them. Bp. Lowth. Rauwolff tells us, that the Arab women, when he saw in going down the Euphrates, wore rings about their legs and hands, and sometimes a good many together, which in their stepping slipped up and down, and so made a great noise. Sir J. Chardin says, that in Persia and Arabia they wear rings about their ancles, which are full of little bells. Children and young girls take pleasure in giving them motion, and with this view walk quick. Harmer.

17. — the Lord will discover] It was the barbarous custom of the conquerours of those times, to strip their captives naked, and to make them travel in that condition, exposed to the inclemency of the weather, and to the intolerable heat of the sun. This to the women was the height of cruelty and indignity, especially to such as are here described, who had indulged themselves in all manner of delicacies of living, and all the superfluities of ornamental dress. This is always mentioned as the hardest part of the lot of the captives. Compare chap. xx. 4; xlvii. 3; Jer. xiii. 22; Nah. iii. 5. The words, which describe the ornaments in the following inventory, as one may call it, of the wardrobe of a Hebrew lady, must, from its antiquity, and from the nature of the subject, be very obscure. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

20. — tablets.] In the original, as the margin gives it, "houses of the soul," mean perfume boxes. Bp. Lowth. Which refresh the spirits, and restore life to the languid. Vitringa. "Houses of smell," smelling or perfume boxes, appended by the ladies either to the necklace or girdle. Bp. Stock.

21. — nose jewels.] See Sir J. Chardin's note on Gen. xxiv. 22. His account is confirmed by other oriental travellers.

24. — instead of sweet smell] Or "perfume." A principal part of the delicacy of the Asiatick ladies consists in the use of baths, and of the richest oils and perfumes: an attention to which is in some degree necessary in those hot countries. See Cant. iv. 10, 11; Esth. ii. 12. Bp. Lowth.

—— instead of a girdle a rent;] "Instead of well-girt raiment, rags." Bp. Lowth.

—— and burning] The old English translation reads, "sun burning," by way of explication, namely, They shall be exposed to the heat of the sun, in slavery or transportation into foreign parts. W. Lowth. "A sun-burnt skin." Bp. Lowth.

26. — shall sit upon the ground.] This was a posture that denoted the deepest mourning and lamentation, chap. xlvii. 1; Job ii. 13; Lam. ii. 10. The passage seems to relate, in its more immediate view, to the destruction of the city by Nebuchadnezzar: however, Judea is thus represented on a medal coined by Vespasian, after the destruction by the Romans. They might have an eye to the customs of the Jewish nation. The Psalmist describes the Jews lamenting their fortune in the same pensive posture, Ps. cxxxvii. 1. Bp. Lowth, W. Lowth, Addison.

Chap. IV. The division of the chapters has broken off the Prophet's discourse almost in the middle of the sentence. The meaning is, "The numbers slain in battle shall be so great, that seven women shall be left to one man." The Prophet has described the greatness of this distress, by images and adjuncts the most expressive and forcible. Bp. Lowth.

2. In that day] This phrase often denotes, not the same time which was last mentioned, but an extraordinary season, remarkable for some signal events of Providence, called elsewhere by way of excellence, "the day of the Lord." Compare chap. ii. 11, 12; x. 20; xvii. 7; xix. 18; and see 2 Thess. i. 10; 2 Tim. i. 12, 18; iv. 8. W. Lowth. "In that day," the day of the blessed restoration of the Church. Bp. Hall.

—— the branch of the Lord] "The Messiah of Jehovah," says the Chaldee paraphrase. "The branch" is an appropriated title of the Messiah; and "the fruit of the earth" means the same great Personage to spring from the land of Judah; or perhaps the blessings consequent upon the redemption procured by Him. Bp. Lowth.

3. — that is written among the living] The phrase alludes to the registers which were kept of the Jewish tribes and families. See Ezra ii. 59, 62. W. Lowth. See the note on Exod. xxxii. 32.

4. — by the spirit of judgment, &c.] The phrase denotes the severe discrimination which God will make between the good and the bad, the pure silver and the dross, (see chap. i. 22, 25;) the better being purified, the worse consumed, in the furnace. See Ezek. xxii. 21; Mal. iii. 2, 3. W. Lowth.

NOW will I sing to my wellbeloved a song of my beloved touching his [a] vineyard. My wellbeloved hath a [a] vineyard in † a very fruitful hill:

3 And now, O inhabitants of Jerusalem, and men of Judah, judge, I pray you, betwixt me and my vineyard.

4 What could have been done more to my vineyard, that I have not done in it? wherefore, when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes?

5 And now go to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard: I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and break down the wall thereof, and it shall be † trodden down:

6 And I will lay it waste: it shall not be pruned, nor digged; but there shall come up briers and thorns: I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it.

7 For the vineyard of the LORD of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah † his pleasant plant: and he looked for judgment, but behold † oppression; for righteousness, but behold a cry.

5. — a cloud and smoke by day, &c.] This is a manifest allusion to the pillar of a cloud, and of fire, which attended the Jews in their passage out of Egypt; and to the glory that rested on the tabernacle, Exod. xl. 38. See Zech. ii. 5. Both passages mean, The visible presence of God shall protect the Church. Bp. Lowth.

6. And there shall be a tabernacle &c.] And whereas the Church shall be still subject to the scorching heats and tempestuous storms of persecution, God shall erect a safe tabernacle for her, to shade her from the heat, and shelter her from those violent tempests. Bp. Hall.

Chap. V. This chapter stands single and alone, unconnected with the preceding or following. The subject of it is nearly the same with that of the first chapter. It is a general reproof of the Jews for their wickedness: but it exceeds that chapter in force, in severity, in variety, in elegance; and it adds a more express declaration of vengeance, by the Babylonian invasion. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. Now will I sing to my wellbeloved.] The Prophet here speaking in the person of God the Father, directs this hymn, or parable poetically expressed, to His "wellbeloved," that is, Christ. See Matt. iii. 17; xvii. 5; Col. i. 13. W. Lowth, Dr. Wells. Our Lord Christ in the evangelical style is called "the beloved Son of God, in whom He is well pleased." The Church of those times is called here the vineyard of the Son, because, as the Father created all things by Him, so by Him He has always governed all things, and more especially His church. To this agrees that saying of St. Paul, that "Christ accompanied the Israelites in the wilderness;" and that of St. Peter, that "the Spirit of Christ spake by the prophets." Indeed, as the eternal Son of the Father, He presides over all things, "God blessed for ever," as St. Paul speaks, Rom. ix. 5; and has always had the peculiar care and conduct of the patriarchs and chosen people of God. Reading.

2. — built a tower in the midst of it, &c.] To contain all the implements necessary to the culture of the vineyard, and making of the wine. To this image in the allegory, the situation, the manner of building, the use, and the whole service of the temple, exactly answered. Our Saviour in His parable, Matt. xxi. 33, Mark xii. 1, has inserted the "tower," and the "winepress," or vat, as the word should perhaps be translated here, and as St. Mark has it. It means the large open place, or vessel, which, by a conduit or spout, received the must from the winepress. In very hot countries it was very convenient to have this place under ground, or in a cave "hewed" out of the side of the rock for coolness, (see the margin,) that the heat might not cause too great a fermentation, and sour the must. Bp. Lowth.

—— wild grapes.] Not merely unprofitable grapes, but noxious; as, in the explication, (ver. 7,) to judgment is opposed tyranny, and to righteousness oppression. Some of these were of a poisonous quality, as appears from 2 Kings iv. 39—41. Bp. Lowth. The Prophet may here mean the hoary nightshade, which is common in Egypt, Palestine, and the East; the Arabs call it "wolf's grapes;" it grows much in the vineyards, and is very pernicious to them; it likewise resembles a vine by its shrubby stalk. Hasselquist.

3, 4. — judge, I pray you, &c.] The case was so plain, that God might refer it to themselves, although they were parties concerned. W. Lowth.

Let every sinner thoroughly examine his own state and condition, what his natural powers and faculties are, what they are originally capable of, what additional means and opportunities he has had put into his hands to employ and improve them; and then let him shew where the fault lay, and who is to be charged with the evil of sin, and with the consequences of it. Dr. John Clarke.

8. Woe unto them &c.] From hence to the twenty-fifth verse, sundry vices are enumerated, which, as they brought temporal judgments upon the Jews, so at the bar of Christ shall exclude from happiness, and consign all that are found guilty of them to the woes and punishments here denounced: namely, the covetous and unjust; the drunkard and voluptuary; all that wilfully neglect, or impiously despise, the knowledge of God, as well the slothful ignorant, as the proudly wise; all that perversely confound the distinctions of moral good and evil. Hogan.

10. — one bath, — an homer — an ephah.] "A bath" and "an ephah" are the same measure, about seven gallons and a half; they contain but a tenth of an "homer," Ezek. xlv. 11. W. Lowth.

11. — strong drink:] See the note on chap. xxiv. 9.

12. — the harp, and the viol, &c.] Musick universally attends Eastern feasts. Harmer. Wine, and musick, and delicate fare, are such things as God in His goodness hath given to the children of men for their comfort; and they may use them lawfully, and take comfort in them as their portion: but he that uses any of them intemperately, unseasonably, vainly, or wastefully, abuses both them and himself: therefore we often find in Scripture, both the things themselves condemned, and those that use them blamed. Bp. Sanderson.

13, 14. — their honourable men are famished, &c.] As verses 9, 10, have evidently reference to ver. 8, so have these verses to the two preceding. As the houses of the covetous are to be left uninhabited, and the fields to become desolate, so they that indulged in feasting and drinking are to perish with hunger and thirst. Bp. Lowth.

14. Therefore hell hath enlarged herself, &c.] Habakkuk uses the same image with great force, in a comparison of the ambitious and avaricious conqueror, Hab. ii. 5. But hell, or the grave, is here introduced to much greater advantage in person; and placed before our eyes in the form of a ravenous monster, opening wide his immeasurable jaws, and swallowing his prey altogether. Bp. Lowth.

17. Then shall the lambs &c.] Their luxurious habitations shall become a pasture for flocks. Bp. Lowth.

18. — that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, &c.] That are not only drawn to sin by the allurements of the world, but are active and industrious in drawing sin to themselves, or themselves to sin: "with cords of vanity," that is, with vain and deceitful arguments and pretences, whereby sinners generally draw themselves to sin: "with a cart rope," that is, with all their might, as beasts commonly do, that draw carts with ropes. Poole, Bp. Hall. The cause is here put for the effect; "iniquity" and "sin" for the punishment which they provoke. The meaning then is, "Woe unto them who foolishly draw upon themselves the reward of iniquity; nay, set their shoulders to pull it forward, as a beast of burden does a cart rope!" Rosenmüller, Bp. Stock.

20. Woe unto them that call evil good, &c.] The Prophet compares the difference of moral "good and evil" presented to the human understanding with that of "light and darkness" discerned by the eye, of "bitter and sweet" tasted by the palate; that is, as a plain and undeniable truth which forceth its evidence upon a rational mind: to transgress God's commandments, His laws and statutes, delivered by His prophets, and confirmed by a series of miracles, was a heinous crime; but to "call evil good, and good evil," was to advance a step further in impiety, to lay the profane axe to the root of righteousness, to destroy all religion, natural as well as revealed, and to sink into mere atheism. Dr. Jortin.

22. — to mingle strong drink:] See notes on chap. i. 22; xxiv. 9.

24. — so their root shall be as rottenness, &c.] So they shall be utterly destroyed; and shall be as a tree, whose root is rotted, and whose blossom flies away like dust. Bp. Hall.

25. — the hills did tremble,] The Prophet refers perhaps to the great earthquake in the days of Uzziah, Amos i. 1; Zech. xiv. 5. Bp. Lowth. But the mountains and the earth itself are often said to tremble at God's judgments; (see Jer. iv. 24; Mic. i. 4; Nah. i. 5; Hab. iii. 10; Ps. lxxvii. 18; cxiv. 7;) which expressions may allude to the thunder which accompanies them; to the trembling of mount Sinai when God came down upon it, Exod. xix. 18; or, to the last general judgment. See note on chap. ii. 10. He says, "did tremble:" but the representing of a thing future, as if already accomplished, is very common with the Prophets. W. Lowth.

26. And he will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, &c.] The Prophets call distant countries in the popular language, as here, "the end of the earth;" the Babylonians may be primarily meant here, as chap. xxxix. 3; Jer. v. 15; and as the Medes, with respect to Babylon, are said (chap. xiii. 5,) "to come from a far country, from the end of heaven:" but the Prophet may also look farther, and the threat is probably to be extended to the desolation of Judea by the Romans; to whom the phrases used here will apply better than to the Chaldees. Vitringa.

Though the Babylonians lived at no great distance from Judea, yet many that composed their army did: indeed all foreigners were looked upon as living a great way off by the Jews, because they maintained but little commerce with their neighbours. W. Lowth.

—— and will hiss unto them.] "The metaphor is taken from the practice of those who keep bees; who draw them out of their hives into the fields, and lead them back again, by a hiss or whistle;" say Cyril and Theodoret. At chap. vii. 18, the metaphor is more apparent by being carried farther; there the hostile armies are expressed by "the fly," and "the bee." Bp. Lowth.

27. — neither shall the girdle of their loins be loosed,] The Eastern people, wearing long and loose garments, were unfit for action, or business of any kind, without girding their clothes about them: when their business was finished, they took off their girdles. A girdle therefore denotes strength and activity: to unloose the girdle, to deprive of strength, to render unfit for action: it was of course an essential part of a soldier's accoutrement. See, beside the passage quoted in the margin, 1 Kings xx. 11; Is. xiv. 1, 5. Bp. Lowth. See the note on Job xii. 21.

28. — their horses' hoofs shall be counted like flint,] The shoeing of horses with iron plates nailed to the hoof is quite a modern practice, unknown to the ancients, as appears from the silence of Greek and Roman writers, especially those who treat of horse medicine: for this reason, the strength, firmness, and solidity of a horse's hoof was of much greater importance with them than with us, and was esteemed one of the first praises of a fine horse. Xenophon, in his treatise on horsemanship, gives particular directions for hardening a horse's hoofs. For want of the artificial defence, which we use, Amos (chap. vi. 12,) speaks of it as a thing as impracticable to make horses run upon a hard rock, as to plough up the same rock with oxen. Bp. Lowth.

30. — they shall roar against them like the roaring of the sea: &c.] What speak I of the roaring of a lion? yea, these Chaldeans, which I will bring upon them, shall come roaring in like a mighty sea in a tempest; with such terrour, that all shall be filled with confusion; the earth shall be darkened with sorrow; and the heavens shall yield no glimpse of comfort to the distressed. Bp. Hall. See notes on chap. xiii. 10, 13.

From this chapter we perceive in what a special manner God blessed His people Israel; how they abused His gifts, and turned His grace into wantonness; and how He threatened to visit their sins with His judgments: the issue and execution of His threatenings we well know. The proper application of all this to ourselves is briefly hinted by St. Paul, "If God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest He also spare not thee," Rom. xi. 21. We, who succeed them in the spiritual vineyard, the Church of the true God, have no reason to flatter ourselves that our bad fruits shall be more indulged than theirs. But rather the judgments, which have befallen them, will make our disobedience the more inexcusable, if we commit the same sins, and are not afraid of the same punishments. Reading.

Chap. VI. ver. 1. In the year that king Uzziah died I saw &c.] As this vision seems to contain a solemn designation of Isaiah to the prophetical office, it is by most interpreters thought to be the first in order of his prophecies. But Isaiah is said (chap. i. 1,) to have prophesied in the time of Uzziah, and the phrase, in the year when Uzziah died, probably means after the death of Uzziah: as the same phrase (chap. xiv. 28,) means after the death of Ahaz. This might be a new designation, to introduce more solemnly a general declaration of the whole course of God's dispensations in regard to His people, and the fates of the nation; which are even now still depending, and will not be fully accomplished till the final restoration of Israel. Bp. Lowth.

—— I saw the Lord.] The Lord, whom Isaiah saw, was the Jehovah, and Lord of Hosts, ver. 3, 5; and St. John testifies, in the passage given in the margin, that it was Christ, and Christ's glory, that Isaiah saw: it follows, that, in St. John's account, Christ is Jehovah. Dr. Waterland.

—— sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple.] The ideas are taken from Eastern royalty; the Prophet could not represent the ineffable presence of God by any other than sensible and earthly images. The particular scenery of it is taken from the temple. God is represented as seated on His throne above the ark in the most holy place, where the glory appeared above the cherubim, surrounded by His attendant ministers. See Jer. xvii. 12; Ezek. xliii. 7. Bp. Lowth.

the other. Bp. Lowth. After some such manner was the Divine anthem of Moses sung, Exod. xv. 1, 20, 21. So we read, Ezra iii. 11, at the building of the second temple did the Priests and Levites sing together by course, in praising and giving thanks to the Lord: and this hath been the practice of the Christian church all along, and is still continued among us, as being the most easy and proper way for all sorts of people to join together in setting forth the praises of God, and the best means of keeping our minds intent upon the great work we are about, and to excite one another in the performance of it. Bp. Beveridge.

—— Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts:] The Christian church hath always thought that the doctrine of the blessed Trinity is implied in this repetition; it is intimated in several other parts of the Old Testament, particularly in the form of blessing, which God commanded the priests to use, Numb. vi. 24, 25, 26. W. Lowth. See notes on that passage.

"They are not content," says Origen, "to say it once or twice, but take the perfect number of the Trinity, thereby to declare the manifold holiness of God; which is a repeated intercommunion of a threefold holiness; the holiness of the Father, the holiness of the only begotten Son, and of the Holy Ghost." And that the Seraphim did really celebrate all the three Persons of the Godhead upon this occasion, is no conjecture; but a point capable of the clearest demonstration. The Prophet tells us, ver. 1, he "saw the Lord sitting upon a throne;" and at ver. 5, that "his eyes had seen the King the Lord of hosts." Now if there be any phrase in the Bible to distinguish the true God, it is this of "the Lord of hosts." That in this "Lord of hosts, sitting upon His throne," there was the presence of GOD the FATHER, no one will deny. That there was also the presence of GOD the SON, appears from John xii. 41: "These things said Esaias, when he saw His (Christ's) glory, and spake of Him." And that there was the presence of GOD the HOLY GHOST, is determined by Acts xxviii. 25; "Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers, saying," &c. then follow the words which the prophet affirms to have been spoken by "the Lord of hosts." Jones of Nayland.

The former part of that noble and sublime hymn, called the Te Deum, which is commonly used after the first lesson at morning service, is an act of adoration to the ever blessed Trinity, being a paraphrase on the song of the heavenly host, recorded here by Isaiah, and by St. John in the Revelation, chap. iv. 8. The same is likewise adopted by our Church into her office for the Communion. Waldo.

4. — and the house was filled with smoke.] Or, a thick cloud; the sign of God's presence, which filled the temple on extraordinary occasions, 1 Kings viii. 10. W. Lowth.

5. — the King, the Lord of hosts.] The same Spirit, which displayed this glorious vision to Isaiah, has given the interpretation of it by the Evangelist St. John. St. John tells us, that Christ was that Jehovah, whom the entranced prophet saw upon His throne; whose train filled the temple; whose praises were the theme of the seraphick song; whose glory fills the universe. According to the Evangelist, it was Christ's glory that Esaias saw: and to Him, whose glory he saw, the Prophet gives the name of Jehovah, and the worshipping angels gave the name of Jehovah God of Sabaoth. Bp. Horsley.

6. — having a live coal in his hand, — from off the altar:] Signifying the gift of utterance, represented by fiery tongues, (Acts ii. 3,) and the efficacy of God's word in the mouth of the prophets, compared to fire, Jer. v. 14; xxiii. 29. The use of fire likewise is to cleanse and purify: see the following verse. W. Lowth.

8. — who will go for us?] God speaks here in the plural number, as in the passage from Genesis referred to in the margin; which is justly thought to imply a plurality of Divine persons. W. Lowth. See notes on Gen. i. 26.

9. And he said, Go, and tell this people, &c.] St. Paul (Acts xxviii. 25, 26,) saith expressly, that it was the Holy Ghost who said this; which shews the personality of the Holy Ghost, in words as plain as can be expressed. Bp. Wilson.

10. Make the heart of this people fat, &c.] The Prophet speaks of the event, the fact as it would actually happen; not of God's purpose and act by his ministry. The Prophets are in other places said to perform the thing which they only foretell, Jer. i. 10; Ezek. xliii. 3. Bp. Lowth. Even a blessing foretold is said to come from the foreteller. Rosenmüller, Bp. Stock. All the expressions here used signify no more, than that God, for the former provocations and impenitency of this people, did leave them to their own hardness and blindness, so that they did not desire to understand, and make use of the means of their recovery.

Thus God often punishes great and notorious offenders, by permitting them to fall into temptations; which, meeting with a vicious disposition, are likely to be too hard for them, considering how by a long habit of wickedness, and wilful commission of sin, they have made themselves an easy prey to every temptation, and have driven the Spirit of God from them, and deprived themselves of those aids and restraints of His grace, which He ordinarily affords, not only to good men, but likewise to those who are not very bad. Abp. Tillotson.

This prophecy might relate in some measure to the state of the Jews before the Babylonish captivity; but it did not receive its full completion till the days of our Saviour; and in this sense it is understood and applied by the writers of the New Testament, (John xii. 40; Acts xxviii. 27;) and by our Saviour Himself, Matt. xiii. 14, 15. Bp. Newton.

11. Then said I, Lord, how long?] Namely, How long shall this obstinacy, and the punishment it will bring upon this people, continue? W. Lowth.

standing," in "seeing but not perceiving" the Messiah, after the accomplishment of so many prophecies, after the performance of so many miracles? And in consequence of their refusing to "convert and be healed," have not "their cities been wasted without inhabitant?" &c. Have they not been "removed far away" into the most distant parts of the earth? and hath not their removal or banishment been of now 1700 years' duration? and do they not still continue deaf and blind, obstinate and unbelieving? oppressed by men, and forsaken by God? Bp. Newton.

13. But yet in it shall be a tenth, and it shall return, and shall be eaten &c.] The Hebrew may be translated thus, "But yet in it shall be" left "a tenth, after it is" (or although it is) "again eaten and devoured," &c.; implying, that, notwithstanding the repeated judgments God should bring upon the Jews, still a remnant should be preserved; and the nation, as a tree, sprout out and flourish again from the old stock. "The Holy seed" is called here "a tenth," in allusion probably to the tithe under the law, set apart for, and consecrated to, God's service. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

—— a teil tree,] Is the same with the linden or lime tree. Dr. Johnson's Dictionary.

—— so the holy seed shall be the substance thereof.] So shall the remainder of the holy seed, which for the time seemed to lie dead, sprout forth into an abundant increase. Bp. Hall. This verse, though somewhat obscure, has been made clear by the accomplishment of the prophecy. When Nebuchadnezzar had carried away the greater and better part of the people into captivity, there was yet a tenth remaining in the land; the poorer sort, left to be vinedressers and husbandmen under Gedaliah. 2 Kings xxv. 12, 22; and the dispersed Jews gathered themselves together, and returned to him, Jer. xl. 12: yet even these, fleeing into Egypt after the death of Gedaliah, contrary to the warning of God given by the prophet Jeremiah, miserably perished there. Again, in the subsequent and more remarkable completion of the prophecy in the destruction of Jerusalem, and the dissolution of the commonwealth by the Romans, when the Jews, after the loss of above a million of men, had increased from the scanty residue that was left of them, and had become very numerous again in their country; Hadrian, provoked by their rebellious behaviour, slew above half a million more of them, and a second time almost extirpated the nation. Yet after these signal and almost universal destructions of that nation, and after so many other repeated exterminations and massacres of them, in different times and on various occasions since, we yet see with astonishment, that the stock still remains, from which God, according to His promise frequently given by His prophets, will cause the people to shoot forth again and to flourish. Bp. Lowth. See the notes on Deut. xxx. 1.

Chap. VII. The king and royal family being in the utmost consternation on receiving intelligence of the designs of Rezin and Pekah, Isaiah is sent to comfort them, by assuring them, that God would make good His promises to the house of David. This makes the subject of this, the following, and the beginning of the ninth chapter. Chapter vii begins with an account of the occasion of the prophecy; then follows, ver. 4—16, a prediction of the ill success of the designs of the Israelites and Syrians against Judah: and from thence to the end of the chapter, a denunciation of the calamities to be brought upon the king and people of Judah by the Assyrians, whom they had now hired to assist them. Chapter viii has a pretty close connexion with the foregoing: it contains a confirmation of the prophecy before given of the approaching destruction of the kingdoms of Israel and Syria by the Assyrians; of the denunciation of the invasion of Judah by the same Assyrians: ver. 9, 10, give a repeated general assurance, that all the designs of the enemies of God's people shall be in the end disappointed, and brought to nought: ver. 11, &c, contain admonitions and threatenings, concluding with an illustrious prophecy (chap. ix. 1—6,) of the manifestation of Messiah, the transcendent dignity of His character, and the universality and eternal duration of His kingdom. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. — could not prevail against it.] Yet they slew many of the people, and carried away many captives out of Judea, 2 Chron. xxviii. 5. W. Lowth.

2. — Ephraim.] This being the chief of the ten tribes, is often put for the whole of them. Bp. Newton.

—— his heart was moved,] The word translated "his" relates to the house of David. W. Lowth.

3. — Shear-jashub] This name, signifying as it is explained in the margin, may allude to the promise made, chap. vi. 13; it imports that God will never wholly cut off His people. W. Lowth.

The captives taken by the king of Israel (see note on ver. 1,) were accordingly very speedily sent home: from policy indeed more than compassion, to make friends among the Jews. Bp. Chandler.

—— of the conduit of the upper pool] There were two pools which supplied Jerusalem with water: "the upper pool," mentioned here and chap. xxxvi. 2; and "the lower pool," chap. xxii. 9. W. Lowth.

4. — for the two tails of these smoking firebrands,] Which are so far from being able to consume any thing else, that they are almost extinguished themselves. W. Lowth.

6. — the son of Tabreal:] Who this person was is no where said in Scripture; he may have been some potent and factious Jew, who had revolted from his master, the king of Judah, and stirred up this war against him. Dean Prideaux.

Some have thought a Syrian, set up by Rezin, whose interest and authority was chief in this matter. Vitringa.

8, 9. For the head of Syria is Damascus, &c.] The purport of this prophecy was to assure Ahaz and the house of David, that the kings of Syria and Israel should remain only the heads of their respective cities, they should not prevail against Jerusalem, and within sixty and five years Israel should be broken so as to be no more a people. This prophecy, respecting the utter ruin of the ten tribes, was completed, not in the first deportation by Shalmaneser, (2 Kings xvii. 6,) when the kingdom was abolished; but when the small remnant were overpowered by the numbers brought by Esar-haddon from Cuthah, &c. 2 Kings xvii. 24, compared with Ezra iv. 2: and Ephraim, who had been broken from being a kingdom before, was then broken from being a people. Abp. Usher, Bp. Newton.

9. — If ye will not believe, surely ye shall not be established.] That is, Unless ye believe this prophecy of the destruction of Israel, ye Jews also, as well as the people of Israel, shall not remain established as a kingdom and people; ye also shall be visited with punishment at the same time. This clause is much illustrated by considering the captivity of Manasseh as happening at the same time with this predicted final ruin of Ephraim as a people. The near connexion of the two facts makes the prediction of the one naturally cohere with the prediction of the other. The views of the Prophet might also extend to the destruction of the Jews by the Romans, according to that saying of our Saviour, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish," Luke xiii. 3. Dr. Jubb.

12. But Ahaz said, I will not ask, neither will I tempt the Lord.] The words of Ahaz, though they have a shew of piety, (see Deut. vi. 16, Mat. iv. 7,) proceeded really from despair and unbelief, as appears from the Prophet's answer, ver. 13. W. Lowth. He refused to make trial of the indulgence proffered, not because he believed without it; but because he had no confidence in it, nor value for it. Dean Stanhope. Perhaps the solemn offer (ver. 11,) staggered the doubting king; and even the presumptuous incredulity of Ahaz shrunk back at the thought of requiring from God Himself that extreme test of His veracity. Dr. Postlethwaite. To do what God commands is not to tempt Him; but Ahaz was tampering with the Assyrian for help, and depended on him, and not on the Lord, and for that reason declines doing what he is bid. Bp. Wilson.

13. — Is it a small thing for you to weary men, &c.] Is it a small thing for you to reject and contemn me, that am a man like yourselves; but will ye, with your hypocrisy and disobedience, provoke and abuse my God also, whose message I bear? Are ye not ashamed and afraid, under a pretence of piety, to refuse the gracious offer and command of God that sent me? Bp. Hall.

14. Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; &c.] Upon occasion of the terrible fear of the house of David, and the perverseness of Ahaz, refusing to ask a sign, though invited, it pleased God to afford the greatest and most comfortable sign of His mercy to the house of David in particular, and to all mankind in general: a sign, (not indeed exactly in the sense of that which was offered and refused, ver. 11, an emblem or proof of something to follow,) but, as the word is taken to signify in both Old and New Testaments, (Deen Stanhope,) a wonder, namely, the miraculous birth of Him, in whom all God's mercies were to be summed up. The ancient promise made on the fall of man is here repeated, the Messiah is promised to come in due time of the house of David; and it is here added, that He should be born of a pure virgin, and called "Immanuel," that is, "God with us," God and Man in one person; or, a Divine Being made flesh, and dwelling among mankind. The word translated "virgin" is so rendered by the Seventy, and admits of no other signification. Bp. Chandler, Dr. Lightfoot.

The whole passage, ver. 14—16, seems to consist of two distinct parts; the fourteenth and fifteenth verses appear to contain an express and literal prediction of the birth and character of Christ, "Butter and honey shall He eat," &c, signifying that His infancy should require the same tender care as that of the frail offspring of man. The sixteenth, to hold out a prophetick sign, the completion of which, so soon to take place, should give full assurance to Ahaz, and the house of David, that the preceding prophecy concerning the Messiah should in due time be punctually fulfilled. The Prophet plainly expresses himself in this order; Immanuel shall be born of a virgin, for the confederate kings shall be speedily destroyed. Dr. Postlethwaite.

15. Butter and honey shall he eat &c.] He shall have a true human body; and shall be sustained with that ordinary nourishment wherewith children are wont to be fed; and shall grow up in experimental knowledge, as well as in stature; and shall thus enable Himself, like us, "to refuse the evil, and choose the good." Bp. Hall. See the note from Fragments to Calmet on Job xx. 17.

—— that he may know to refuse.] Rather, till He know. W. Lowth.

16. For before the child shall know &c.] Some suppose the Prophet here to point to Shear-jashub, whom he is directed, ver. 3, to take with him; some think "the child" refers to Maher-shalal-hash-baz, (chap. viii. 3,) others to any child of that age. To express the shortness of the time, in which destruction should come upon the two kings, is Isaiah's object here; and, as he has in the preceding verses been mentioning Immanuel, and has Him in a manner before his eyes, he may be understood to say, "In so short a time as it shall take Him to reach years of distinguishing, shall the kings be overthrown." Vitringa.

18. — the Lord shall hiss for the fly &c.] See note from Bp. Lowth, ch. v. 26. Armies are often compared to flies, bees, and other insects, (Deut. i. 44; Judg. vi. 5; Ps. cxviii. 12; Joel ii. 25;) both for their number, and the destruction they make. The Prophet joins here Egypt and Assyria, the two great oppressors of God's people. W. Lowth. Sennacherib, Esar-haddon, Pharaoh-necho, and Nebuchadnezzar, one after another, desolated Judea. Bp. Lowth. As the conquest of Egypt by Sennacherib, foretold chap. xx, took place before his siege of Jerusalem, a great many Egyptians might be his auxiliaries. Abp. Usher.

19. And they shall come, and shall rest &c.] The Prophet pursues the same metaphor, and represents the foreign army as so many flies that lie in shoals in lower grounds, and as bees whose custom is to get into rocks; see Deut. xxxii. 13; Ps. lxxi. 16; implying that no place should be free from the enemy. W. Lowth.

20. — shall — shave with a razor that is hired,] The Assyrian is called a "hired razor," because God often rewards those whom He makes instruments of His vengeance upon sinners, which is expressed by giving them their "wages," Ezek. xxix. 18—20; see also 2 Kings x. 30. And Ahaz had hired the king of Assyria to assist him, 2 Kings xvi. 7, 8; 2 Chron. xxviii. 21. W. Lowth.

—— by them beyond the river,] By way of eminence, the Euphrates. See chap. xxvii. 12; Jer. ii. 18. W. Lowth.

—— the head, and the hair of the feet: and it shall also consume the beard.] The hairs of the head are those of the highest order in the state; those of the feet, or lower parts, are the common people; the beard, the king, the high-priest, the very supreme in dignity and majesty. The Eastern people have always held the beard in the highest veneration, and have been extremely jealous of its honour; to pluck a man's beard is an instance of the greatest indignity that can be offered. See 2 Sam. x. 4, 5. Modern travellers give instances to the same purpose. Bp. Lowth.

21. — a man shall nourish a young cow, and two sheep; &c.] The remainder of the chapter is an elegant and expressive description of a country depopulated, and left to run wild; the vineyards and cornfields, before well cultivated, now overrun with briers and thorns; much grass, so that the few cattle that are left have their full range and abundant pasture; so as to yield milk in plenty to the scanty family of the owner; the thinly scattered people living, not on corn, wine, oil, the produce of cultivation, but on milk and honey, the gifts of nature; and the whole land given up to the wild beasts; so that the miserable inhabitants are forced to go out armed with bows and arrows, either to defend themselves against the wild beasts, or to supply themselves with necessary food by hunting. Bp. Lowth.

23. — a thousand silverlings,] Or shekels, as the word is translated in Jer. xxxii. 9, and elsewhere.

25. — on all hills that shall be digged &c.] The sense will run better if we translate here, "All the hills that are (or used to be) digged with a mattock, that the fear of briers and thorns may not come thither;" (that is, to clear them from briers and thorns;) —"shall be for the sending forth of oxen," &c. Ground untilled naturally turns to pasture; therefore these and similar descriptions signify great desolation. Compare chap. xvii. 2; xxvii. 10; xxxii. 14. W. Lowth.

—— the mattock,] Hasselquist observes, that the inhabitants of Nazareth in Galilee "had no spades, but a kind of hoe or ground-ax." And Niebuhr says, that "instead of a spade the Arabs of Yemen make use of an iron mattock to cultivate their gardens and the lands in the mountains, which are too narrow to admit the plough." Parkhurst.

Chap. VIII. ver. 1. — Take thee a great roll,] The Eastern people roll their papers, and do not fold them, because their paper is apt to fret. Sir J. Chardin. The Egyptian papyrus was formerly much used; the brittle nature of it made it proper to roll what they wrote; and the practice may have been continued even with materials, which might safely have been treated in another manner. Harmer. It is directed to be a great roll, probably that the writing of the prophecy might be in large characters, obvious to all; and so most interpreters have understood the term, "a man's pen," to imply such characters as are in ordinary use. Vitringa.

—— and write &c.] The Prophet is commanded to record the prophecy of the destruction of Damascus and Samaria by the Assyrians; the subject and sum of which is here expressed with great brevity in four words, (explained in the margin,) which are afterwards applied as the name of the Prophet's son, who was made a sign of the speedy completion of it. And, that it might be done with the greater solemnity, and to preclude all doubt of the real delivery of the prophecy before the event, he calls witnesses to attest the recording of it, ver. 2. Bp. Lowth.

3. — the prophetess;] The wife of Isaiah is styled a prophetess, and the Rabbies maintain that she had the gift of prophecy. Dr. Gray.

4. — the riches of Damascus &c.] The completion of what is prophesied here, and above, chap. vii. 16, is recorded, 2 Kings xv. 29, 30; xvi. 9. W. Lowth.

6. — this people &c.] Though some refer this to Judah, it may be better understood of Israel. The gentle waters of Siloah, or Shiloah, as in the text, a small fountain and brook just without Jerusalem, which supplied a pool within the city, for the use of the inhabitants, is an apt emblem of the state of the kingdom and house of David, much reduced in its apparent strength, yet supported by the blessing of God; and is finely contrasted with the waters of the Euphrates, great, rapid, and impetuous; the image of the vast and mighty empire, which God threatens to bring down upon all the apostates of both kingdoms; to overwhelm Israel, and to bring Judah into such imminent danger, as is represented (ver. 8.) by that of a man who can but just keep his head above water. The Chaldee renders "reaching to the neck," by "reaching to Jerusalem." Bp. Lowth.

8. — of thy land, O Immanuel.] That is, even over that holy land, which is consecrated to Thy name, O thou Saviour of Thy Church, God and Man. Bp. Hall. A nobler difference could not have been put between Israel and Judah, than at the time that final and speedy ruin is denounced against the one, to give the other a solemn assurance of the birth of Immanuel. Dean Stanhope.

9. Associate yourselves, O ye people, — give ear, all ye of far countries:] The Prophet insults over the confederacy of Israel and Syria against Judah: he addresses perhaps all the enemies of God's people, assuring them that their attempts shall be fruitless, on account of the defence of the promised Immanuel, to whom he alludes, by using His name to express the signification of it, (ver. 10,) "for God is with us:" the most distant times and countries may be fitly said to be concerned in the admonitions here given; the import of which is, that the kingdom of the Messiah will prosper, though all nations combine against it. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

11. For the Lord spake thus to me with a strong hand,] The spirit of prophecy is expressed by the hand of the Lord being upon the Prophet; 2 Kings iii. 15; Ezek. iii. 14; viii. 1. W. Lowth.

——that I should not walk in the way of this people, &c.] The Prophet is commanded to arm those that heard him against the prevalent fears of the confederacy of Syria and Israel, and exhorts them not to join in the popular cry in that matter, which was full of despondency and distrust of God. The twelfth verse should rather be rendered, "Say ye not, A confederacy, of or concerning all them of whom this people, &c." Vitringa.

14. And he shall be for a sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling &c.] God and His promises, which should be men's refuge and security, become the occasion of mischief and hurt to unbelievers. W. Lowth.

——It is the Lord of Hosts who is meant here: but the prophecy is interpreted of Christ by the concurrent testimony of St. Peter and St. Paul: (see the margin.) Christ therefore is one with the Lord of Hosts. Dean Stanhope, Bp. Wilson.

——to both the houses of Israel,] This expression is sufficient to shew, that the Prophet enlarges his views beyond Rezin and Pekah's association, the immediate object of this prophecy; for then Judah and Israel were in different interests, but this verse speaks of them as involved in the same sin and punishment. W. Lowth.

16. Bind up the testimony, seal the law among my disciples.] The Prophets sometimes declare concerning their prophetical discourses and actions, that they were dark and as yet unintelligible, and should be more clearly understood about the latter times, in which they were to find their completion; chap. xxix. 11; Dan. xii. 4. It would be part of the Great Prophet's office to explain the sense of the Scriptures, and to remove the obscurity that was to remain on many prophecies till His coming. Bp. Chandler

God's faithful servants however, who depended on His word, would lay them up carefully in their memories: of this number Isaiah professes himself to be, ver. 17. W. Lowth, Dr. Wells.

18. Behold, I and the children &c.] See the Introduction.

Isaiah speaks here in the person of Christ as well as his own, as appears from the passage referred to in the margin. Dr. Wells.

19. — that peep, and that mutter: &c.] To "peep" signifies to cry as young birds; (Dr. Johnson:) see chap. x. 14; to chirp or whisper. Those who pretended to familiar spirits spoke inwardly and imperfectly, as if their voice proceeded out of the caverns of the earth. W. Lowth. See note on chap. xlv. 19.

—— for the living to the dead?] That is, Should they seek for the living to the dead? By this may be meant idols; (see Ps. cxv. 5—8.) opposed (1 Thess. i. 9,) to the living God; or allusion may be made to the heathen practice of deifying their heroes, inquiring after oracles, &c.; see chap. lxv. 4. W. Lowth.

20. To the law and to the testimony: &c.] If we would really do good, such as God Himself will accept of, we must not look to our roving fancies, nor to our carnal reason, but to the precepts of God Himself. This is the rule to square our actions by; this the test, whatever is suggested to us, from without or from within, to try the spirits whether they be of God or not; if any thing exalt itself against the obedience of this rule, it is no sweet impulse of the Holy Spirit of God, but a strong delusion of the lying spirit of Satan. Bps. Beveridge and Sanderson.

Chap. IX. ver. 1. Nevertheless the dimness shall not be such as was in her vexation, &c.] Yet, though this calamity shall be exceeding great, it shall not be utterly so extreme and disconsolate, as that former which the land of Israel shall endure, when Tiglath-pileser shall have miserably afflicted it, 2 Kings xv. 29; and when it shall have been conquered and wasted by Shalmaneser. Bp. Hall.

2. The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light:] There is a comfortable assurance of delivery in this miserable captivity: for behold, the Messiah shall certainly come, and by His doctrine and Spirit shall enlighten those that sit in darkness and the shadow of death, beginning His blessed Gospel in those utmost skirts of Galilee. Bp. Hall. The event is true and evident: as these lands had the first share in the calamity, from Assyrian invasion, 2 Kings xv. 29; so had they a prerogative in enjoying the presence of the Messiah. Jos. Medc. The Prophet is particular in naming Zebulun, to which tribe Nazareth belonged; and Naphtali, in which was Capernaum, situate on the sea of Tiberias; both which places were beyond Jordan. Bp. Kidder.

3. Thou hast multiplied the nation,] Namely, the true Israel; which God shall enlarge by adding daily to the Church such as believe the Gospel. Dr. Wells.

—— and not increased the joy:] The marginal reading, "Thou hast increased the joy to him, or to it," seems most agreeable to the context: if we keep the reading of the text, it may be translated by way of interrogation, "Wilt thou not increase the joy?" then follows the answer, "they joy before thee," &c. This various reading originates in the Hebrew, where the particle signifying not is very like, and often mistaken for, the word signifying to him. W. Lowth.

—— joy in harvest, — when they divide the spoil.] These expressions signify great rejoicing; see chap. xvi. 10; 1 Sam. xxx. 16. It is said to be before God, which denotes a religious joy, Deut. xii. 12. W. Lowth.

4. — the staff of his shoulder,] A staff laid across the shoulder, upon the ends of which slaves carried burdens. Parkhurst.

5. — but this shall be with burning and fuel of fire.] The word "this" is not in the original. The sense seems to be, that all instruments of warfare should be destroyed and become fuel for fire, as in Ps. xlvi. 9; where the image is employed to express complete victory and a perfect establishment of peace. See also Ezek. xxxix. 8—10. Bp. Lowth.

6. For unto us a child is born, &c.] The verse may be thus paraphrased: It is not for God's people to rest in the temporal deliverance from their captivity, but to erect their thoughts unto higher hopes, even the happy assurances of salvation by the true Messiah, who is to come into the world: For unto us that Child is born, and unto us that Son of God is given, who shall take upon His shoulder the perpetual government of His Church. Bp. Hall.

—— the government shall be upon his shoulder:] That is, the ensign of government; the sceptre, the sword, the key, or the like, borne upon, or hung from, the shoulder. See chap. xxii. 22. Bp. Lowth.

—— his name shall be called] That is, He shall be; for all this could not be the proper name of any one; the Messiah will be all this: it does not infer that he shall be commonly known by such title. Bp. Kidder. 'Tis the prophetick method, by the imposition as it were of a name, to declare the quality. Jos. Mede. Thus (chap. i. 26,) it was prophesied that Jerusalem should be "called the city of righteousness." Why? because, as was promised in the words foregoing, "God would restore her judges as at the first, &c.;" her manners should answer that title. See too, Luke i. 32, 33; it might be proved by a multitude of instances. W. Lowth, Dean Stanhope.

—— Wonderful,] In His birth; in His preservation from Herod and His other enemies; in the favour of God; in His mighty works; in His resurrection, His ascension, and the sending down of His Spirit upon His apostles, enabling them also to work miracles, as He had done. Reading.

—— Counseller,] As knowing the mind of the Lord. Bp. Chandler. Not unlikely called so, saith Dr. Knight, from His being one of that great council when God said, "Let us make man in our image." Bp. Wilson. See Chrysostom's observations at Gen. i. 26.

—— The mighty God,] The same title which is given to the One Supreme God of Israel, chap. x. 21. Dr. Waterland. This is the doctrine which the Evangelists, Apostles, and ministers of Christ constantly taught of Him, that He was God from all eternity. Reading.

—— The everlasting Father,] Or, "Father of eternity," or "of that which is everlasting," a title very applicable to the Messiah, whether we consider Him as "the Author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him," Heb. v. 9, or as the Founder of the new age, or world to come, the Head and Introducer of a dispensation which is to last for ever: agreeably to this last notion, the Septuagint, Vulgate, and others render, "Father of the age to come." Vitringa. The phrase might also be rendered, "the Father of eternity," that is, the Owner of it, the Everlasting; according to the Eastern custom of calling the possessor of any quality the father of it. Bp. Stock.

—— The Prince of Peace.] This name does in an eminent manner belong to Christ, inasmuch as He is the sole Mediator between God and man: the end of His coming was not to procure for His followers a visible earthly peace; but peace with Heaven, the peace of God. Wogan. The peace and tranquillity of Christ's government is however set forth by the Prophets in very pompous and magnificent descriptions, as here follows, "of the increase of His government and peace there shall be no end;" and as this is partly fulfilled in the inward joy and consolation, which is dispensed at present by the secret influences of the Holy Ghost, and in the conversion of many nations, that had persecuted and opposed it, this may be sufficient to confirm our hopes that it shall hereafter be more perfectly accomplished, and nothing left to disturb the peace and quietness of His reign. Dr. Berriman. Although Christ be indeed "exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour," though He have "all power in heaven and in earth," already vested in the human nature united to His own Divine person, and be at present "Lord of all," and of His Church in a more peculiar manner; yet is not that power so visibly and fully exerted as it shall one day be; nor all those glorious effects as yet accomplished, which the Prophets foretell, when describing the victorious and peaceful, the unlimited and everlasting, dominion of the Messiah. He actually reigns in the hearts of men even now, and by His grace subdues the enemies of our souls; but this empire is not so absolute as it shall be, when every enemy shall have been utterly destroyed. What period is fixed for the perfect and ultimate accomplishment of these things, as it does not seem possible for us to determine, so neither is it material too curiously to inquire. Dean Stanhope.

7. — upon the throne of David,] The Messiah is said to sit upon the throne of David, because all the promises concerning the perpetuity of his family and kingdom did chiefly relate to Christ, and were fulfilled in Him. W. Lowth. David was the shepherd of the natural Israel: Christ is the shepherd of the true Israel, enlarged by the reception of the Gentiles into the fold.

8. The Lord sent a word into Jacob,] Here begins, and ends with chap. x. 4, a distinct prophecy, addressed exclusively to the kingdom of Israel; divided into four parts, each the particular punishment of some grievous offence: after each is repeated a general denunciation of a further reserve of Divine wrath, used before by the Prophet, on a like occasion, (see the margin,) and making, as we call it, the burden of the song. Bp. Lowth.

10. The bricks are fallen down, but we will build with hewn stones: &c.] The Eastern bricks are only clay well moistened with water, mixed with straw, and dried in the sun. Sir J. Chardin. These bricks are properly opposed to hewn stone, so greatly superiour in beauty and durableness; the sycomores, timber of little worth, are with equal propriety opposed to the cedars; "with which," as Dr. Shaw remarks on this passage, "they can stand in no competition at all for beauty and ornament." We meet with the same opposition of cedars to sycomores, 1 Kings x. 27. By this figurative speech, the people of Israel boast that they easily shall be able to repair their present losses, (sustained perhaps by the first Assyrian invasion by Tiglath-pileser,) and to bring their affairs to a more flourishing state than ever. Bp. Lowth.

11. — adversaries of Rezin against him,] When the king of Assyria had subdued the Syrians, he made them join him in invading Israel. W. Lowth.

18. — it shall devour the briers and thorns, &c.] Briers and thorns are often put generally for the wicked, as useless and unprofitable, proper objects of God's wrath, to be burnt up. See chap. xxviii. 12; and the note on chap. xxvii. 4. Bp. Lowth, W. Lowth.

20. — they shall eat every man the flesh of his own arm:] This, and what goes before, signify that they should plunder and devour those of their own country and blood: compare chap. xlix. 26; Deut. xxviii. 53; 2 Kings vi. 28. Jeremiah in a similar passage, chap. xix. 9, has, "Every one shall eat the flesh of his friend." W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

Chap. X. ver. 3. — in the desolation which shall come from far?] From Assyria. The Assyrians were a distant people compared with the Philistines, Syrians, &c. with whom Israel was principally concerned. Vitringa. But see W. Lowth's note on chap. v. 26.

4. Without me they shall bow down under &c.] That is, Without my aid they shall be taken captive even by the captives, and subdued by the vanquished. Bp. Lowth. See the note on chap. ix. 11; others render simply, "among the prisoners," &c.

5. O Assyrian, the rod of mine anger,] Come hither then, O thou Assyrian, come and execute My just judgment upon My people; for thou art the rod of Mine anger; and the weapons, which are in thy hand, whereby thou fightest against Judah, are wielded by Mine indignation. Bp. Hall. Concerning the change in this verse from the second to the third person, see Bp. Lowth's note on Deut. xxxii. 5.

Here begins a denunciation of the judgments of God against the Assyrians in general, and against Sennacherib in particular. See ver. 12. Bp. Newton.

7. Howbeit he meaneth not so,] The Assyrian's design was purely to extend his conquests, and gratify his own ambition; but God, who bringeth good out of evil, makes the wickedness of some nations the means of correcting that of others; and the worst of men, in the worst of their crimes, the undesigning instruments of His righteous purposes. W. Lowth, Abp. Secker.

What a fine instance does the Assyrian afford us of the manner, in which Providence, using the instrumentality of man's free choice foreseen, causes all the schemes of worldly politicians to work together for the accomplishment of His designs, while they are only attending to their own interests! Bp. Horne.

Who can sufficiently admire the wisdom of Almighty God, who so ordered events, that the various instruments of Satan, who combined to bring about the death of our Blessed Saviour, did in fact each contribute to finish the great work of man's redemption, which some of them knew not of, others opposed, and none in the least intended! Dean Stanhope.

9. Is not Calno as Carchemish? &c.] Have not I been equally successful against all these places? "Calno" lay upon the Euphrates; as did "Charchemish," 2 Chron. xxxv. 20. "Hamath" upon the confines of the Jewish territory towards Syria, Amos vi. 14; where it is spelt Hemath. *W. Hamath was the capital of a part of Syria, bearing the same name; it was situate on the northern frontier of the land of Israel; whence we find frequent mention of "the entrance of Hamath," Numb. xxxiv. 8, &c. Arpad is with good reason held to be the island of Aradus, in the Mediterranean sea, which is not far from the shore, and nearly opposite to Hamath. Dr. Wells, Dr. Blayney. See the note on 2 Sam. viii. 9.

12. — when the Lord hath performed his whole work] When the wicked, whom God makes instrumental in carrying on His designs, have served the purposes of Divine providence, they are justly punished, for their pride and ambition, their cruelty and tyranny to their neighbours: the wickedness of those acts being altogether their own; and the good ends served being beside the intention of the agents, ver. 7, and ascribable only to God. W. Lowth, Bp. Newton. See notes on ver. 7. of this chapter, and on chap. xlvii. 6.

14. — opened the mouth, or peeped.] See note on chap. viii. 19.

15. Shall the ax boast itself &c.] Is not the Assyrian as My ax to hew down Judah, My saw to divide it, My rod to scourge it, My staff to beat it? and shall this ax, this saw, this rod, this staff magnify itself against the hand that useth and wieldeth it? as if the instrument could do aught without or against the arm that moves it. Bp. Hall.

— as if it were no wood.] Rather render, (as the margin does in part,) "against that which is not wood;" or, to keep still closer to the expression of the original, "against the no-wood." The Hebrews have a peculiar way of thus joining the negative particle to a noun, to signify in a strong manner a total negation of the thing expressed by the noun. So here it means Him who is far from being an inert piece of wood; is an animated and active being; not an instrument, but an agent. Other instances of this form occur at chap. xxxi. 8; lv. 2. See also Job xxvi. 2, 3; Amos vi. 13. Bp. Lowth.

16. — under his glory he shall kindle a burning] This expression denotes the stroke by which Sennacherib's army was to be destroyed. W. Lowth. See note at 2 Kings xix. 35.

20. And it shall come to pass in that day, that &c.] That is, A day shall come, when, &c. Bp. Wilson. See note on chap. iv. 2.

— shall no more again stay upon him that smote them;] As Ahaz did upon the king of Assyria, (2 Kings xvi. 7, compared with 2 Chron. xxviii. 20,) who afterward proved the worst enemy the Jews had. W. Lowth. To purchase his powerful ally's forbearance, as he had before bought his assistance, Ahaz was forced to strip himself and his people of all the wealth he could possibly raise. Bp. Lowth.

23. — the Lord God of hosts shall make a consumption, even determined, &c.] Such a consumption, determined in the counsels of God, with the preservation of a small remnant, will apply to several periods of the history of the people of God: to the subversion of the kingdom of Israel, with the destruction of a great number of Judah; (see note on chap. viii. 6;) to the Babylonish captivity; to the oppression of Antiochus Epiphanes: but the prophecy received then its ultimate completion, and its fullest intent was then answered, when the bulk of the Jewish nation was rejected, after their rejection of their true Messiah, and given up to the just judgment of God, exhibited in the desolation which the Romans brought upon them; with the preservation of the chosen and holy few, who had embraced the Gospel of Christ. Vitringa.

24, 26. — after the manner of Egypt.] As Sennacherib invested Jerusalem upon his return from his Egyptian expedition, and imitated Pharaoh and the Egyptians in threatening the people of God, so does God promise here to act over again the part He had formerly taken, and to overthrow Sennacherib in as signal a manner as He had done Pharaoh and his host in the Red sea. So both the attack and the deliverance are to be "in the way," or, "after the manner, of Egypt." Bp. Lowth.

The twenty-sixth verse may be thus paraphrased: The Assyrian is My rod to thee; but I will have a scourge for him, that shall plague him: as the Midianites were destroyed by Gideon at the rock of Oreb; (see Judg. vii. 25;) and as I plagued the Egyptians, whom I overthrew and destroyed at the Red sea. Bp. Hall.

27. — because of the anointing.] For the sake of God's chosen people, who are called "His anointed," Ps. cv. 15, and especially for the sake of Christ, or the Anointed emphatically so called, who was to descend from the tribe of Judah. Dr. Wells, W. Lowth. See note on chap. xlv. 1.

28. He is come to Aiath, &c.] Here follows a description of the march of Sennacherib's army, and of the terrour and confusion spreading through the several places in the neighbourhood of Jerusalem, from Ai northward to Nob westward of it; expressed with great brevity, but finely diversified. Bp. Lowth.

32. As yet shall he remain at Nob.] Hence probably he might have a prospect of mount Zion; and thus literally shake his hand against it; and stand in a threatening posture, as just ready to assault it. Bp. Lowth, W. Lowth.

Chap. XI. The Prophet had described, in the last chapter, the destruction of the Assyrian army under the image of a mighty forest, consisting of flourishing trees growing thick together, and of a great height; of Lebanon itself, crowned with lofty cedars, but cut down, and laid level with the ground, by the ax, wielded by the hand of some powerful and illustrious agent: in opposition to this image he represents the great Person, who makes the subject of this chapter, as a slender twig, shooting out from the trunk of an old tree cut down, lopped to the very root, and decayed; which tender plant, so weak in appearance, should nevertheless become fruitful and prosper. This contrast shews a connexion between this and the foregoing chapter. Here we have a remarkable instance of that method so common with the Prophets, and particularly with Isaiah, of taking occasion, from the mention of some great temporal deliverance, to launch out into the display of the spiritual deliverance of God's people by the Messiah. Thus in the latter part of Isaiah's prophecies, the subject of the great redemption, and of the glories of Messiah's kingdom, arises out of the restoration of Judah by the deliverance from the captivity of Babylon, and is all along connected and intermixed with it. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. — of Jesse,] By mentioning Jesse, who was not a king, but a private person, Isaiah seems to hint at the obscure and weak condition in which Christ should appear; His birth too was fixed to be, not at Zion, which was the place and seat of government in Judah, but at Bethlehem, a town where the family of David lived while they were private persons. Dean Allix.

2. And the spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him,] That is, as man He shall be endued with the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, without measure, and at all times. Dr. Wells. The characters here given to the Spirit which was to rest on the Messiah, are the same which we find in the Old Testament applied to the Prophets. Dean Allix. He being the Great Prophet, foretold Deut. xviii. 15, is described as more plentifully endued with these gifts than any other ever was, chap. xlii. 1; lxi. 1; Ps. xlv. 7; Joh. iii. 34; Acts x. 38. W. Lowth.

3. — of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord:] In things pertaining unto holiness, He shall lay hold of all opportunities of promoting true piety, and advancing God's honour: this exactly answers Christ's character of Himself, Joh. iv. 34. W. Lowth.

—— he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears:] He shall not judge after the appearance, but shall judge righteous judgment; as our Saviour speaks, Joh. vii. 24. W. Lowth.

4. — reprove with equity for the meek of the earth:] To afford protection to the poor and humble, is the constant character of Christ's kingdom; (chap. xxix. 19; lxi. 1; Ps. lxxii 2, 12;) to them the blessings of the Gospel are peculiarly promised, Matt. v. 3; James ii. 5. W. Lowth.

—— he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth,] The "earth" here signifies the ungodly, called by St. John, chap. vii. 7, xvii. 9, the "world;" who make the greatest part of it, and have the greatest share in it: the "rod of His mouth" signifies the "word of God," containing threats and judgments against sinners, which is said to be "sharper than any two-edged sword," Heb. iv. 12; and as such is described, Rev. i. 16, as proceeding "out of the mouth of Christ." St. Paul, in the passage given in the margin, applies this particularly to the destruction of Antichrist. See also Rev. xix. 21. W. Lowth.

5. — righteousness shall be the girdle &c.] The meaning is, that a zeal for justice and truth shall make Him active and strong in executing the great work which He shall undertake. Bp. Lowth. See note on chap. v. 27.

6—8. The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, &c.] The expressions here used are plainly designed to shew, in a figurative way, that there should be as great a change wrought upon the world, as there would be, if the natures of the creatures here mentioned were so changed, as the figures represent them. Dr. T. Burnett.

Men's former antipathies shall cease: and they who had used to be the most fierce and ravenous shall yield to the gentle discipline of Christ, and put on the humble spirit of His followers. The persecutions of the heathen world were broken off, when the princes of the earth gave in their names to Christ, and laid those sceptres at His feet, which had been formerly held out with rage and virulence against Him: and if some parts of the Church have since been overrun by barbarous crews of Saracens and other infidels, and if the world be not yet brought to the peaceable temper here foretold, or the Church yet at unity with itself, we must remember that divisions and the temporary success of Christ's enemies have been foretold, as well as His final conquest and complete tranquillity, and, being confirmed by what we see accomplished, look the more steadfastly to the accomplishment of those prophecies which are still to be fulfilled. Dr. Berriman.

Profane writers describe the renewal of the golden age, as it is called, much in the same metaphorical language as is here used by the Prophet: wild beasts grow tame, serpents and poisonous herbs become harmless; all is peace and harmony, plenty and happiness: but the most elegant of the ancient poets fall very short of that beauty, and elegance, and variety of imagery, with which Isaiah has set forth the same ideas. Here the wolf and the leopard not only forbear to destroy the lamb and the kid, but even take their abode and lie down together with them. The calf, and the young lion, and the fatling, not only come together, but are led quietly in the same band, and that by a little child. The heifer and the she-bear not only feed together, but even lodge their young ones, for whom they used to be most jealously fearful, in the same place. All the serpent kind is so perfectly harmless, that the sucking infant, and the newly weaned child, puts his hand on the basilisk's den, and plays upon the hole of the aspick. The lion not only abstains from preying on the weaker animals, but becomes tame and domestick, and feeds on straw like the ox. These are all beautiful circumstances, not one of which has been touched upon by the ancient poets. Bp. Lowth.

10. — a root of Jesse,] Christ is here called the "Root" of Jesse, as being the real ground or foundation of all the favours bestowed upon the family, the ultimate end and aim to which they were referred: the "Branch growing out of the root," ver. 1, because actually descended from that royal line: which may explain the twofold character He gives of Himself, Rev. xxii. 16. Dr. Berriman.

—— which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek:] This alludes to the Jewish custom of repairing to the temple at festivals; see Deut. xii. 5, and the note on chap. ii. 3. W. Lowth. It may be remarked here, that when the descent of the Messiah was limited to the tribe of Judah, it was still foretold that to Him should the "gathering of the people (or nations) be," Gen. xlix. 10; and now, where it is yet more precisely limited to the house of David, His kingdom is represented to be universal. Dr. Berriman.

—— his rest shall be glorious.] This is most commonly understood of His Church, where, as between the cherubim heretofore, God has His resting-place. Bp. Wilson.

What remains of this chapter foretells those glorious times of the Church, which shall be ushered in by the restoration of the Jewish nation; when they shall embrace the Gospel, and return from the several dispersions where they are scattered. This remarkable scene of Providence is plainly foretold by most of the Prophets of the Old Testament, and by St. Paul, Rom. xi. 25, 26; 2 Cor. iii. 16. W. Lowth.

11. — the Lord shall set his hand again the second time &c.] These words imply, that this shall be as great a deliverance as that out of Egypt: compare Ps. lxviii. 22; Mic. vii. 15. W. Lowth.

—— from Pathros, &c.] Pathros is a country in Egypt, Jer. xliv. 1; Ezek. xxix. 14. Elam, Persia; Shinar, Babylon, Gen. xi. 2. W. Lowth.

—— islands of the sea.] By this expression are to be understood, in the Scripture style, not only islanders properly so called, but all who dwelt on the seacoast, primarily, perhaps, those on the shores of the Mediterranean; all distant nations, which may best appear from chap. xlix. 1; Jer. xxxi. 10; all to the west of Canaan. These last were the isles of the Gentiles, to be peopled by the posterity of Japhet, Gen. x. 5; under this title of islands they are mentioned in all passages, where the extension of the Gospel to the Gentiles is prophesied of, with a view, no doubt, to the flourishing condition of Christianity in aftertimes in Europe. Vitringa.

The fact is notorious, that the Gospel, from the beginning to the present times, hath made the greatest progress in Europe, and in those parts of Asia which were first peopled by the posterity of Japhet. Among the uncivilized descendants of Ham, and the degenerate sons of Shem, it hath not been so generally spread, or hath not so deeply taken root. Bp. Horsley.

13. — the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off:] The Hebrew might be rendered, the "enmity" of Judah; and what follows, "Judah shall not vex Ephraim," seems to require that it should. Abp. Secker.

14. But they shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines &c.] The people mentioned in this verse were all of them borderers upon the territory of the Jews, and took all occasions of shewing their spite and ill-will against them: on which account, in the prophetick dialect they are often used in a general sense for the enemies of God's truth and people. Compare chap. xxv. 10; xxxiv. 5, 6; Joel iii. 19; Amos ix. 12. W. Lowth.

It is the style and genius of the prophetical books, to set whole countries, and kingdoms, and societies of men, to signify, not those places, and persons, and powers only, but others also who should be in after ages like them, in the same sins and circumstances. Dean Stanhope.

15. — the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea;] The word "tongue," when applied to the sea, signifies a bay, and is so translated, Josh. xv. 2; and xviii. 19. W. Lowth. Most interpreters apply the expression here to that bay of the Red sea, over which the Israelites passed. Vitringa.

Perhaps "the tongue of the Egyptian sea" may mean that part of the land of Egypt which was enclosed among the mouths of the Nile; the Nile being understood to be the Egyptian sea. This has at times been described under the semblance of a pear, and an heart, and also a tongue; all these objects having some analogy in their shape. Bryant.

—— with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river,

&c.] This plainly alludes to the passage of the Red sea, and refers to the particular circumstance mentioned Exod. xiv. 21. Bp. Lowth. Whether we understand the river here of the Nile, famous for its seven mouths, or the Euphrates, (see note on chap. vii. 20,) and suppose allusion made to Cyrus draining that river when he took Babylon, chap. xliv. 27; Jer. l. 38; the sense is the same, and imports the removing of all impediments that might hinder the return of God's people. See Rev. xvi. 12. W. Lowth.

Chap. XII. This chapter is an hymn of praise, proper to be used in the triumphant state of the Church, described in the foregoing chapter. Of the same use are chapters xxv, xxvi, and several of the Psalms. W. Lowth.

Ver. 3. Therefore with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation.] That is, from God's inexhaustible bounty, which is the fountain of all blessings in Jesus Christ: see Ps. xxxvi. 9; Jer. ii. 13. Bp. Wilson, W. Lowth.

On the last day of the feast of tabernacles, the Jews fetched water in a golden pitcher from the fountain of Siloah; brought it through the watergate into the temple, and poured it, mixed with wine, on the sacrifice as it lay upon the altar, with great rejoicing. This custom is not ordained in the law of Moses; and seems to have been taken up in allusion to this passage of Isaiah. Our Saviour applied the ceremony, and the intention of it, to Himself, and to the effusion of the Holy Ghost, promised, and to be given, by Him, John vii. 37, 39. Bp. Lowth.

Chap. XIII. This chapter and the next (striking off a few of the last verses of it, which belong to a different subject) contain one entire prophecy, foretelling the destruction of Babylon by the Medes and Persians; delivered probably in the reign of Uzziah, about 200 years before the completion of it. The captivity itself of the Jews at Babylon, (which the Prophet does not expressly foretell, but supposes, in the spirit of prophecy, as what was actually effected,) did not fully take place till about 120 years after the delivery of this prophecy; and the Medes, who are expressly mentioned, ver. 17 of this chapter, as principal agents in the overthrow of the Babylonian monarchy, by which the Jews were released from that captivity, were at this time an inconsiderable

The former part of this prophecy is one of the most beautiful examples that can be given of elegance of composition, variety of imagery, and sublimity of sentiment and diction, in the prophetick style: and the latter part consists of an ode of singular excellence. Bp. Lowth. Our margin sets the date of this prophecy a little later than the reign of Ahaz, namely, about the fifteenth year of Hezekiah.

Ver. 1. The burden of Babylon,] A prophecy threatening ruin, or some severe punishment. Bp. Wilson.

The word in the original is of more general import and signification: it sometimes signifies a prophecy of good as well as evil. Bps. Newton and Chandler.

2, 3. Lift ye up a banner &c.] The prophecy opens with the command of God to gather the forces which He had destined to His service against Babylon: upon which the Prophet immediately hears the tumultuous noise of the different nations crowding together to the standard; he sees them advancing prepared to execute the Divine wrath, ver. 4, 5; and proceeds to describe the dreadful consequences of this visitation, and the consternation which will seize those that are objects of it. Bp. Lowth.

2. — into the gates of the nobles.] To enlist under their several commanders. W. Lowth.

3. I have commanded my sanctified ones,] This signifies those whom God had set apart for His purpose. So He calls Cyrus His anointed, chap. xlv. 1, and Nebuchadnezzar His servant, Jer. xxv. 9. W. Lowth.

8. — their faces shall be as flames.] Black and ghastly, like smoke and flames. See Joel ii. 6; Nahum ii. 10. Bp. Wilson, W. Lowth.

10. For the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light.] When the Hebrew poets represent the destruction and overthrow of kingdoms, the stars are obscured, the moon withdraws her light, the sun shines no more; the earth quakes, the heavens tremble; and all things seem tending to their original chaos. See Joel ii. 10; iii. 15, 16; Amos viii. 9; Matt. xxiv. 29. Bp. Lowth.

All these high expressions are the peculiar and even natural language of the Eastern nations; no more, even at this day, would be understood to be meant by them, than that Babylon should be utterly destroyed, the government ruined, and the people severely treated. Bp. Wilson.

11. And I will punish the world] The Prophet suddenly transfers the speech from himself to God, and sets forth, under a variety of the most striking images, the dreadful destruction of the inhabitants of Babylon which will follow, ver. 11—16; and the everlasting desolation, to which that great city is doomed, ver. 17—22. See chap. xxi. 10, and notes there. "The world" here signifies the Babylonish empire, as it does the Romas empire, or Judea, in Luke ii. 1; Acts xi. 28. Bp. Lowth.

12. I will make a man more precious than fine gold;] Such shall be the destruction of men fit to bear arms: see the like calamity described, chap. iv. 1. Or the words may import, that the Medes should spare no man's life, though he could purchase it with gold; see ver. 17. W. Lowth.

—— of Ophir.] See notes on 1 Kings ix. 28.

13. — I will shake the heavens, and the earth shall remove &c.] The figurative language of the Prophets is taken from the analogy between the world natural, and an empire or kingdom considered as a world politick. The heavens and the things therein signify thrones and dignities, and those who enjoy them; the earth with the things thereon, the inferiour people. Great earthquakes, and the shaking of heaven and earth, are put for the shaking of kingdoms, so as to distract and overthrow them. Sir I. Newton.

FOR the LORD will have mercy on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel, and

17. — which shall not regard silver.] That is, shall not be induced by large offers of ransom to spare. It is remarkable that Xenophon makes Cyrus open a speech to his army with praising them for a similar disregard of riches: "Ye Medes, and others who now hear me, I well know that you have not accompanied me in this expedition with a view of acquiring wealth." Bp. Lowth.

18. Their bows also] The Persians were celebrated for their archery, chap. xxii. 6; Jerem. xlix. 35. (see note on chap. xxi. 2.) Profane writers mention the magnitude of their bows. Probably their neighbours and allies the Medes too dealt much in the same sort of arms. Bp. Lowth.

The Medes is a general name for both nations, and so used and applied by Greek historians, as well as sacred writers. Bp. Newton.

19. — Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency.] After Nineveh was destroyed, Babylon became the queen of the East. Semiramis is said by some, and Belus, who is probably the same as Nimrod, (see note on Gen. x. 9.) by others, to have founded this city. It was Nebuchadnezzar however that made it one of the wonders of the world; he enlarged and beautified it to such a degree, that he may in a manner be said to have built it, as he boasts, Dan. iv. 30. Dean Prideaux, Bp. Newton. It was, according to the lowest account given of it by ancient historians, a regular square forty-five miles in compass, enclosed by a wall two hundred feet high, and fifty broad; in which there were one hundred gates of brass. Its principal ornaments were, the temple of Belus, in the middle of which was a tower of eight stories of building, upon a base of a quarter of a mile square; a most magnificent palace; and the famous hanging gardens, which were an artificial mountain raised upon arches, and planted with trees of the largest as well as the most beautiful sorts. The old palace was four miles in compass; the new, built by Nebuchadnezzar, was four times as large. Two canals were made by Nebuchadnezzar a hundred miles above the city: one on the eastern side of the Euphrates called Naharmalcha, or the royal river, by which the Euphrates was let into the Tigris; the other on the western side, called Pallacopas, or Naharaga, (the river of the pool,) by which the redundant waters of the Euphrates were carried into a vast lake forty miles square, contrived not only to lessen the inundation, but for a reservoir, with sluices, to water the barren country on the Arabian side. There were also prodigious banks of brick and bitumen carried a long way on each side of the river, to keep it within its channel. Bp. Lowth, Dean Prideaux.

20—22. It shall never be inhabited, &c.] Babylon never recovered its ancient splendour after it was taken by Cyrus, but, upon the removal of the seat of empire from thence by the Persians, by degrees decayed till it was at last reduced to an utter solitude. Berosus in Josephus says, that Cyrus ordered the outer walls to be pulled down; the Persian kings ever regarded Babylon with a jealous eye: Darius Hystaspes, upon a revolt, greatly depopulated the place, lowered the walls, and demolished the gates; Xerxes destroyed the temples; the building of Seleucia on the Tigris exhausted Babylon by its neighbourhood, as well as by the immediate loss of inhabitants taken away by Seleucus to people his new city; a king of the Parthians soon after carried away into slavery a great number, and destroyed the most beautiful parts of the city. In more modern times, Jerome (who lived in the fourth century) mentions Babylon as nothing more than a chase for wild beasts to feed and breed there for the king of Persia's hunting, exactly agreeing with ver. 21; and later travellers, who have endeavoured to find the remains of Babylon, give but very unsatisfactory accounts, some taking what ruins they saw to be those of Nebuchadnezzar's palace, or the tower of Babel; others supposing them the remains of some more modern building. The place thereabouts is represented as overrun with serpents, scorpions, and all sorts of venomous and unclean creatures, agreeably to ver. 22. W. Lowth, Bps. Lowth and Newton.

20. — neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their fold there.] This is a proper representation of complete and entire desolation; for it is common in the East for shepherds to make use of remaining ruins to shelter their flocks in: and it implies a great degree of solitude, when it is said, that the place where great cities stood should be turned into pasturage, chap. xvii. 2; xxvii. 10; but it is predicted that the ruins of Babylon shall be fit for wild creatures only to resort to! Harmer, W. Lowth.

It is uncertain what creatures are meant by some Hebrew words in the following verses; particularly what the word signifies which our English renders satyrs. It originally means goats; in which shape evil spirits were supposed to appear; on which account our interpreters sometimes render it devils: see note at Levit. xvii. 7; 2 Chron. xi. 15; but here and chap. xxxiv. 14, it is rendered satyrs. Desolate and forlorn places were supposed to be inhabited by evil spirits. Compare Baruch iv. 35; Rev. xviii. 2. W. Lowth.

Chap. XIV. ver. 1. For the Lord will have mercy on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel,] However He may seem to desert them. Judah, whose deliverance from captivity was the immediate consequence of the revolution foretold in the last chapter, is sometimes called Israel; see Ezek. xiii. 16; Mal. i. 1; ii. 11: but the name of Jacob and of Israel, used apparently with design in this place, each of which names includes the twelve tribes, and the other circumstances mentioned in this and the next verse, which did not in any complete sense accompany the return from the captivity of Babylon, seem to intimate that this whole prophecy extends its views beyond that event. Bp. Lowth. And, generally, whenever the Prophets speak of the blessings to follow upon the return from the captivity, it is to be understood, that the beginnings of their promises are to take place in that temporary restoration of the Jewish state; but that their full and final completion is to be looked for only in the days of the Messiah. This is the key to open the meaning of all oracles on this subject; this the true light to guide us to the interpretation of the prophetick word. Vitringa.

The deliverance of Judah from captivity, which is here set forth, without being much enlarged upon, or greatly amplified, introduces, with the greatest ease and the utmost propriety, the triumphant song on the overthrow of the Babylonian monarchy, ver. 4—28. Bp. Lowth. This passage (ver. 4—28.) contains a greater assemblage of sublime ideas, of bold and daring figures, than is perhaps any where else to be met with. Dr. Blair.

—— strangers shall be joined with them, &c.] It is probable that many strangers might become proselytes to the Jewish religion during the captivity. W. Lowth.

History indeed bears testimony to a partial completion of even the most literal sense of this prophecy, as the Jews brought back with them from Babylon some thousands of slaves; and afterwards, for a time, under the prosperous government of the Asmonean princes, held their neighbours and ancient enemies in subjection: but we must look farther to the spiritual completion: this and similar descriptions do import the conversion of whole nations and all nations to the true religion; and consequently could not be completed in the proselyting only of a few particular persons, but must intend a general reduction of all people to the same obedience. See notes on chap. xlv. 14; xlix. 23. Vitringa, Dr. Berriman.

4. — shall take up this proverb] The word thus translated signifies not only a proverbial speech, but an acute and excellent saying, drawn up with art, and adorned with rhetorical figures. W. Lowth. See Bp. Lowth's note on Job xxvii. 1; and Abp. Newcome's on Numb. xxiii. 7.

—— and say, How hath the oppressor ceased! &c.] A chorus of Jews is here introduced, expressing their surprise and astonishment at the sudden downfal of Babylon, and the great reverse of fortune that had befallen the tyrant, who, like his predecessors, had oppressed his own, and harassed the neighbouring kingdoms. These oppressed kingdoms, or their rulers, are represented under the image of the fir trees and cedars of Libanus, frequently used to express any thing in the political or religious world that is supereminently great and majestick: the whole earth shouteth for joy; the cedars of Libanus utter a severe taunt over the fallen tyrant, and boast their security now he is no more. Bp. Lowth.

9. Hell from beneath is moved for thee &c.] See notes on Gen. xxxvii. 35; and Job xxvi. 5, 6. The scene is here changed, and a new set of persons is introduced: the regions of the dead are laid open, and hades is represented as rousing up the shades of the departed monarchs; they rise from their thrones to meet the king of Babylon at his coming, and insult him on his being reduced to the same estate of impotence and dissolution with themselves. This is one of the boldest figures that ever was attempted in poetry, and is executed with astonishing brevity and perspicuity, and with that peculiar force, which in a great subject naturally results from both. This image of the state of the dead is taken from the Eastern custom of burying, those at least of higher rank, in large sepulchral vaults hewn in the rock. Maundrell mentions remains of sepulchres of this kind at Jerusalem, said to be the sepulchres of the kings of Judah. Travellers tell us of similar monuments in Persia; mentioned by Diodorus Siculus as sepulchres of the kings of Persia. We must form to ourselves an idea of an immense subterraneous vault, a vast gloomy cavern, all round the sides of which there are cells to receive the dead bodies; here the deceased monarchs lie, in a distinguished sort of state, each on his couch with his arms beside him, and his sword at his head; see Ezek. xxxii. 27; on which place Chardin remarks, that this is the custom in Mingrelia. These illustrious shades rise at once from their couches, as from their thrones, and advance to the entrance of the cavern, to meet the king of Babylon, and to receive him with insults on his fall. Bp. Lowth.

12. How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer,] Princes and rulers are figuratively expressed by the host of heaven; and the king of Babylon, who outshone others, is here represented by the morning star: see notes on chap. xiii. 13. The expression likewise alludes to the fall of Satan, prince of the apostate angels, Luke x. 18. W. Lowth.

The Jews now resume the speech: they address the king of Babylon, as the morning star fallen from heaven, as the first in splendour and dignity in the political world fallen from his high state: they introduce him as uttering the most extravagant vaunts of his power and ambitious designs in his former glory: these are strongly contrasted in the close with his present low and abject condition. Bp. Lowth.

13. — I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north:] This is mount Sion, or rather mount Moriah on the north side of it, on which the temple was built. It might better be rendered "mount of the convention;" so called, not because the people assembled there to perform their religious cere-also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north:

14 I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the most High.

15 Yet thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit.

16 They that see thee shall narrowly look upon thee, and consider thee, saying, Is this the man that made the earth to tremble, that did shake kingdoms;

17 That made the world as a wilderness, and destroyed the cities thereof; that ‖ opened not the house of his prisoners?

‖ Or, did not let his prisoners loose homeward.

18 All the kings of the nations, even all of them, lie in glory, every one in his own house.

19 But thou art cast out of thy grave like an abominable branch, and as the raiment of those that are slain, thrust through with a sword, that go down to the stones of the pit; as a carcase trodden under feet.

monies, but because God there manifested Himself, as He had before appointed to meet the people in the tabernacle, Exod. xxix. 43. This perhaps only literally explains what was figuratively expressed in the former part of the verse; "heaven" and the "stars of God" standing, according to the Eastern manner, for the sanctuary and God's ministers. Vitringa.

16. They that see thee shall narrowly look upon thee, and consider thee,] Certain persons are introduced here, who light upon the corpse of the king of Babylon, cast out, and lying naked on the bare ground, covered with wounds, and so disfigured, that it is some time before they know him. They accost him with the severest taunts, and bitterly reproach him with his ambition and cruelty, which have deservedly brought on him this ignominious treatment, so different from that which those of his rank usually meet with, and so full of disgrace to his posterity. Bp. Lowth.

18. — every one in his own house.] That is, in his sepulchre. So the grave is called the "long home," as our translation well expresses it. Eccles. xii. 5. W. Lowth.

19. — like an abominable branch.] Fit for nothing but to rot on the ground. W. Lowth. Or, we may understand him compared to the tree on which a malefactor had been hanged. The Jews held this an object of abomination, and covered it with earth, together with the malefactor. Bp. Lowth.

—— the raiment of those that are slain.] The touching of such clothes did contract uncleanness by the law, Numb. xix. 16. W. Lowth.

21. — that they do not rise,] The Persian monarchs took care to prevent Babylon's recovering its former greatness: the Jews were first brought to Babylon to people and strengthen it; and the weakening and dispeopling of it might be one reason for their being sent back. Bp. Lowth, Dean Prideaux.

22. For I will rise up against them, saith the Lord of hosts, &c.] To complete the whole, God is here introduced, declaring the fate of Babylon, the utter extirpation of the royal family, and the total desolation of the city; the deliverance of His people, and the destruction of their enemies; confirming the irreversible decree by the awful sanction of His oath. Bp. Lowth.

—— nephew,] The same Hebrew word is translated, Gen. xxi. 23, "son's son," and so it should be here. It may mean Evil-merodach, (Nebuchadnezzar the great king of Babylon's son,) and Belshazzar. See Jer. xxvii. 6, 7. Dean Prideaux, W. Lowth.

23. I will also make it a possession for the bittern, and pools of water:] Cyrus took the city of Babylon, by diverting the water of the Euphrates, which ran through the midst of it, and entering the place at night by the channel. It was two furlongs wide; but he had made it fordable by means of the lake, (see note on chap. xiii. 19,) and trenches which he had prepared. The river being thus turned, by the breaking down of dams and banks, and no care taken afterwards to repair the breach, all the country was overflowed and drowned, and ultimately a whole province lost. Alexander, who intended to have made Babylon the seat of his empire, set about remedying the mischief; but difficulties arising, he soon after dying, and the work being never more thought of, that country has remained bog and marsh ever since. Bp. Lowth, Dean Prideaux.

25. — I will break the Assyrian in my land, and upon my mountains tread him under foot:] The Assyrians and Babylonians are mentioned as the same people by profane authors: and see 2 Kings xxiii. 29; 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11. But the circumstance of this judgment being to be executed on God's mountains, is of importance; it may mean the destruction of Sennacherib's army near Jerusalem; but probably has still a further view to some remarkable enemies of God's church; see notes on chap. xi. 14. Bp. Lowth, W. Lowth.

27. For the Lord of hosts &c.] I believe it may with truth be affirmed, that there is no poem of its kind, extant in any language, in which the subject is so well laid out, and so happily conducted, with such a richness of invention, with such variety of images, persons, and distinct actions, with such rapidity and ease of transition, in so small a compass, as in this ode of Isaiah. For beauty of disposition, strength of colouring, greatness of sentiment, brevity, perspicuity, and force of expression, it stands among all the monuments of antiquity unrivalled. Bp. Lowth.

—— the rod of him that smote thee is broken:] Or rather, The rod that smote thee is broken. It would be most natural and obvious to suppose Ahaz meant here, whose death seems to have given rise to the rejoicing of the Philistines. But as we learn from 2 Chron. xxviii. 18, that during his reign the Philistines rather gained ground upon the Jews, than were smitten by them, we may conclude that Uzziah, who had warred successfully against the Philistines, is meant by the "rod that smote them," and "the serpent," from whom should spring the "fiery flying serpent." This last must mean Hezekiah, who was great grandson to Uzziah, and is thus described as a more terrible enemy than he had been. See 2 Kings xviii. 8. Vitringa, Bp. Lowth. Hezekiah not only regained all the cities of Judah which the Philistines had seized during the time when Pekah and Rezin distressed the land, but also dispossessed them of almost all their own country. Dean Prideaux.

—— a fiery flying serpent.] See notes on chap. xxx. 6; Numb. xxi. 6.

31. — there shall come from the north a smoke,] Smoke and fire are emblems of God's wrath, and of great calamities. See Gen. xv. 17; Ps. xviii. 8. W. Lowth.

32. What shall one then answer the messengers of the nation?] Namely, that sends to congratulate the Jews upon their victories? that the Lord is their protector. Bp. Wilson. See 2 Chron. xxxii. 23. The Septuagint and Chaldee give the plural, "nations." Bp. Lowth.

Chap. XV. This and the following chapter, taken together, make one entire prophecy. The time of the delivery of it, and consequently of the completion, which was to be in three years from that time, is uncertain. But the most probable account is, that it was delivered soon after the foregoing, in the first year of Hezekiah, and accomplished in his fourth year, when Shalmaneser invaded the kingdom of Israel: he might probably march through Moab, and, to secure every thing behind him, possess himself of the whole country by taking their principal strong places, Ar and Kivhares, or Kirhareseth, chap. xvi. 7. Bp. Lowth, Abp. Usher.

Jeremiah has happily introduced much of this prophecy of Isaiah into his own larger prophecy against the same people, chap. xlviii. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. — Because in the night Ar of Moab is laid waste, and brought to silence; because &c.] We should rather translate,

"Because in the night Ar is destroyed, Moab is undone!"
"Because in the night Kir is destroyed, Moab is undone!"
Bp. Lowth.

2. He is gone to Bajith, and to Dibon,] "He" is used for the people of Moab. "Bajith" and "Dibon" are in the Chaldee and Syriack versions made into the name of one place; Beth-Dibon: Beth may signify the house or temple of an idol. Bp. Lowth, W. Lowth.

An image singularly expressive. Dr. Blayney.

—— for I will bring more &c.] I will bring more and more calamities; and they that fly to escape the present evils, shall fall into worse; as if a man that fled from his enemy should meet a lion to destroy him; see Jer. xlviii. 44; Amos v. 19. W. Lowth. The additional calamities threatened here to fall upon Moab may perhaps relate to that which Nebuchadnezzar was to bring upon them, of which Jeremiah prophesies. Vitringa.

Chap. XVI. ver. 1. Send ye the lamb &c.] The Moabites were subdued by David, and became his tributaries, 2 Sam. viii. 2. The king of Moab is said to send 100,000 lambs, 2 Kings iii. 4. To something of this kind the Prophet may allude here, and exhort the Moabites to renew to the heir of David's family an acknowledgment which probably had been discontinued. "Sela to the wilderness" should rather be translated, Sela in the wilderness. See 2 Kings xiv. 7. W. Lowth.

It is a custom of the East for the poor people to make presents of lambs and sheep to their lords, as an offering or tribute. Sir J. Chardin.

2. — the daughters of Moab shall be at the fords of Arnon.] Endeavouring to seek their lodging in foreign parts. Bp. Hall.

3. — make thy shadow as the night &c.] The Prophet speaks by way of advice to the Moabites, to shew kindness to their brethren the Jews, as in reason and justice they ought, in the time of their distress: adding however that there should be no great occasion for their help, as God Himself would preserve them. W. Lowth, Dr. Wells.

4. — for the extortioner is at an end, &c.] This applies perhaps to the Israelites, who in Ahaz's time invaded Judah, 2 Chron. xxviii. 5, 6. With those former times of distress is contrasted the security and flourishing state of the kingdom under Hezekiah, who should govern with an equal mixture of justice and mercy, and therein prefigure the Messiah. Bp. Lowth, W. Lowth.

6. — but his lies shall not be so.] That is, The predictions of such as take upon them to foretell things shall not have events agreeable to their pride and wrath. Dr. Wells.

8. — they are come even unto Jazer, &c.] The plants of the celebrated "vine of Sibmah" are described as propagated over all the neighbouring country: Jazer was in the north border of Moab; the wilderness of Moab lay to the east of that country, (Numb. xxi. 23,) and by "the sea" no other can well be understood but the Dead sea, which was southwest. Dr. Blayney. Perhaps the meaning of the words, "are gone over the sea," is, that these vines were not only in great request in the country of Moab, but had scions of them sent beyond sea, into foreign countries. Bp. Lowth.

Some interpreters suppose, that by the "vine of Sibmah" is meant the state of Moab, and its principal men by the "principal plants;" but these may better be taken literally. The vines and the pastures (chap. xv. 6) formed the chief excellence of the country; and the Prophet accordingly foretells the destruction of those things, the loss of which would most affect the people. Vitringa.

9. — I will bewail with the weeping of Jazer &c.] That is, with a general lamentation, such as shall be heard from the uttermost skirts of the land. Bp. Hall.

—— for the shouting &c.] The word in the original signifies loud shouting, either as of men treading grapes, (ver. 10, and Jer. xxv. 30,) or of soldiers encouraging one another to battle or plunder, Jer. li. 14. And in this latter view the learned Vitringa understands the word in this place: "for upon thy summer fruits and upon thy harvest the shout (that is, of plundering and destroying enemies) is fallen." Compare Jer. xlviii. 32. Parkhurst. See the marginal translation. Or the sense may be, according to the translation in the text, The joy and acclamations, that were wont to be at the gathering of thy summer fruits, and for thy plentiful harvest, are now at an end, and shall be heard no more. *Bp. 13. — since that time.] Rather, a good while ago: so the same particle is rendered, chap. xlviii. 3, 5. It is now confirmed, and the particular time specified when it shall be accomplished, ver. 14. W. Lowth.

14. — three years, as the years of an hireling,] See Deut. xv. 18. W. Lowth.

Chap. XVII. ver 1. — Damascus is taken away from being a city.] This prophecy was probably delivered soon after those of the seventh and eighth chapters, in the beginning of the reign of Ahaz; and was fulfilled by Tiglath-pileser's taking Damascus, and carrying the people captives to Kir, 2 Kings xvi. 9. Bp. Lowth.

2. — they shall be for flocks, &c.] See note on chap. vii. 23.

3. The fortress also shall cease from Ephraim,] The burden of Damascus naturally brings the Prophet to speak of the subversion of the kingdom of Israel, in those days in alliance with the Syrians, chap. vii. 1, 2, and to be overthrown by the same enemy, at the same time, chap. viii 4. Bp. Horsley. This chapter treats indeed more largely of the Israelites than of the Syrians; and with regard to them was the prophecy more fully completed, by the conquest of the kingdom, and captivity of the people, effected a few years later by Shalmaneser. Bp. Lowth.

5. — the valley of Rephaim.] The valley of Rephaim near Jerusalem, celebrated for its plentiful harvests, is here used poetically for any fruitful country. Bp. Lowth.

6. — as the shaking of an olive tree,] The former verse was an illustration of Israel's entire destruction from the ridding of fields in the corn harvest: compare Jer. li. 33; Hos. vi. 11. Here the metaphor is taken from the gathering of the summer fruits, and the remnant compared to the few berries left on an olive tree that has been beaten by its owner, to be shaken off by the poor. See Deut. xxiv. 20. W. Lowth, Harmer.

Agreeably to the promise here made of a remnant, we find that some of the ancient inhabitants of the ten tribes were left after Shalmaneser's captivity, and even after that of Esar-haddon; and some turned to serve the true God, as predicted ver. 7, 8. See 2 Chron. xxx. 10, 11; xxxv. 18. W. Lowth.

10, 11. — therefore shalt thou plant pleasant plants, &c.] The pleasant plants, and shoots from a foreign soil, are allegorical expressions for strange and idolatrous worship; vicious and abominable practices connected with it; reliance on human aid, and on alliances entered into with the neighbouring countries, especially Egypt; to all which the Israelites were greatly addicted, and in their expectations from which they should be grievously disappointed. Bp. Lowth.

11. — in the morning shalt thou make] When the Hebrews would signify doing a thing speedily, with care and diligence, they often thus express it. See chap. l. 4; and Ps. xlvi. 5. W. Lowth.

CHAP. XVIII. This is one of the most obscure prophecies of Isaiah: the end and design of it, the people to whom it is addressed, the person who sends the messengers, and the nation to whom the messengers are sent, are all doubtful. Bp. Lowth. It has been considered as such by the whole succession of interpreters. Most have assumed, that the principal matter of the prophecy is a woe or judgment; that the object of this woe is Egypt, or some contiguous country; that the time of the execution of the judgment was at hand, when the prophecy was delivered. It appears to me, that the principal matter of the prophecy is a promise of the final restoration of the Israelites; that it has no respect to Egypt or any of the contiguous countries; that the time of its completion is yet future, being indeed the season of the second advent of our Lord. Bp. Horsley.

Ver. 1. Woe to the land] The Hebrew particle here used does not necessarily imply a threat, is sometimes an exclamation of surprise, and often simply compellative of persons at a distance. It may be rendered, "Ho! land," or, "Ho to the land," &c. Bp. Horsley, Vitringa, Bp. Lowth.

—— land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia:] The mention of the rivers of Ethiopia has led almost all expositors to look to Egypt as the country addressed. Some have understood by the wings of Egypt, ridges of mountains running from south to north, on either side of the Nile, somewhat resembling a pair of pinions; others take the wings for the sails of numerous vessels, overshadowing the surface of the ocean; others, and Bp. Lowth among them, giving a different sense to the doubtful word rendered by our translators "shadowing," translate, "land of the winged cymbal," which they suppose a poetical periphrasis for the Egyptian sistrum, frequently used in their idolatrous rites. Our translators appear to me very judiciously to have taken the word in the sense of "shadowing." The shadow of wings is an usual image in the prophetick language for protection afforded by the stronger to the weak; and in this passage may be intended to characterize some great people, who should be famous for the aid and protection they should afford their friends and allies. The land of Cush (properly that district of Arabia, where the sons of Cush first settled) is in Holy Writ taken largely for a great tract of country, comprehending much more than the proper territory of the Cushites, extending east at least as far as the Tigris, and having for its western boundary the Nile: so that according as we understand the Prophet to speak of the African or the Asiatick Cush, the land beyond its rivers is to be looked for far to the west or far to the east of Palestine. Which of these is meant, it must be left for time to shew. Bp. Horsley.

2. — vessels of bulrushes] It is well known that the Egyptians commonly used on the Nile a light sort of ships or boats, made of the reed papyrus. Bp. Lowth. See notes on Exod. ii. 3; and Job ix. 26.

If Egypt is the country spoken to, "vessels of bulrushes" might be understood of those light skiffs; but if the country spoken to be distant from Egypt, those vessels may only be used as an apt image of quick-sailing vessels of any material. Bp. Horsley.

—— saying, Go, ye swift messengers,] The word "saying" is not in the original, or old versions. It should seem that the command is God's, issued by His prophet; and that the messengers, to whom the command is given, are the very people summoned in the first verse to attend. Bp. Horsley.

—— to a people terrible from their beginning hitherto;] The time present in prophetick vision is not the time of the delivery, but that of the fulfilment, of the prophecy. Now the people of Egypt has long ceased to be of any consideration: but the people of the Jews have been from their very beginning, are at this day, and will be to the end of time, a people venerable in a religious sense, "awfully remarkable" (so the word might be rendered rather than "terrible") on account of the special providence visibly attending them: and all the other particulars of the description here given of the people, to whom messengers are sent, agree accurately with the character and conduct of the Jews in their present state of dispersion. Bp. Horsley.

—— whose land the rivers have spoiled?] That is, armies of conquerours, which long since have spoiled the land of the Jews. The inundation of rivers is a frequent image for the ravages of armies of foreign invaders.

We have in ver. 1, 2, seen messengers summoned, a command given to them to go swiftly with the message, the people described to whom it was to be carried: it might be expected we should next have the message given to the messengers in precise terms. The scene is suddenly closed with ver. 2, before the messengers set out, before even the message is given: but the new objects which are immediately brought in view, evidently represent, under the usual emblems of sacred prophecy, other parts of the same entire action; and declare the purport, the season, and the effect of the message. Ver. 3, an ensign or standard is lifted up on the mountains; a trumpet is blown on the hills; the standard of the cross of Christ; the trumpet of the Gospel. The resort to the standard, the effect of the summons, in the end will be universal. Bp. Horsley.

4. — I will consider in my dwelling place.] Rather read, with the margin, "I will regard my set dwelling." The sentiment is, that, notwithstanding a long suspension of extraordinary manifestation of God's power, which is here described under the image of that stillness and stagnation of the atmosphere which takes place in extreme heats, His providence is not asleep; He is all the while keeping His eye fixed upon His prepared habitation, regarding the conduct and the fortunes of His people, and at all times directing every thing, though often by a silent and secret operation, to their ultimate prosperity, and to the universal establishment of the true religion. Bp. Horsley.

—— like a clear heat upon herbs,] The marginal reading, "after rain," seems to make better sense. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

5. — afore the harvest, when the bud is perfect, and the sour grape is ripening in the flower,] Rather, "and the blossom is become a swelling grape." Bp. Lowth.

The harvest and gathering of the fruits is the constant image of that season, when God shall gather His elect from the four winds of heaven. This is to be immediately preceded by a pruning of the useless shoots and unfruitful luxurious branches: see John xv. 1, 2. God, in the later ages, will purify His Church by such signal judgments as shall strike all nations with religious awe. Bp. Horsley. See note on chap. xxvii. 4, 5.

The interpretation of this confessedly obscure and very difficult chapter has been given above according to the hypothesis of Bp. Horsley. The explanation of Bp. Lowth supposes, that the prophecy was delivered before Sennacherib's return from his Egyptian expedition; and that it was designed to give to the Jews, and perhaps likewise to the Egyptians, an intimation of God's counsels, in regard to the destruction of their great and powerful enemy. He accordingly explains the "people" and "nation," spoken of in ver. 2, to be the Egyptians: by "the standard" and "the trumpet" in ver. 3, he understands the meteors, the thunder, the lightning, &c, which accompanied the destruction of Sennacherib's army, as described chap. xxix. 6; xxx. 30, 31; x. 16, 17: and he states the subject of the fourth and following verses of the chapter to be, that God would comfort and support His own people, though threatened with immediate destruction by the Assyrians; that Sennacherib's great designs and mighty efforts should be frustrated; that the chief part of his army should be made a prey for the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air, ver. 5, 6; and that Egypt, being delivered from his oppression, and avenged of the wrongs which she had suffered, should return thanks to God for the wonderful deliverance, both of herself and of the Jews, from this most powerful adversary. This interpretation of Bp. Lowth corresponds in its outline with that proposed by Vitringa. Edit.

Chap. XIX. ver. 1. The burden of Egypt.] This chapter is a detail of the judgments which were to fall upon Egypt in various periods of the history of that country, from the time of the Prophet downwards. Bp. Horsley. After the destruction of Sennacherib's army before Jerusalem, by which the Egyptians were freed from the yoke with which they were threatened by this powerful enemy, who had been carrying on a successful warfare against them, their affairs were again thrown into confusion by intestine broils among themselves, (see ver. 2;) perfect anarchy lasted for some years; then followed an aristocracy of twelve princes, which ended in the sole dominion of Psammitichus, who reigned fifty-four years. Not long after that came the invasion and conquest of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar, and then that by the Persians under Cambyses, the son of Cyrus. Bp. Lowth.

—— the idols of Egypt shall be moved.] When God executes His judgments upon a heathen nation, He is said to punish the idols of that people: see chap. xxi. 9; Exod. xii. 12; Jer. li. 44. W. Lowth. The same thing is foretold as to be performed by Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. xliii. 11, &c.; Ezek. xxx. 13. The phrase used here of the Lord's "riding upon a swift cloud" implies, that the conquest should be swift and sudden. Bp. Newton. This prophecy of the utter overthrow of heathen superstition is applicable also to the Gospel times, and signifies that after great desolation and confusion the Egyptians should learn to know the Lord: see ver. 21. Dr. Berriman.

4. — a cruel lord;] Nebuchadnezzar; and afterwards the whole succession of Persian kings, who in general grievously oppressed the country; especially Cambyses and Ochus, who are branded in history as cruel tyrants, and monsters of men. Bps. Lowth and Newton.

15 Neither shall there be any work for Egypt, which the head or tail, branch or rush, may do.

16 In that day shall Egypt be like unto women: and it shall be afraid and fear because of the shaking of the hand of the LORD of hosts, which he shaketh over it.

Nile; and the second part of the verse to be taken as no more than the Prophet's interpretation of the first. Jeremiah speaks thus of the Euphrates, chap. li. 36; and Nahum of the Nile, chap. iii. 8: see also Zech. x. 10, 11. Of the Nile so described we have instances in profane authors. Vitringa. See the note on Job vii. 12, from Scripture illustrated.

It is well known that the Nile increased in the summer, and for some months overflowed the whole country. The region about Delta particularly appeared like a vast sea; and the principal towns became so many islands, and all communication was carried on by ships and boats. Hence the river had the name of Oceanus, as Diodorus tells us. Bryant.

Some commentators suppose that this prophecy was to be literally fulfilled, and have accordingly seen its accomplishment in the reign of the twelve tyrants, when something of a failure is said to have taken place, or referred the words to a deficiency of water at some other period: history does afford instances of this; but the expression may be also understood more probably in a metaphorical sense, and denote the decay of Egyptian strength by metaphors taken from the decrease of the Nile, upon the overflowing of which all the plenty and prosperity of Egypt depended. Vitringa, W. Lowth.

6. And they shall turn the rivers far away;] That is, The rivers shall be driven back, shall fail. Vitringa.

—— the brooks of defence shall be emptied and dried up:] This was literally done by Megabyzus, general of a Persian army, sent by Artaxerxes to reduce Egypt to obedience. Dr. Wells. By making many channels he drained one of the branches of the Nile, and took possession of an island in the midst of it. Dean Prideaux.

7. The paper reeds] The papyrus is the peculiar produce of the Nile, the streams drawn from it, and the lakes of Egypt: beside the principal article made from it, paper, and the boats on the Nile, (see note on chap. xviii. 2,) Pliny tells us, that the Egyptians applied it to various purposes, using the root for wood, and making of the bark, sails, ropes, clothes, &c. Vitringa.

—— by the brooks, by the mouth of the brooks.] What is here translated "brooks," is in Exod. vii. 19, (where there is a particular representation of the waters of Egypt, as here,) rendered "rivers;" both may signify the canals drawn from the Nile by Egyptian princes. Dr. Shaw tells us, that the soil near the banks of the Nile itself is very considerably deeper than at the extremity to which the inundations reach; from whence it should seem, that the land originally lay with a considerable descent to the river. To say then that things sown or cultivated near the mouths of the canals (which must have been in the lowest places, and sufficiently watered, when the higher grounds produced nothing, for want of moisture) should wither, is to describe the utmost failure of water. Harmer.

8. The fishers also shall mourn, &c.] There was great plenty of fish in Egypt: see Numb. xi. 5; (and the note on Exod. vii. 21;) the lakes abounding even more than the Nile; as Egmont, Pococke, and other travellers, tell us. Bp. Lowth.

As the exhaustion and misery about to take place in Egypt has been already figured out under the emblem of the drying up of the Nile, the grand source of all its wealth; so the grief of the persons who would be the first and greatest sufferers by that calamity, the fishers, &c, is put to express the general despondency of all orders. Vitringa.

9. —they that weave networks,] "Networks," or rather, "white-works," as in the margin, may mean wicker-work, white from the peeling of the twigs made use of. Fish may be caught by wicker-work, as well as by nets: and something of that kind appears in the Praenestine Mosaick Pavement, which Dr. Shaw has given us. Harmer, Parkhurst.

13. — Zoan — Noph] Zoan, or Tanis, was one of the most ancient cities of Egypt; see Numb. xiii. 22; Ps. lxxviii. 43. Noph is better known by the name of Memphis. W. Lowth.

In verses 11—17 are recounted the immediate causes of the above-mentioned evils; the folly of the rulers, who valued themselves on their wisdom; and the cowardice and effeminacy of the people in general: Egypt would not have become a prey to so many foreign enemies, but through the excessive weakness of the Egyptians, both in counsel and in action; they had not the courage even to defend themselves, but trusted chiefly to their mercenaries, who, instead of defending, were often the first to betray them. Bp. Newton.

14. The Lord hath mingled a perverse spirit &c.] The Lord in His justice hath given them up to a spirit of giddiness and perverseness; justly punishing their pride with the seduction of their leaders, who have caused Egypt to go wrong in all their enterprises. Bp. Hall.

17. And the land of Judah shall be a terror unto Egypt, &c.] The threatening hand of God will be held out and shaken over Egypt, from the side of Judea, through which the Assyrians will march to invade it. Bp. Lowth.

CHAP. XX.

A type prefiguring the shameful captivity of Egypt and Ethiopia.

IN the year that Tartan came unto Ashdod, (when Sargon the king of Assyria sent him,) and fought against Ashdod, and took it;

18. In that day.] That is, After that time. Bp. Newton. See notes on chap. iv. 2; x. 20.

—— shall five cities in the land of Egypt speak the language of Canaan,] It is a way of speaking in Scripture to use a common definite number for an indefinite. See Amos i. 3, 6, 9; (and the note on Job v. 19.) "Shall speak the language of Canaan" signifies, that they shall worship God with the true Israelites. W. Lowth.

The whole passage to the end of the chapter contains a general intimation of the future propagation of the knowledge of the true God in Egypt and Syria, under the successors of Alexander; and, in consequence of this propagation, of the early reception of the Gospel in the same countries, when it should be published to the world. Bp. Lowth. Many Jews, after Nebuchadnezzar had taken Jerusalem, fled into Egypt; and carried along with them Jeremiah, who there uttered most of his prophecies concerning the conquest of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar. From thence some knowledge of God, and some notices of the prophecies, might easily be derived to the Egyptians. Alexander transplanted many of the Jews into his new city Alexandria: the first Ptolemy carried more; and his successors gave great encouragement to settlers: nor were the Jews less favoured by many of the Syrian kings. Bp. Newton.

—— one shall be called, The city of destruction.] The margin reads, "The city of the sun;" and many suppose the city Heliopolis to be meant here, and that the other name is substituted for it (as being expressed in the Hebrew by a word which bears near affinity to the true name) by way of reproach, and implying withal, that the idol there worshipped should be utterly destroyed. Upon much the same principle Beth-el, which signifies the house of God, is called, when become the seat of idolatry, Beth-aven, that is, the house of vanity. Hos. v. 15; x. 5. W. Lowth.

19. In that day shall there be an altar to the Lord &c.] The altar, sacrifice, oblation, and vows, mentioned here and at ver. 21, are taken for the worship and service of God in general; it being common in the prophetick style to speak of future times in the language and according to the ideas of the present; of the spiritual worship God intended, by the known terms of the worship then used. W. Lowth, Bp. Chandler. The pillar in the border for a witness, alludes to that erected by Jacob at Beth-el, (Gen. xxviii. 18,) and to the altar built on the border of Jordan, Josh. xxii. 10. W. Lowth.

20. —— because of the oppressors, and he shall send them a saviour,] The conquest of Persia by Alexander might well be considered as a deliverance to Egypt: upon his coming the people all cheerfully submitted to him, out of hatred to the Persians, (see note on ver. 4,) so that he became master of the country without opposition. Bps. Lowth and Newton.

The words may also be fitly applied to the tyranny which the devil exercises over the pagan world, who are led captive by him at his will, from whence they can be redeemed only by the great Saviour of the world, Jesus Christ. W. Lowth.

23—25. — a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, &c.] It is predicted here that Egypt and Assyria, which used to be at great enmity with each other, shall be united in the same worship by the intermediation of Israel. The kingdom of Syria, which was established by Seleucus after the time of Alexander the Great, comprehending nearly the same countries with the ancient empire of Assyria, and in other respects resembling it, may be considered as the representative of Assyria in later times; (see note on Ashur, Numb. xxiv. 24;) now by means of the many Jews and proselytes who were resident in Syria and Egypt, the three countries, Israel, Egypt, and Syria, were in some measure united in the same worship; see Bp. Newton's note on ver. 18. It was more fully accomplished when these countries became Christian; and we piously hope and believe, that it will still receive its more perfect completion in the latter days, when Mahometism shall be rooted out, and Christianity again flourish in those countries, when "the fulness of the Gentiles shall come in, and all Israel be saved," Rom. xi. 25, 26. Vitringa, Bp. Newton.

Chap. XX. The last chapter was a general prophecy against Egypt; this foretells the conquest of it by Sennacherib, who overran Egypt and Ethiopia, which countries were the Jews' confederates against him: see 2 Kings xviii. 21, compared with 2 Kings xix. 9. They are often reproved for their vain confidence in Egypt: see ver. 5; and chap. xxx. 2; xxxi. 1. With regard to the word our translation renders "Ethiopia," properly Cush, it is a great question with the learned whether Ethiopia, properly so called, be meant by it, or Arabia. It is joined, chap. xliii. 3, with Seba. W. Lowth. See note on chap. xviii. 1; and Dr. Hales's note on Numb. xii. 1.

Ver. 1. — Sargon the king of Assyria sent him,] Tartan was one of Sennacherib's generals, (2 Kings xviii. 17,) and Tirhakah king of Ethiopia was in alliance with the king of Egypt against Sennacherib. These circumstances make it probable that by Sargon is meant Sennacherib. Bp. Lowth.

—— fought against Ashdod,] When Sennacherib's army came up against all the fenced cities of Judah, (2 Kings xviii. 13,) he might send a detachment against this city, belonging probably at that time to Hezekiah's dominions, 2 Kings xviii. 8. Ashdod or Azotus was a strong place, and afterwards held out twenty-nine years against Psammitichus king of Egypt. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

2. — loose the sackcloth from off thy loins.] As it was a principal part of the prophetick office to denounce God's judgments, so the Prophets commonly wore sackcloth, the habit of mourning, as suitable to their employment; (see Rev. xi. 3;) of this kind was the hairy garment by which Elias and John Baptist are described, 2 Kings i. 8; Matt. iii. 4; see also Zech. xiii. 4. W. Lowth.

—— naked and barefoot.] Those are said to be naked in the Scripture phrase, who go without their upper garment, or have put off the habit proper to their station or quality. See John xxi. 7; 1 Sam. xix. 24; and note on Job xxii. 6. Going barefoot was a sign of mourning, 2 Sam. xv. 30. Dr. Waterland, W. Lowth.

Isaiah is described here walking in this manner as a sign of the distress that awaited the Egyptians; the Prophets foreshewed things by actions as well as words, Ezek. xxiv. 18; Hos. i. 2, 3; iii. 1, 2: this mode of expressing important circumstances by actions being customary and familiar among all Eastern nations. The conduct of the Prophets on these occasions, considered with reflexion on the importance of their ministry, and with allowance for difference of manners, will appear to have been not only very striking and impressive, but strictly agreeable to the design and decorum of the prophetick character. W. Lowth, Dr. Gray. See the note on Gen. xxxii. 25.

3. — three years for a sign and wonder.] Perhaps, at intervals during that time. Some think we should understand three days, a year being sometimes placed in prophetick language for a day: others apply the three years, not to Isaiah's walking, but to the calamity foreshewn thereby to be to last three years; or to happen within three years. Others consider the account as narrative of a transaction in vision, or as a parable related by Isaiah. Dr. Gray.

6. — the inhabitant of this isle.] The margin gives "country;" and so is the word sometimes to be taken. W. Lowth. See notes on chap. xi. 11; Gen. x. 5.

Chap. XXI. ver. 1. — desert of the sea.] Babylon, which was seated in a plain, and surrounded by water. The propriety of the expression consists in this, not only that any large collection of waters in the oriental style is called a sea, but also that the places about Babylon are said from the beginning to have been overflowed with waters, and to have been called the sea. Compare Jer. li. 13. Bp. Newton. It was a great barren morassy desert originally: such it became after the taking of the city by Cyrus: (see note on chap. xiv. 23:) and such it continues to this day. Bp. Lowth.

The ten first verses of this chapter contain a prediction of the taking of Babylon by the Medes and Persians. It opens with the Prophet's seeing at a distance the dreadful storm that is gathering and ready to burst upon it: the event is intimated in general terms; God's orders are issued to the Medes and Persians (ver. 2,) to set forth on the expedition which He had given them in charge: upon this the Prophet enters into the midst of the action, and in the person of Babylon expresses in the strongest terms the astonishment and horrour that seizes her on the sudden surprise of the city, at the season dedicated to pleasure and festivity; ver. 3, 4. Bp. Lowth.

—— As whirlwinds in the south.] See Job xxxvii. 9; Zech. ix. 14. The most vehement storms to which Judea was subject came from the great desert country to the south of it. Bp. Lowth.

2. — the treacherous dealer dealeth treacherously, &c.] The words may be rather rendered passively, "The plunderer is plundered, and the destroyer is destroyed." Bp. Lowth.

—— Elam.] By this, taking the word with some latitude, we may rightly understand Persia. Vitringa. We do not find this last term (which signifies horsemen) in the early books of Scripture. Cyrus taught his people the art of managing horses: Ezekiel is the first who mentions them by the name of Persians; before that period, it is probable that the names Cush and Elam included most of Persia. Bochart. If however by Elam we understand here the province strictly so called, it is true that this also, though subject to Babylon, rose up against it. Bp. Newton.

—— all the sighing thereof have I made to cease.] That is, the sighing caused by it; namely, of those who have been oppressed by the Babylonian tyranny. Compare chap. xiv. 3. Bp. Lowth, W. Lowth.

4. — the night of my pleasure hath he turned into fear.] The night, when I thought to have some respite, and be at ease; see Job vii. 13, 14. Or, some understand the words of that festival night when Babylon was surprised, (Dan. v:) the following verse favours this sense. W. Lowth.

5—9. Prepare the table, &c.] The Prophet describes the carelessness of the Babylonians, and in the midst of their feasting the sudden alarm of war. The event is then declared in a very singular manner: God orders the Prophet to set a watchman to look out, and to report what he sees; and though the passage, which relates what he sees, is extremely obscure, (owing to the ambiguity of a word which occurs three times, and may signify a chariot, or the rider in it; or a rider on a horse or other animal; or a company of chariots or riders;) it is pretty clear, that Darius and Cyrus, the Medes and the Persians, are intended to be distinguished by the two riders, or two sorts of cattle. Bp. Lowth.

8. And he cried, A lion:] The marginal reading, "as a lion," gives an easier sense; with a strong voice, like a lion: the particle as is frequently understood; see chap. xv. 5. W. Lowth, Bp. Hall.

9. — answered] That is, continued his discourse; for similar use of the word "answer," see particularly Matt. xi. 25, and the Gospels elsewhere. W. Lowth.

—— all the graven images of her gods he hath broken unto the ground.] Xerxes, on his return from Greece, passing through Babylon, pillaged the temples, and pulled down all the images, thus completing this and other prophecies; see Jer. l. 2; li. 44, 47, 52. Dean Prideaux.

10. O my threshing, and the corn of my floor:] The application, the end, and design of the prophecy are here admirably given in a short expressive address to the Jews: O my people, whom I shall make subject for your punishment to the Babylonians, to try and prove you, to separate the chaff from the corn, the bad from the good among you, hear this for your consolation; your slavery and oppression will have an end in the destruction of your oppressors. The Prophet abruptly breaks off, and, instead of continuing the speech in the person of God, adds in his own, This I declare unto you from God. Bp. Lowth. It constantly occurs in the prophecies that the persons speaking are changed, and that God's discourse is intermixed with that of the Prophet. Vitringa.

The word threshing is used here to express the object or matter that is threshed: for "corn of my floor," in the original it is, as the margin gives, son. It is an idiom of the Hebrew language to call the effect, the object, any thing that belongs in almost any way to another, the son of it. Bp. Lowth. See chap. v. 1, and margin there.

11. The burden of Dumah.] That this is to be understood of Edom or Idumea, may be inferred from the mention of Seir; this last being a name by which Edom is commonly denoted in Scripture. Dr. Wells.

—— Watchman,] The Prophets are often compared to watchmen; as foreseeing evils at a distance, and warning the people: compare chap. lii. 8; lxii. 6; Ezek. iii. 17. W. Lowth.

This prophecy, from the uncertainty of the occasion on which it was uttered, and from the brevity of the expression, is extremely obscure. The Edomites, as well as the Jews, were subdued by the Babylonians. They inquire of the Prophet, how long their subjection is to last: he seems to intimate that the Jews should be delivered from their captivity; not so the Edomites: (Bp. Lowth.) that a morning should arise to the one after their night of calamity, and not to the other; see note on chap. xxvii. 7. We may suppose this night of the Idumeans to have begun the same year that, according to Josephus, Nebuchadnezzar executed the Divine judgments against the Ammonites, Moabites, &c.; the fifth after the destruction of Jerusalem. Vitringa.

13. The burden upon Arabia.] This prophecy was to be fulfilled within a year of the time of its delivery, ver. 16; and was probably delivered about the same time with the rest in this part of the book, soon after or before the fourteenth of Hezekiah, the year of Sennacherib's invasion. In his first march into Judea, or in his return from the Egyptian expedition, he might overrun the several clans of Arabians mentioned here: their distress on some such occasion is the subject of the prophecy. Bp. Lowth.

—— travelling companies] See the notes on Gen. xvi. 12; xxxvii. 25; Job xii. 6. Those of Dedanim were the posterity of Dedan, Abraham's grandson; those of Tema and Kedar, descended from two of Ishmael's sons, Gen. xxv. 3, 13, 15. These people were famous for the use of the bow, (ver. 17,) like their ancestor Ishmael, Gen. xxi. 20. W. Lowth.

14. — brought water &c.] Pitying their chased neighbours, they brought water to their thirsty companies, and bread to relieve their hunger, in that forced and sudden flight. Bp. Hall.

16. — Within a year, according to the years of an hireling.] A common year. Dr. Wells. This description of it seems to be used to distinguish from a prophetical year, (see Numb. xiv. 34; Ezek. iv. 6;) or from some remarkable time in general; as we read of the "acceptable year of the Lord," chap. lxi. 2, the "year of recompences," chap. xxxiv. 8. W. Lowth.

nezzar: the Prophet may have had both in view. The third verse seems to relate to the flight of Zedekiah, 2 Kings xxv. 4, 5, from the Chaldeans; ver. 6, and ver. 9—11, rather to the siege by Sennacherib. Bp. Lowth, Vitringa. See notes on those verses.

2. Thou that art full of stirs, &c.] Thou, O Jerusalem, that art so full of people, and full of noise, a populous and jolly city, how is it that thy citizens are so base that they do not stand it out in fight; neither are they dead by the sword, but with fear rather? Bp. Hall.

6. — Elam bare the quiver &c.] See note on chap. xiii. 18. The Kir mentioned here was a city of the Medes. W. Lowth.

Both Medes and Elamites were allies or tributaries to the Assyrians at the time of Sennacherib's expedition; that the Medes and men of Kir were so, is obvious from 2 Kings xvi. 9; xvii. 6. That these people were so to Nebuchadnezzar at the time of his besieging Jerusalem, is not so apparent from history. Vitringa.

8. And he discovered the covering of Judah, &c.] The meaning is, When the enemy hath dismantled the fortified cities of Judah, then you will bethink yourselves of providing arms for your defence. "The house of the forest" was an armoury within the city of Jerusalem; see 1 Kings x. 17. It was built by Solomon; and thus called, probably, from the great quantity of cedar from Lebanon employed in the building, 1 Kings vii. 2, 3. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

11. Ye made also a ditch between the two walls &c.] This agrees with the circumstance of Hezekiah's stopping up all the waters of the fountains without the city, and bringing them into the city by a subterraneous passage cut through the rock: those of the old pool to a place where he made a double wall, so that the pool was between the two walls. This great work is particularly mentioned by the sacred historians, 2 Kings xx. 20; 2 Chron. xxxii. 2, 3, 5, 30; and celebrated by the Son of Sirach, Ecclus. xlviii. 17. Bp. Lowth.

—— neither had respect unto him that fashioned it long ago.] That is, to God; who enabled David at first, and his successors, to increase and fortify this city, chose it to be the place of His temple, and promised to continue His special protection over it. Dr. Wells, W. Lowth.

15. — get thee unto this treasurer, even unto Shebna,] The relation which the following prophecy concerning Shebna has to the foregoing seems to be, that it might have been delivered about the same time, and Shebna might be a principal person among those whose luxury and profaneness is severely reprehended by the Prophet, ver. 11—14. Shebna the scribe, mentioned in the history of Hezekiah, chap. xxxvi, seems to have been a different person from this Shebna, the treasurer, or steward of the household. The Eliakim here mentioned was probably the person who, at the time of Sennacherib's invasion, was actually treasurer, the son of Hilkiah. Bp. Lowth. Concerning this Shebna, (for we can hardly conceive him to be the same, though some interpreters have, with Shebna the scribe,) history affords no information; we may suppose him, from what is said, ver. 18, after the deprivation of his office, removed into a foreign country, and dying there in disgrace and ignominy. Vitringa.

17. — will surely cover thee.] Persons under disgrace or condemnation had their heads covered; see Esther vii. 8; Jer. xiv. 3. W. Lowth. See also note on Job ix. 24.

21. — strengthen him with thy girdle,] See chap. v. 27; and Job xii. 21; and the notes there.

22. And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder.] A key is an emblem of trust; and the expression alludes to the fashion of keys in old time, which were long, and made like a hook: (W. Lowth.) such a key would lie well on the shoulder, and could hardly be commodiously carried otherwise. In allusion to the image of the key as the ensign of power, the unlimited extent of that power is expressed with great clearness, as well as force, by the sole and exclusive authority to open and shut. Our Saviour therefore has upon a similar occasion made use of a like manner of expression; (Matt. xvi. 19;) and in the passage from the Revelation referred to in the margin, has applied to Himself the very words of the Prophet. Bp. Lowth. We must suppose Isaiah therefore to look farther than the immediate completion of his prophecy; to represent Eliakim as a type of the Messiah; and His paternal government or ministry (ver. 21,) as a figure of Christ's glorious kingdom, when all power should be given Him, (ver. 24;) as we may suppose Shebna to represent the unworthy rulers who were over the Jewish Church, and like him were to be driven into foreign lands, spoiled of their former dignities, and to meet with a fate unworthy of themselves, their country, and their religion. Vitringa.

23. — I will fasten him as a nail &c.] See Ezra ix. 8; Eccles. xiv. 24; Ezek. xv. 3. Where the way of life and houses are more simple, it is necessary to furnish the inside of the several apartments with sets of nails, or large pegs, to dispose of and hang up the moveables in common use. They do not drive these into the Eastern walls, which are too hard if of brick, if of clay too mouldering, but fix them in as they are building. Eliakim is considered a principal stake of this sort, for the support of all vessels destined for common or sacred uses; that is, as the principal support of the whole civil and ecclesiastical polity: the nail, mentioned ver. 25, is of course to be understood of Shebna. Bp. Lowth, Sir J. Chardin.

Chap. XXIII. ver. 1. The burden of Tyre.] This prophecy may best be understood of Nebuchadnezzar's laying siege to Tyre, and taking it. The word "isle" is used in other texts for a maritime place; see note on chap. xi. 11; and ver. 6. Tyre is called "the sea, the strength of the sea," because the inhabitants were strong at sea, and looked upon it as their proper element. W. Lowth.

—— Howl, ye ships of Tarshish; for it is laid waste,] See note at 1 Kings xxii. 48. The destruction of such a mart as Tyre must have been a great loss to all merchant-adventurers. W. Lowth. Concerning Chittim, see the note on Numb. xxiv. 24.

3. — by great waters the seed of Sihor, &c.] An old English translation renders this more clearly, "the seed of Nilus, growing by the abundance of waters, &c." W. Lowth. The Nile is here called Sihor, (as 1 Chron. xiii. 5; Jer. ii. 18,) from the blackness of its waters charged with the mud, which it brings down from Ethiopia when it overflows; see note on Gen. xv. 18. Egypt by its extraordinary fertility, caused by this overflowing, supplied the neighbouring nations with corn; by which branch of trade the Tyrians gained great wealth. Bp. Lowth. Ezekiel, as it were commenting upon these words of Isaiah, "the mart of nations," recounts (chap. xxvii,) the various nations whose commodities were brought to Tyre, and were bought and sold by the Tyrians. It was, as is well known, the most celebrated place in the world for its trade and navigation, the seat of commerce, and the centre of riches. Bp. Newton.

4. — the sea hath spoken, — saying, I travail not, &c.] Tyre is here introduced bemoaning her desolate condition, that she is become as though she never had any children or inhabitants. W. Lowth. Zidon, as the mother city, (see ver. 12,) is supposed to be deeply afflicted with the calamity of her daughter. Bp. Lowth.

spoken of being prior to that calamity of Egypt which is usually joined with it in the Prophets; see Ezek. xxix. 18, 19; others render this verse thus; "As soon as the report of Tyre shall come to Egypt, they shall be in great pain;" namely, because of the export of their corn: see note on ver. 3. W. Lowth.

6. Pass ye over] What the Prophet delivers by way of advice is to be understood as a prediction; and Jerome asserts, upon the authority of Assyrian histories now lost, that the Tyrians, when they were besieged by Nebuchadnezzar, and saw no hope of escaping, fled to Carthage, or some islands of the Ionian and Ægean sea. Here the Prophet bids them pass to Tarshish, that is, Tartessus in Spain; and (ver. 12,) to Chittim, the islands and countries bordering upon the Mediterranean. Bp. Newton.

7. Is this your joyous city, whose antiquity is of ancient days?] Tyre is mentioned as a strong place, as early as in the days of Joshua; Josh. xix. 29. Strabo calls it the most ancient of the Phenician cities after Sidon. This last is mentioned, Gen. x. 19, and again chap. xlix. 13; it is called by Joshua, chap. xi. 8, "Great Zidon." W. Lowth.

—— her own feet shall carry her afar off to sojourn.] He speaks of Tyre, as of a delicate woman forced to travel on foot into foreign countries. See chap. xlvii. 2; and note on chap. iii. 17. W. Lowth.

9. —— to stain the pride of all glory.] Not long before the delivery of this prophecy, the Tyrians had beat the fleets of Shalmaneser with a very inferiour force, and held out five years against his siege, when he died; they grew very insolent upon such success, and to this pride of theirs this prophecy of Isaiah may more particularly refer. Dean Prideaux. Dr. Wells.

10. Pass through thy land as a river,] A city, taken by siege, and destroyed, whose walls are demolished, whose policy is dissolved, whose wealth is dissipated, whose people is scattered over the wide country, is here compared to a river, whose banks are broken down, and its waters, let loose and overflowing all the neighbouring plains, are wasted and lost. A "girdle," which collects, binds, and keeps together the loose raiment, when applied to a river, may mean a mound, mole, or artificial dam, which contains the waters, and prevents them from spreading abroad. Bp. Lowth. See the marginal reading.

—— O daughter of Tarshish:] Tyre is, at ver. 12, called "daughter of Zidon," being, as tradition says, a colony from that ancient city; and here (though it might seem natural for a similar reason to call Tarshish "daughter of Tyre") is termed "daughter of Tarshish;" perhaps because, Tyre being ruined, Tarshish was become the superiour city, and might be considered as the metropolis of the Tyrian people; or rather, because of the close connexion and perpetual intercourse between them, according to the latitude of signification, in which the Hebrews use the words "son" and "daughter," to express any sort of conjunction or dependance whatever. Vitringa, Bp. Lowth.

12. —— there also shalt thou have no rest.] After Nebuchadnezzar had subdued Tyre and Egypt, we may suppose, as Megasthenes reports, that he carried his arms farther westward; so that, that conquerour thus pursuing them, the Tyrians might well be said to have no rest: however this might be, in aftertimes the Carthaginians, and other colonies with which the Tyrians on this occasion incorporated, (see note on ver. 6,) were continually in a very unsettled tumultuous state. Bp. Newton.

13. Behold the land of the Chaldeans; &c.] The Prophet begins here with an exclamation, importing that something new and unexpected is about to follow; which is, not that the predicted overthrow of Tyre should be brought about, as any one might have supposed, by the Assyrians, who were the ruling power in Asia at the time when the prophecy was delivered; but that the people of the Chaldeans, at that period comparatively inconsiderable, fixed originally, from a straggling life, in their place of residence by the Assyrians, and indebted to them for all their improvements after, that "he," namely, this people, should "bring Tyre to ruin." Vitringa.

15. —— according to the days of one king:] The word "king" is put here for kingdom, as Dan. vii. 17; viii. 20. The destruction of Tyre was some time after that of Jerusalem; but Jeremiah seems (chap. xxv. 11, 19,) to confine the subjection of all the countries which Nebuchadnezzar conquered to seventy years; some of them were subdued sooner, some later, but the end of that period was the common term for the liberation of them all. Nebuchadnezzar began his conquests in the first year of his reign; from thence to the taking of Babylon by Cyrus are the seventy years; and these limit the duration of the Babylonish monarchy. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

15—17. —— after the end of seventy years &c.] Tyre is represented as an harlot, and from thence these figures are taken; the meaning is, that she should recover her liberties and trade, and draw in all nations to deal with her. Bp. Newton. According to the prophecy, the seventy years being expired, we find that the Tyrians were restored to their former privileges, and allowed a king of their own. This favour seems to have been granted them by Darius Hystaspes, in consideration of their usefulness to him in his naval wars: they soon recovered their former prosperity, traffick, power, and riches, and were enabled, on Alexander's invading the East, to make a greater stand against him than all the Persian empire beside. Dean Prideaux.

18. And her merchandise and her hire shall be holiness to the Lord: &c.] The Prophet speaks here, not of what the Tyrians would do immediately on their restitution, but some time after, in the days of the Messiah. So that this is a prophecy concerning the conversion of the Tyrians to the true religion, of the accomplishment of which something is said in Acts xxi. 3, 4, 5; and more in other authors. Poole.

Tyre, after its second destruction by Alexander, again recovered its ancient trade and grandeur. It became early Christian with the rest of the neighbouring countries: St. Paul himself found many Christians there. It suffered much in Diocletian's persecution. It was an archbishoprick under the patriarchate of Jerusalem, with fourteen bishopricks under its jurisdiction. Bp. Lowth.

Chap. XXIV. The subject of this chapter some refer to the desolation caused by the invasion of Shalmaneser; others by that of Nebuchadnezzar; and others to the destruction of the city and nation by the Romans. Perhaps it may have a view to all of the three great desolations of the country; the Prophet chiefly employs general images, such as set forth the greatness and universality of the ruin to be brought on, involving all orders and degrees of men, changing entirely the face of things, and destroying the whole polity both religious and civil. Bp. Lowth. The prophecy takes in many very distant views, no one prior period of time setting a bound to the prospect; we may extend it to every age, from the time of its delivery to the very end of the world, and to every nation that is guilty of the same sins with those for which the Jews are threatened; and in the same manner whatever prophecies are called the burdens of Moab, Babylon, &c, we may suppose designed not to terminate there, but to reach to all who should ever after be guilty of the like crimes; a similitude of manners deriving upon all such sinners a similitude of punishment. Wogan.

Ver. 1. Behold, the Lord maketh the earth empty,] The same Hebrew word is in this chapter rendered either earth or land; and "the world," ver. 4, means the same thing; the Israelitish world. See note on chap. xiii. 11. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

5. The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants &c.] The contagion of sin infects the very ground, and brings a curse on it, (ver. 6;) see Gen. iii. 17; Numb. xxxv. 33; Ps. cvii. 34. "The everlasting covenant." See Gen. xvii. 7, where God so calls the covenant between Him and Abraham; because it was to endure for a long succession of years, to last till the New Age, that of the Messiah, should come. W. Lowth. See note on chap. ii. 2.

6. — the inhabitants of the earth are burned, and few men left.] In the figurative language of the Prophets, burning any thing with fire is put for the consuming thereof by war. Sir I. Newton.

9. — strong drink shall be bitter] The word rendered by us by this general term, as Theodoret and Chrysostom, both Syrians, inform us, meant properly palm or date wine, which was and is still much in use in the Eastern countries. It is said here that all enjoyment shall cease; the sweetest wine become bitter to their taste. Bp. Lowth.

13. — as the shaking of an olive tree,] See note on chap. xvii. 6.

14. They shall lift up their voice, &c.] The great distresses brought upon Israel and Judah drove the people away, and dispersed them over the neighbouring countries; they fled to Egypt, Asia Minor, the islands and coasts of Greece. They had synagogues for their worship in many places, and were greatly instrumental in propagating the knowledge of the true God in these heathen nations, and preparing them for the reception of Christianity. This is what the Prophet seems to mean by the celebration of the name of Jehovah in the waters, and in the uttermost parts: the term "the sea" is used by the Hebrews for the distant nations, the islands, the dwellers on the seacoasts all over the world: for "fires," ver. 15. (for which the margin gives "valleys,") by the slight alteration of one letter in the original, we should probably read "isles:" this is in a great degree justified by the repetition of the same word in the next member of the sentence, with the addition "of the sea;" which is exactly in the manner of the Prophet. Bp. Lowth. See note on chap. xi. 11.

The prophecy appears to point also to the times of the Messiah, and to describe the language of the converted Jews uttered in exultation and thanksgiving for the blessings of Christ and the Gospel. Poole.

16. — But I said, My leanness, &c.] The Prophet speaks in the person of the Inhabitants of the land still remaining; who should be pursued by Divine vengeance, and suffer repeated distress from the inroads and depredations of their powerful enemies. Bp. Lowth.

17. Fear, and the pit, and the snare, are upon thee,] If they escape one calamity, another shall overtake them; compare Amos v. 19: the images are taken from the different methods of hunting and taking wild beasts anciently in use. The "fear," (or rather "terrour,") was a line strung with feathers of all colours, which, fluttering in the air, scared and frightened the wild beasts into the toils or pit prepared for them. The "pit," or pit-fall, was digged deep in the ground, and covered with green boughs, turf, &c, to deceive them. The "snare," or toils, a series of nets, enclosing at first a great space of ground in which the wild beasts were known to be, and then drawn in by degrees into a narrower compass, till they were at last closely shut up and entangled by them. In the place of Jeremiah corresponding to ver. 18, it is simply "fleeth from the fear," and indeed it does not appear that the terrour was intended to scare by its noise. Bp. Lowth.

18. — the windows from on high are open,] A plain allusion to the description of the deluge, Gen. vii. 11. W. Lowth.

21—23. — the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones &c.] That is, the ecclesiastical and civil polity of the Jews, which shall be destroyed: the nation shall continue in a state of depression and dereliction for a long time, (ver. 23:) the image seems to be taken from the practice of monarchs, to let their captives lie a long time disregarded in their dungeons. God shall at length revisit and restore His people in the last age; and the kingdom of God be then established in such perfection, as wholly to eclipse (ver. 23) the glory of the temporary, typical, preparative kingdom, formerly subsisting. Bp. Lowth.

23. — before his ancients gloriously.] An allusion to the elders of Israel: compare Rev. iv. 4; xix. 4, 6. W. Lowth.

From this chapter it appears, that abominable and provoking sins are the cause which moves God to make any land empty and waste, and to turn it upside down, and to scatter abroad its inhabitants. Which single consideration should persuade men to fear God and observe His covenant and ordinances, even though they had nothing to hope or fear after this life; since religion is absolutely necessary for our temporal welfare. For if we believe either the sacred Scriptures, or other histories of undoubted credit, we must believe that the incorrigible wickedness and corruption of nations have finally ended in their utter dissolution, and brought priest and people, master and servant, maid and mistress, all upon a level, which is but a larger draught of that confusion expressed in the term "turning the earth upside down." This the nation here threatened found verified to their cost: for, together with their country, they have lost both their royal and priestly government, and the honourable distinctions of their tribes and families. Let us, who serve the same God, take heed of provoking Him by the like sins, lest we incur the like punishment. But let us rather apply our hearts to the practice of those duties of religion and virtue, which will prove the stability of all that is desirable amongst us, and conduce, through the merits of our Saviour, to our eternal happiness, having the promise both of this life, and of that which is to come. Reading.

Chap. XXV. It does not appear that this chapter has any close or immediate connexion with the preceding; but, taking the whole course of prophecies, from the thirteenth to the twenty-fourth chapter inclusive, in which the Prophet foretells the destruction of several cities and nations, enemies to the Jews, and of the land of Judah itself, yet with intimations of a remnant to be saved, and a restoration to be at last effected by a glorious establishment of the kingdom of God; with a view to this extensive scene of God's providence in all its parts, and in all its consequences, the Prophet may well be supposed to break out into this song of praise; in which his mind seems to be more possessed with the prospect of future mercies, than with the recollection of the past. Bp. Lowth.

2 For thou hast made of a city an heap; of a defenced city a ruin: a palace of strangers to be no city; it shall never be built.

3 Therefore shall the strong people glorify thee, the city of the terrible nations shall fear thee.

4 For thou hast been a strength to the poor, a strength to the needy in his distress, a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall.

5 Thou shalt bring down the noise of strangers, as the heat in a dry place; even the heat with the shadow of a cloud: the branch of the terrible ones shall be brought low.

12 And the fortress of the high fort of thy walls shall he bring down, lay low, and bring to the ground, even to the dust.

Ver. 2. — of a city an heap;] This may apply to Nineveh, Babylon, Ar Moab, or any other fortress possessed by the enemies of God's people. Bp. Lowth. "City" is probably taken for cities in general; and so chap. xxvi. 5; xxvii. 10. W. Lowth.

5. Thou shalt bring down the noise &c.] The sense of this verse more fully expressed is as follows; As a thick cloud interposing tempers the heat of the sun on the burnt soil, so shalt Thou, by the interposition of Thy power, bring low and abate the tumult of the proud, and the triumph of the formidable. Bp. Lowth.

6. — unto all people a feast] This can be no other than the celebration of the establishment of Christ's kingdom, frequently represented in the Gospel under the image of a feast, Matt. viii. 11; Luke xiv. 16; xxii. 29, 30. This sense is fully confirmed by what follows in the next verses, the removing of the veil from the nations, and the abolition of death. The first of which is obviously and clearly explained of the preaching of the Gospel; and the second must mean the blessing of immortality procured for us by Christ, "who hath abolished death, and through death hath destroyed him that had the power of death," 2 Tim. i. 10; Heb. ii. 14. Bp. Lowth.

—— wines on the lees,] That is, kept long on the lees: the word used to express the "lees" in the original signifies the "preservers;" because they preserve the strength and flavour of the wine: see Jer. xlviii. 11. Bp. Lowth.

7. And he will destroy in this mountain] At Jerusalem shall the Gospel begin, by which God shall bring all nations from the ignorance of heathenism to the knowledge of the true God. Dr. Wells.

—— the face of the covering] Compare Job xli. 13.

8. He will swallow up death in victory; &c.] The passages of the New Testament, to which the margin refers, shew how St. Paul and St. John apply this place to the general resurrection and heavenly state: nor will these promises till then be made good. W. Lowth.

The troubles and labours of the present world, and the dissolution of the body, do still take place as warnings and chastisements for sinners; but the sorrows are not comfortless, nor the dissolution final: the dominion of death consisted in this, that it rendered that dissolution final and irreparable; and the devil is said to have the power of death, because, by seducing man to sin, he subjected him to that irretrievable dissolution. That death should be destroyed, and men restored to happiness, by the Messiah, is confessed by very eminent Jewish writers, who therefore apply to Him in the most rigorous sense these words of Isaiah. Dean Stanhope.

9. And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; &c.] This is the triumph of Christ's faithful servants, who have constantly maintained His honour and worship in this present life, against all the opposition of wicked men and devils: when they shall see Him coming in the clouds with power and great glory, to receive them to Himself, it will transport them, as it justly may, with an ecstacy of gladness, and they shall cry out before all the gazing spectators, This is our God, whom we have depended on for the salvation which He promised us. Reading.

10. — Moab shall be trodden down &c.] Rather, "Moab shall be threshed in his place, as the straw is threshed under the wheels of the car;" Bp. Lowth; or by the feet of oxen. The original verb does not signify to "be trodden down," but to "be threshed," as noted in the margin: and straw is too valuable in the East to be "trodden down for the dunghill." Severe calamities inflicted on nations and people are in Scripture often compared to the oriental manner of threshing corn and straw; see 2 Kings xiii. 7; Amos i. 3; Hab. iii. 12: compare Isaiah xxi. 10; xli. 15; Dan. ii. 35. Parkhurst.

In this name are intended to be included all the neighbouring states who were enemies of the Jewish nation; that is, in a spiritual sense, all people who should oppose the kingdom of the Messiah. Vitringa. For as the Gentile world, grafted into the Church and proselyted to the true religion, are comprehended in the name of "Israel," so those that continue to reject and oppose it are reasonably couched under the title of "enemies of Israel;" and what might in some respects have a literal relation to the state and circumstances of the nations bordering upon Judea, will be found to have a typical but more important view to the heathen world in general. Dr. Berriman.

11. And he shall spread forth his hands &c.] There is great obscurity in this place: some understand God as the agent, others Moab. Bp. Lowth. Some understand the words of Moab doing all he can to save himself, as swimmers do when in danger of drowning; yet that "God should bring down his pride:" others interpret the whole verse of God; that He should stretch forth His hands and reach His enemies wherever they might be. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXVI. ver. 1. — We have a strong city.] In opposition to the city of the enemy which God had destroyed, chap. XXV. 2; or to "the lofty city," ver. 5 of this chapter; under which similitude are represented those who pride themselves on worldly power and greatness, and are enemies of God's truth. The Church is the city of God, Heb. xii. 22. Compare with this place also, chap. lx. 18; Zech. ii. 5. Pp. Lowth, W. Lowth.

2. Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation &c.] The expression denotes the enlarging of the number of believers, and the bringing into the Church daily of such as should be saved." Compare chap. lx. 11; Rev. xxi. 25. W. Lowth.

3. Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee:] Peace is then perfect, when we have it with God, with our neighbour, and with ourselves. This threefold peace of heaven, of charity, of conscience, is the grace and gift of Christ; none is "perfect" and complete but that which He bestows. Wogan.

5. — the feet of the poor.] The planting of the Gospel was a remarkable triumph over the power and the wisdom of men; when "God chose the foolish things of the world to confound the things which were wise; and the weak things of the world to confound the things which were mighty:" and under every advancement of Christ's kingdom, the poor and the humble, those that have despised the world and been despised by it, are to have a particular share in the glory and success of it. W. Lowth.

9. — when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness.] God does not punish for the sake of punishment merely; even His severities are the effects of goodness, and always directed to the advantage of those who feel them, or at least of others, "that they may hear, and fear, and do no more wickedness." The great comprehensive lesson which He intends to teach by every judgment is, an awful regard to Himself as the moral Governour of the world, and the practice of religion. Abp. Secker.

11. — yea, the fire of thine enemies &c.] Yea, that fire of Thy wrath, which Thou reservest for Thine enemies, shall devour them. Bp. Hall.

13. — other lords beside thee have had dominion over us: &c.] We, who had not the grace to submit ourselves wholly to Thy government, have been justly given over to the tyranny of wicked rulers, who have exacted sinful obedience from us: but we will stick close unto Thee alone, and through Thy gracious aid will hold firm to Thy truth, and yield to no other religion but that which Thou hast prescribed us. Bp. Hall.

19. Thy dead men shall live, &c.] Rather, "Thy dead shall live; my deceased, they shall rise." Bp. Lowth.

is here thus expressed, with manifest opposition to what is said above (ver. 14) of the tyrants under whom they had groaned, that they should be utterly destroyed, should never be restored to their former power and glory: It should appear, from the Prophet's using this metaphor, that the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead was at that time a popular and common doctrine. Bp. Lowth. The restoration of the Jews, whether after the Babylonish captivity, or after their dispersions in following times, is represented as a rising again from the dead by Ezekiel, chap. xxxvii; and this place of Isaiah may in its primary sense mean no more: but this was undoubtedly one of those texts upon which the ancient Jews grounded their belief of the resurrection, the hope of which was founded on "the law and the prophets," as St. Paul tells them, Acts. xxiv. 14. W. Lowth. The ancient Jews understood this passage so: the Prophet speaks of the figurative and typical resurrection of the Jewish state and church, but the phraseology is taken from the resurrection of the last day, and to it is our attention intended to be directed. Vitringa.

—— thy dew is as the dew of herbs,] The force of the comparison seems to be, As the hidden dew of herbs revives them, so shall Thine, O Lord, (compare Hos. xiv. 5.) the power of Thy word and blessing, Thy vivifying Spirit, call to life Thy dead bodies; that is, those of Thy faithful servants. Vitringa.

20. Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, &c.] The Prophet appears here in the person of God, to confirm the hopes and expectations contained in the preceding hymn of the faithful, by an exhortation to patience, and promise of support and deliverance from all the judgments and persecutions, which might in aftertimes befall the people of God, or Church of Christ; to terminate with those terrible but short calamities, which shall be in the days of Antichrist emphatically so called. Vitringa, Dr. Wells.

21. — the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity:] See note on chap. xi. 4.

Chap. XXVII. ver. 1. — leviathan the piercing serpent, even leviathan that crooked serpent;] These seem to be distinct animals; the former probably the crocodile, the other the common serpent or dragon: to them is joined the sea-monster or whale. These are used allegorically for great potentates, enemies and persecutors of the people of God; instruments and types of Satan, so often called the "serpent" in Scripture; this first verse seems connected with the two last of the preceding chapter. Bp. Lowth, W. Lowth.

2. — A vineyard of red wine.] The Church is constantly compared to a vineyard; see chap. v. 1, and the passages there referred to in the margin. W. Lowth. Red wine is more esteemed in the East than white. See note at Prov. xxiii. 31. Harmer.

4, 5. Fury is not in me: &c.] God declares, that there is no anger with Him against His Church; which He had termed (ver. 2) "a vineyard of red" (that is, the most precious) "wine;" and for which He testifies (ver. 3) His constant care and anxiety; that the proper objects of His anger are the thorns and briers, which grow under the vine; that if, in the culture of His vine, these should fall in His way, they should be burnt up and destroyed. By these are represented sinners and hypocrites, unprofitable wood, (see note on chap. ix. 18,) who are thus threatened, unless by a timely and true repentance they should make their peace with God, ver. 5. Vitringa.

7. Hath he smitten him, as he smote those that smote him?] "Him" means Israel. God never makes an utter destruction of His people; (see chap. i. 9;) whereas He threatens His enemies with it, and often puts the sentence in execution, as in the case of Amalek, Exod. xvii. 14; Numb. xxiv. 20. "The cast wind," ver. 8, may allude to the "shooting forth" of the branches, being a dry blasting wind; it elsewhere signifies calamities of war and wasting judgments. W. Lowth. The moderation and lenity, with which the severity of God's judgments has been tempered, are set forth, and then the end and design of them, to recover the Jews from idolatry. Bp. Lowth.

9. — when he maketh all the stones of the altar as chalkstones that are beaten in sunder,] This shall be done, says the Prophet, to the abolishing of the very memory of idolatrous worship; see note on chap. ii. 18. So Moses ground the golden calf to powder, Exod. xxxii. 20; and Asa stamped his mother's idol to pieces, 2 Chron. xv. 16. W. Lowth.

10. Yet the defenced city shall be desolate, &c.] The Prophet

12 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that the LORD shall beat off from the channel of the river unto the stream of Egypt, and ye shall be gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel.

mixes threatenings with the promises, as is usual elsewhere; and tells the Jews, that, before these happy days came, great calamities should befall them. W. Lowth.

—— there shall the calf feed, &c.] See note on chap. vii. 25.

11. When the boughs thereof are withered,] This refers still to the vineyard. The scarcity of fuel, especially wood, in most parts of the East, is so great, that they supply it with every thing capable of burning; roots, parings of fruit, withered stalks of herbs and flowers; see Matt. vi. 28—30. Vine twigs are particularly mentioned, as used for dressing their food, by D'Arvieux. See Ezek. xv. 3, 4; John xv. 6. The dressing and pruning of their vines afforded a good supply of the last sort of fuel: but the Prophet says here, that the vines themselves of the beloved vineyard shall be blasted, withered, and broken; and the women shall come and gather them up, and carry them off for firing. Bp. Lowth.

—— a people of no understanding:] These calamities are owing to their own wilful blindness. Compare chap. i. 3; vi. 10; Deut. xxxii. 28. W. Lowth.

12. — the stream of Egypt,] See the note on Gen. xv. 18.

—— ye shall be gathered] We have much the same scene here as in the latter part of chap. xi, and elsewhere not unfrequently in the Prophets: see note on xi. 11. Assyria and Egypt are mentioned in the next verse, as principal countries from whence the dispersions should return; they are usually joined, as chief oppressors of Israel. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXVIII. ver. 1. Woe to the crown of pride, to the drunkards of Ephraim,] Sebaste, the ancient Samaria, is situated on a long mount of an oval figure, surrounded with a rich valley, and a circle of other hills beyond it: it is probable that this suggested the idea of a chaplet or wreath of flowers worn upon their heads on occasions of festivity; expressed by the proud crown and fading flower of drunkards. That this custom of wearing chaplets in their feasts prevailed among the Jews, as well as among the Greeks and Romans, appears from Wisd. ii. 7, 8. Maundrell, Bp. Lowth.

2. Behold, the Lord hath a mighty and strong one, &c.] Under these resemblances the Prophet represents Shalmaneser, who should carry away the ten tribes captive, and make an utter destruction of that kingdom. Compare chap. xxix. 6; xxx. 30. W. Lowth.

4. — which when he that looketh upon it seeth, &c.] This image in the strongest manner expresses the great ease with which the Assyrians should take the city and the whole kingdom, and the avidity with which they should seize the rich prey without resistance. Bp. Lowth.

5. — unto the residue of his people,] To ver. 5, the prophecy has related to the Israelites, and their approaching destruction; here it turns to the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, who were to continue a kingdom after the final captivity of the Israelites. It begins with a favourable prognostication of their affairs under Hezekiah, but soon changes to reproofs and threatenings for their intemperance, disobedience, and profaneness. Bp. Lowth.

6. — that turn the battle to the gate.] That pursue the enemy to the gates of their own cities. See I Sam. xvii. 52; 2 Sam. xi. 23. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

9. Whom shall he teach knowledge? &c.] The scoffers, mentioned ver. 14, seem to be introduced here as uttering their sententious speeches. What, say they, doth He treat us as little children, perpetually inculcating the same elementary lessons, the mere rudiments of knowledge, precept upon precept, &c.? Ver. 11, God may be supposed by His Prophet to retort upon them their own contemptuous mockery, turning it to a sense different from

16. — Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, &c.] The Church being wholly built upon Christ, and all our hopes of salvation depending upon Him, He is often spoken of in Holy Writ under the name and notion of a rock or stone: see the passages referred to in the margin. Bp. Beveridge.

—— he that believeth shall not make haste.] He that believeth God's promises, will patiently depend upon God; and not, out of distrust of His mercy, betake himself to any unlawful means of securing himself, as many did, ver. 15. The Septuagint read, "shall not be ashamed." W. Lowth.

17. Judgment also will I lay to the line, &c.] The Prophet carries on the metaphor of building, and tells the scorners, that God would square His actions by the severest rules of justice. W. Lowth.

20. For the bed is shorter — and the covering narrower &c.] Two proverbial expressions, importing that all worldly comforts are insufficient to cure the disorders they are applied to, and human devices too short to secure us against the hand of Providence, whenever that designs to punish. W. Lowth.

21. For the Lord shall rise up as in mount Perazim,] The destruction of the Philistines there is, in the passages referred to in the margin, compared to a "breach of waters," much the same comparison as is here used, ver. 19. The extraordinary manifestations of God's power there and at Gibeon were for the deliverance of His people; but now God will act contrary to His usual proceedings of grace and mercy. W. Lowth.

23. Give ye ear, and hear my voice.] The foregoing discourse, consisting of severe reproofs and threatenings to the Jews for their vices, and profane contempt of God's warnings by His messengers, the Prophet concludes with an explanation and defence of God's method of dealing with His people in a parable; in which He employs a variety of images, taken from the science of agriculture. As the husbandman uses various methods in preparing his land, and adapting it to the several kinds of seed to be sown, with a due observation of times and seasons; and, when he has gathered in his harvest, employs methods as various in separating the corn from the straw and the chaff by different instruments, according to the nature of the different sorts of grain: so God, with unerring wisdom, instructs, admonishes, and corrects His people; chastises and punishes them in various ways, as the exigence of the case requires; now more moderately, now more severely; always tempering justice with mercy; in order to reclaim the wicked, to improve the good, and finally to separate the one from the other. Bp. Lowth.

25. — the fitches,] A colloquial corruption of "vetches:" a small kind of pea. Dr. Johnson.

26. For his God doth instruct him] "The most High hath ordained husbandry," saith the Son of Sirach, Ecclus. vii. 15. All nations have agreed in attributing agriculture, the most useful of all sciences, to the invention and to the suggestions of their deities; together with all the arts and helps attendant upon it. Passages to this effect are very frequent in profane writers. Bp. Lowth, Vitringa.

27, 28. In these verses four methods of threshing are mentioned by different instruments; the flail, the drag, the wain, and the treading of the cattle. The staff or flail was used for the grain that was too tender to be treated in the other methods. The drag consisted of a sort of frame of strong planks, made rough at the bottom with hard stones or iron; it was drawn by horses or oxen over the corn sheaves spread on the floor, the driver sitting upon it. The wain was much like the former, but had wheels with iron teeth or edges like a saw. The last method of treading out the corn by oxen is well known from the law of Moses, Deut. xxv. 4. For "horsemen," ver. 28, we should read, with the Syriack, Vulgate, and others, "hoofs." Bp. Lowth.

29. This also cometh forth from the Lord of hosts, &c.] Since the Lord of hosts hath given this wit and understanding to plain men, for the management of their affairs, in due times and fit ways; how much more shall He, who is infinite in wisdom, contrive His own works, both of mercy and judgment, with men? Bp. Hall.

Chap. XXIX. This and the four following chapters have an immediate aspect to Sennacherib's invasion: in the beginning of this chapter the Prophet describes the distress during the siege, and the enemy's sudden disappointment: he then proceeds to upbraid the Jews for their hypocrisy and stupidity in "not discerning the signs of the times," as our Saviour speaks, Matt. xvi. 3; nor observing the hand of Providence, evidently shewing itself both in mercies and judgments; which circumstances are very applicable to the times of our Saviour's preaching: he then foretells better times for those who are piously disposed, and concludes with such promises of grace and favour to the meek and humble, as plainly relate to the times of the Gospel. W. Lowth.

Ver. 1. Woe to Ariel, — the city where David dwelt!] "Ariel" signifies "the lion of God," and was a name given to the altar, (see Ezek. xliii. 15, and the margin there,) because it devoured the sacrifices: it is here put for the city of Jerusalem itself, which may be considered as the seat of the fire of God, which should issue from thence to consume His enemies; compare chap. xxxi. 9. This may be meant by what follows, ver. 2, "it shall be unto me as Ariel," or "as the hearth of the great altar;" or an intimation of distant events may be given in this obscure passage, and the city said to resemble the altar, as being all on flame or covered with blood and carcases, as it was to be in aftertimes, when taken by the Chaldeans and by the Romans. Some, according to the common derivation of the word, "the lion of God," or the "strong lion," suppose it to signify the strength of the place. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

— add ye year to year; let them kill sacrifices.] Ironically. Go on year after year; keep your solemn feasts; yet know, that God will punish you for your hypocritical worship, consisting of mere form, destitute of true piety. This might perhaps be delivered at the time of some great feast, when they were thus employed. Bp. Lowth.

4. And thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, &c.] In prophetick language, speaking with a faint voice out of the dust, stands for being in a weak and low condition. Sir I. Newton. Hezekiah sends ambassadors to bespeak the favour of the king of Assyria in very submissive terms, (2 Kings xviii. 14,) and is much humbled by the threats of Rabshakeh, &c. 2 Kings xix. 1; Is. xxxvii. 1. W. Lowth, Bp. Wilson.

8. — as when an hungry man dreameth, and, behold, he eateth; &c.] The Assyrians had swallowed up Jerusalem in imagination: but God intended suddenly to disappoint their hopes, and send them away empty and confounded. W. Lowth.

9. Stay yourselves, and wonder; cry ye out, and cry: they are drunken, but not with wine; &c.] The Prophet upbraids the Jews for their carelessness and stupidity, and compares them to men intoxicated. W. Lowth. Their drunkenness is that drunkenness of intellect, which makes them blind to the prophecies relating to the Messiah, and to themselves, and keeps them to this hour in expectation of a different Messiah from Him whom they crucified. Bp. Horsley. See note on chap. li. 21.

11. And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, &c.] Rabbies of great antiquity and authority have observed from this text, That the knowledge of their prophecies shall be taken from them, and be lost with the Hebrew, their native language: but the Messiah shall restore to them the understanding of both, and open the sealed book. Compare ver. 18 with what is said ver. 10, 11, &c. Bp. Chandler. See note on chap. viii. 16.

14. — the wisdom of their wise men shall perish,] Since this people have trusted to their own wisdom, the very wisest of them shall be blinded; they shall bring down destruction upon themselves by their very wisdom. Bp. Wilson.

How remarkably was this verified, when the rabbies and elders of the Jews, fatally mistaking, applied to their ceremonies and traditions, and rejected the Gospel! and ever since have the same orders minded little else than fabulous stories, and vented trifles for profound mysteries. W. Lowth.

17. — Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest?] A proverbial saying, expressing a great revolution of things, and explained with great probability to have its principal view, beyond the events then near at hand, to the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles. The first were the vineyard of God cultivated and watered by Him in vain, afterwards to be given up and become a wilderness; (see chap. v. 1—7;) the last had been originally barren, but were by the grace of God to become fruitful. See Matt. xxi. 43; Rom. xi. 30, 31. Bp. Lowth.

may mean their seeking refuge and protection from Egypt without any direction from God; (see ver. 2;) or, in general, forming schemes to secure themselves, by ungodly methods, called a "covering" or "hiding-place of falsehood:" see chap. xxviii. 15, 17; xxix. 15. W. Lowth.

4. For his princes were at Zoan, and his ambassadors came to Hanes.] These are principal cities of Egypt. "Hanes" is called, Jer. ii. 16; xliii. 7; Ezek. xxx. 18, "Tahpanes," Tahpanhes," and "Tehaphnehes." "Zoan" is mentioned, chap. xix. 11, 13. W. Lowth. See the note on the latter place. So fond were the Jews of their Egyptian allies, that even the good Hezekiah sent ambassadors to treat with them for succours against Sennacherib. Thus the best of men are too apt, on the first appearance of danger or surprise, to have recourse to means not warranted by the laws of God; to seek to other aids than those which the grace of God has provided. Wogan.

This confederacy might perhaps be owing to the prevalent sway of the "princes" and great men, a chief of whom was in all likelihood Shebna, against whom is denounced that severe prophecy, chap. xxii. 15. Dr. Wells.

5. They were all ashamed of a people that could not profit them, &c.] The Egyptians in alliance with the Ethiopians did assist the Jews against Sennacherib, but they were both entirely routed. See chap. xx. 5. W. Lowth.

6. The burden of the beasts of the south:] The word "burden" here seems to be used in its proper sense; the load, not the oracle. Bp. Lowth.

—— from whence come — the viper and fiery flying serpent,] The wilderness that lies between Egypt and Judea is thus described by Moses, Deut. viii. 15. W. Lowth. This was designed to be a kind of barrier between the Israelites and Egypt, of which the Lord says, Deut. xvii. 16, "Ye shall henceforth return no more that way." Bp. Lowth.

Concerning the "fiery flying serpent," see note on Numb. xxi 6. Niebuhr mentions a sort of serpents, as does Pliny also, that twirl themselves by the tail to a branch of one date tree, and so spring to the branches of another; hence the modern Arabs call them "flying serpents:" Anson speaks of flying serpents at the island of Quibo; they "darted themselves" from the boughs of trees upon man and beast, but were without wings. Probably these mentioned by Isaiah here, and chap. xiv. 29, were of this species. Parkhurst. They are called "flying serpents" from their springing up like a dart. W. Lowth.

7. — therefore have I cried concerning this,] Or, as in the margin, "I have cried to her," that is, to Jerusalem, that their best security will be to be quiet, and see the salvation which God will work for them; see ver. 15. W. Lowth.

10. — Prophesy not unto us right things, &c.] These were not the very words they spake, but this was the true meaning of what they said: see their behaviour to Jeremiah, Jer. xx. 1; xxxviii. 4, 5; to Amos, Amos vii. 10; and to Micaiah, 1 Kings xxii. 8, 27. W. Lowth.

They conferred all their favours upon such prophets as took care to say nothing that was displeasing or contrary to the politicks of the times, but represented God as favourable to their designs, when He was utterly against them: but the plain-dealing preachers, who spoke to them the word of the Lord without reserve or disguise, were the objects of their hatred and aversion. Reading.

13. — as a breach ready to fall, swelling out in a high wall,] The buildings in Asia in general consist of little better than what we call mud-walls: see Sir J. Chardin's note on chap. ix. 10. Thevenot says much the same of the houses in Persia. This shews how obvious and expressive the image is. The Psalmist uses the same, to imply sudden and utter destruction, Ps. lxii. 3. Bp. Lowth.

18. — therefore will the Lord wait, &c.] The seeming incoherence of the prophetick style would be avoided in many places by regarding the various sense of the Hebrew particles more carefully than interpreters have generally done. The particle rendered therefore may be more clearly here, and in some other places, translated nevertheless; (W. Lowth;) or, in this place perhaps, after this. Dr. Blayney.

19. For the people shall dwell in Zion &c.] From this verse to the twenty-seventh, follow many gracious promises of mercy, several of which cannot with propriety be applied to the prosperous times of Hezekiah's reign, which succeeded to the great deliverance; but we are rather to suppose the Prophet, taking a hint from them, and carried on to the better days that were to be under the Gospel. W. Lowth.

22. Ye shall defile also the covering of thy graven images &c.] See note on chap. ii. 18.

24. — thist car the ground] "Ear," that is, plough. See the note on Gen. xlv. 6. Concerning winnowing, see note at Ruth iii. 2; Ps. i. 4.

From this passage it appears, that asses as well as oxen were anciently employed in Judea for ploughing, and so they are in the East to this day. Dr. Russell says, that after the camel, the ass may be reckoned the next in importance among the Syrian beasts of burden. Large caravans of them are employed in bringing provisions from the villages: they serve also for the plough. And Niebuhr tells us, that near Bagdad he twice saw an ass harnessed to a plough together with oxen. Parkhurst.

25. — there shall be — rivers and streams of waters] Rain, and dew, and living water, are put in prophetick language for the graces and doctrines of the Spirit, and the defect of rain for spiritual barrenness. Sir I. Newton. See ver. 23.

— in the day of the great slaughter, when the towers fall.] This must refer to the great and terrible destruction of God's enemies, which shall be hereafter, when the strong fortifications, or perhaps the great ones of the earth, denoted here by the towers, shall fall. See Rev. xiv. 20; xix. 21. W. Lowth.

26. — the light of the moon &c.] The Hebrew poets, to express happiness, prosperity, advancement of kingdoms, &c, make use of images taken from the most striking parts of nature, from the heavenly bodies, the sun, moon, and stars, shining with increased splendour, and never setting; new heavens and a new earth are created, and a brighter age commences: calamity, the overthrow and destruction of kingdoms, are represented by opposite images. See notes on chap. v. 30; xiii. 10, 13. Bp. Lowth.

27. Behold, the name of the Lord cometh from far, burning with his anger, &c.] From hence to the end of the chapter follows a lively description of God's vengeance, devouring the Assyrian army like fire, and consuming it all at once. W. Lowth.

28. — to sift the nations with the sieve of vanity;] The sieve or van of the ancients was a large instrument somewhat like a shovel, with a long handle, with which they tossed the corn mixed with the chaff and chopped straw into the air, that the wind might separate them. "But the van," Kimchi observes, "with which God will winnow the nations, will be the van of emptiness or perdition: for nothing useful shall remain behind, but all shall come to nothing and perish. In like manner, a bridle is designed to guide the horse in the right way; but the bridle which God will here put into the jaws of the people, shall not direct them aright, but shall, in His judgment on their stubbornness, make them err, and lead them into destruction." This latter image the Prophet applies to the same subject, chap. xxxvii. 29. Bps. Lowth and Hall.

xxiii. 32. The feast of the Passover is chiefly alluded to here, which was kept in the evening, and the supper concluded with a hymn; Matt. xxvi. 30. W. Lowth.

32. And in every place where the grounded staff shall pass, &c.] In an old English translation it is much plainer, "Whithersoever he goes, the rod shall cleave unto him, which the Lord shall lay upon him." The words translated "the grounded staff," signify such a rod or stroke as sinks deep, and makes lasting marks in the flesh. W. Lowth.

The verse may be thus paraphrased: So shall the Lord smite him again, and smite him soundly and deep, so that the prints of His staff shall be seen upon him; and, wheresoever the Lord shall lay His heavy hand upon him, the judgment shall be entertained with the joy and acclamation of all his oppressed neighbours, as a benefit to themselves; and in all his terrifying battles will the Lord, with His staff of vengeance, fight against him. Bp. Hall.

—— battles of shaking] "Shaking," or stretching out, the hand of the Lord. See chap. xix. 16. Parkhurst.

33. — Tophet is ordained of old; &c.] See note at 2 Kings xxiii. 10.

The sense of the verse may be given thus: For God from the foundations of the world hath ordained a place and state of torment for His wicked and reprobate enemies; yea, for the proud king of Assyria, and all those cruel tyrants which do here oppress His church, hath God prepared a woeful and inconceivably dreadful condemnation in hell fire: which is poorly represented in that hideous valley of Ben-Hinnom, wherein with much shrieking and horrour the bodies of men are consumed in the fire: but, alas, what is that flame to this unquenchable one, which is kindled by the breath of the Lord as with streams of brimstone; and therefore never can go out, never can be abated! Bp. Hall.

Chap. XXXI. ver. 1. — stay on horses, and trust in chariots,] See note on chap. ii. 6, 7. Egypt is described here, and elsewhere in Scripture, as abounding in horses; it has been remarked that profane writers have not much noticed this circumstance; but it must be remembered, that the period they chiefly treat of was subsequent to the cutting up of the country with the multitude of canals, which would greatly alter its face, and which alone is mentioned by Herodotus as rendering it unfit for horses; we may add also the circumstance of the seat of government being, under the latter kings of Egypt, fixed at a place very near upon the sea, Alexandria. Bochart, Vitringa.

5. As birds flying, &c.] Compare Deut. xxxii. 11. W. Lowth.

—— and passing over he will preserve it.] Most interpreters observe in this place an allusion to the deliverance which God vouchsafed His people, when, going through the land of Egypt to smite the firstborn, He "passed over" the houses of the Israelites. The similitude designed in this verse seems to be, As the mother bird spreads her wings to cover her young, throws herself before them, and opposes the rapacious bird that assaults them, so shall the Lord defend Jerusalem, protecting and delivering, springing forward and rescuing her. In the same manner may the act of "passing over," Exod. xii. 23, be supposed to consist in the Lord's springing forward to arrest the hand of the destroying angel. Bp. Lowth.

8. Then shall the Assyrian fall with the sword, not of a mighty man,] Literally rendered, "of no man." Bp. Lowth. See note on chap. x. 15. He shall not fall by any mortal power, but by the hand of an angel; chap. xxxvii. 36. If we follow the common opinion, that the Assyrian army was destroyed by a pestilential disease, the immediate stroke of Heaven, the expressions here exactly agree with the description of the angel who smote

Accordingly, the wisdom and piety of Hezekiah was a support and comfort to his subjects; but what follows, especially in ver. 3, 4, relates to happier times than Hezekiah ever lived to enjoy; his reign can only be glanced at here, as an image and shadow of the great improvements in grace and holiness, which belong to the Gospel-times, under the government of Christ, and the assistance of His Spirit. W. Lowth.

The Messiah is "the righteous King" to come, by whom (as ver. 3) the curse shall be removed from them that heard but understood not, and saw but perceived not. Bp. Chandler. See notes on chap. viii. 16; xxix. 11.

The first and second verses may be thus paraphrased: 1. Behold, the Messiah, the true King of His Church, shall reign in righteousness; and those, who shall have the administration thereof under Him, shall rule in due equity and moderation: 2. And that man, God and man, shall be a sure refuge to His elect in all their distresses and calamities; and shall be a gracious refreshing to them, even as a clear river, &c. Bp. Hall.

This will well apply likewise to the first followers of Christ, who by the miraculous power of the Spirit, from plain, simple, illiterate men, became endued at once with such wisdom and eloquence, as none of their adversaries were able to gainsay or resist. Wogan.

9. Rise up, ye women that are at ease; hear my voice, ye careless daughters;] The Prophet returns to the calamities that should befall, addressing, as some think, the careless and delicate women of his time, (as chap. iii. 16;) as others say, the cities of Judea, under this figurative name. Vitringa.

20. Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters, &c.] This sowing in watery places exactly answers the manner of planting rice; for they sow it upon the water; and before sowing, while the earth is covered with water, they cause the ground to be trodden by oxen, horses, and asses; and this is the way of preparing the ground for sowing. As they sow the rice on the water, they transplant it in the water. Sir J. Chardin.

The Prophet foresees and pronounces blessed the lot of those that should go out in the Gospel times to sow the word in all lands, when the desert of the Gentiles should be changed into a fruitful field, and the parched ground become springs of water, chap. xxx. 25; xxxv. 7. We may suppose him to contrast withal this happy prospect with his own fruitless labours in preaching to the obstinate and impenitent Jews. Vitringa.

Chap. XXXIII. We may call this chapter a triumphant ode upon the destruction of Sennacherib's army before Jerusalem. The Prophet sets forth the several scenes of that transaction with all the beauties of poetical description. At the beginning he addresses himself to Sennacherib, "Woe to thee that spoilest, &c," expressing the injustice of his ambitious designs, and the sudden disappointment of them. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 2. O Lord, be gracious unto us; &c.] The Jews are here introduced offering up their earnest supplications to God in their present distressful condition; with expressions of their trust and confidence in His protection. Bp. Lowth.

—— be thou their arm] Several versions give it, "our arm or strength." Bp. Lowth.

3. — at the lifting up of thyself the nations were scattered.] It has been usual to consider God the person addressed here; and the Assyrians, ver 4: it seems better to consider the Prophet, or God Himself, to be addressing Sennacherib, and threatening him, that notwithstanding the terrour he had occasioned in the invaded countries, (the people mentioned ver. 8,) yet he should fall, and become an easy prey (ver. 4) to him (that people) whom he had intended to subdue. Bp. Lowth.

5, 6. The Lord is exalted; &c.] A chorus of Jews is introduced, acknowledging the mercy and power of God, who had undertaken to protect them; extolling it in opposition to the boasted power of their enemies; and celebrating the wisdom and piety of their king Hezekiah, who had placed his confidence in the favour of God. Bp. Lowth.

6. — shall be the stability of thy times, — the fear of the Lord is his treasure.] Such variation of persons, as we have here, and above, ver. 2, are not uncommon. Vitringa, W. Lowth. See Bp. Lowth's note on Deut. xxxii. 5.

7—10. In these verses the Prophet describes the disappointment of Hezekiah's ambassadors, who humbly sued for peace, (which indeed had been bought, 2 Kings xviii. 14, 15, 16, though Sennacherib would not stand to the agreement;) the damp that struck upon the spirits of the whole nation; and, ver. 10, the immediate interposition of God when matters became desperate. W. Lowth.

10. Now will I rise, saith the Lord;] God Himself is again introduced, declaring that He will interpose in this critical situation of affairs, and disappoint the vain designs of the enemies of His people, by discomfiting them and utterly consuming them. Bp. Lowth.

11, 12. Ye shall conceive chaff, &c.] Here follows, still in the person of God, which however falls at last into that of the Prophet, a description of the dreadful apprehensions of the wicked in those times of distress and imminent danger, finely contrasted with the confidence and security of the righteous, and their trust in the promises of God, that He will be their never-failing strength and protector. Bp. Lowth. So will the second coming of the Messiah to judge the world, which brings joy and gladness to such as look for His salvation, be dreadful and terrible to His opposers. Dr. Berriman. And the exclamations of the "sinners in Zion," ver. 14, may be well applied to the terrours of hell torments, which, when the consciences of sinners begin to be awakened, fill them with just apprehension of the Divine wrath. W. Lowth. The Chaldee Paraphrast renders "everlasting burnings," "the gehenna of everlasting fire." Bp. Lowth. See notes on chap. xxx. 33; lxvi. 24.

Lowth, Bp. Lowth.*

19. — a people of deeper speech than thou canst perceive;] The Hebrew expresses a foreign language by a "deep lip" or "speech;" our translators render it, "a strange speech," Ezek. iii. 5, 6. W. Lowth.

22. For the Lord is our judge, &c.] We must observe that in this verse, as in many other places of the Old Testament, the name of the Lord thrice repeated has been usually thought to refer to the mystery of the blessed Trinity. Vitringa. This passage is parallel to the form of blessing given Numb. vi. 24, 25, 26. Bp. Kidder. See notes on that place.

23. Thy tacklings are loosed; &c.] Having compared the Assyrian army to a naval force, ver. 21, the Prophet persists in that metaphor, and describes them as in a shipwrecked condition, the spoil of the wreck to be divided among the citizens of Jerusalem, even the sick and diseased of them throwing aside their infirmities, and recovering strength enough to hasten to the general plunder. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

24. — the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick: the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity.] The last sentence is parallel to the former, and expresses the same sense in other words: sickness being considered as a visitation from God, and punishment for sin, the forgiveness of sin is equivalent to the removal of a disease. We find them thus coupled, Ps. ciii. 3; and our blessed Saviour reasons with the Jews on the same principle, Mark ii. 9. Bp. Lowth.

The fulfilment of this prophecy appears from the history of the great event given by the Prophet: it is plain that Hezekiah, by his treaty with Sennacherib, had stripped himself of his whole treasure, 2 Kings xviii. 15, 16: his "exceeding much riches," afterwards, 2 Chron. xxxii. 27, cannot be otherwise accounted for, than by the prodigious spoil that was taken on the destruction of the Assyrian army. Bp. Lowth.

Chap. XXXIV. This chapter and the next make one distinct prophecy; an entire, regular, and beautiful poem, consisting of two parts: the first, containing a denunciation of Divine vengeance against the enemies of the people or church of God; the second, describing the flourishing state of the church consequent upon the execution of those judgments. The event foretold is represented as of universal concern; all nations are called upon to attend to the declaration of it; and the wrath of God is denounced against all the nations, that is, against all those who had provoked to anger the Defender of the cause of Zion. Among those Edom is particularly specified. Accordingly, the Edomites were, with the neighbouring nations, ravaged and laid waste by Nebuchadnezzar: (see Jer. xxv. 15—26; Mal. i. 3, 4:) and this may be the event which the Prophet has primarily in view in chap. xxxiv; but this event seems by no means to come up to the terms of the prophecy, or to justify so high-wrought and so terrible a description: also, that the thirty-fifth chapter has a view beyond any thing that could be the immediate consequence of this event, is plain from every part of it, and especially from ver. 5, 6. It seems therefore that (Edom and Bozrah being put by a common figure for God's enemies in general) this prophecy has a farther view to events still future, to some great revolutions to be effected in later times, antecedent to that more perfect state of the kingdom of God upon earth, which the Holy Scriptures warrant us to expect, and serving to introduce it. Bp. Lowth. The second and third verses may very fitly be applied to "the battle of that great day of God Almighty," mentioned Rev. xvi. 14, compared with chap. xvii. 14; xix. 19; as do several parts of this chapter correspond with several verses of Revelation, chap. xvii, xviii. W. Lowth.

Ver. 3. Their slain also shall be cast out, &c.] The Prophet, in the description of this terrible judgment, begins with the common circumstances, which attend the slaughter made by a victorious enemy; ver. 4, he rises in tone, and, borrowing his images from original chaos, (as is usual in describing the overthrow of kingdoms, see notes on chap. xiii. 10, 13,) goes on to represent, as it were, the dissolution of all things: presently, (ver. 5, 6, 7,) a vast and splendid sacrifice is introduced, of such animals as best represent the pride, cruelty, insolence of tyrants, leaders of the nations hostile to God; next is this complete destruction represented by allusion to the overthrow of Sodom, (ver. 9, 10,) and the whole concludes (ver. 11. to the end) with a picture of the most gloomy solitude and frightful devastation. Bp. Lowth.

5. — my sword shall be bathed] In the blood of these people: the same word is rendered in Jer. xlvi. 10, "shall be made drunk." This is said to be done "in heaven," because it was there decreed to be done. Poole. Bp. Hall.

6. The sword of the Lord is filled with blood, &c.] God shall take full vengeance on His enemies; His sword shall be, as it were, fed with the blood of His great and noted adversaries: this slaughter of His shall be like to that of an universal sacrifice, which shall be killed on the altar of the land of Edom, and all the regions of His proud opposites. Bp. Hall.

—— a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumea.] Considering the original sense of these words, they may fitly be applied to a place of slaughter: "Edom" signifying red, as blood is; and "Bozrah," a vintage; which in the prophetick idiom often denotes God's vengeance on the wicked. See particularly chap. lxiii. 3, in which chapter these words are again joined together. W. Lowth. Ezekiel has manifestly imitated this passage of Isaiah, chap. xxxix. 17, 18. The sublime author of the Revelation (chap. xix. 17, 18,) has taken this image from Ezekiel rather than Isaiah. Bp. Lowth. The destruction of Edom is foretold in a strain not less hyperbolical than this of Isaiah by Jeremiah, chap. xlix. 7—22; by Ezekiel, chap. xxxv. and xxv. 13; and by Obadiah. Jos. Mede.

11. But the cormorant and the bittern shall possess it; &c.] Beside the passages referred to in the margin, with this verse and with ver. 13, 14, 15, compare chap. xiii. 21; xiv. 23. W. Lowth.

—— the stones of emptiness.] The Hebrew word Eben, which signifies a "stone," is sometimes taken for a "plummet," as Zech. iv. 10. That sense will best agree with this place, and makes it exactly parallel with 2 Kings xxi. 13, where, as here, the instruments of building are applied to destroying. W. Lowth. The meaning is, God shall condemn it to perpetual confusion and ruin, never to be either built or inhabited. Bp. Hall.

16. Seek ye out of the book of the Lord,] God's omniscience is often described in Scripture as a register book, wherein every occurrence is exactly set down. See chap. lxv. 6; Deut. xxxii. 34; Ps. lvi. 8. So this prophecy, says the text, is a register of the fate of Idumea; whosoever in aftertimes will compare the event with this, will find every circumstance here foretold punctually fulfilled. W. Lowth. Such seems to be the drift of the exhortation, directed here by the Prophet to men of but little faith, who were too apt to receive his assertion with doubt and caution. Some have supposed Isaiah here to refer them to all the passages of Holy Writ which threaten Edom. Vitringa.

—— my mouth it hath commanded, and his spirit it hath gathered them.] Some manuscripts give, "The mouth of the Lord hath commanded, &c." with which reading the Septuagint agrees. Bp. Lowth. By "them" are intended the creatures mentioned in verses 13, 14, 15. W. Lowth.

17. And he hath cast the lot for them, and his hand hath divided it unto them by line:] That is, with the same exactness as He divided the Holy Land by lot among the children of Israel, Josh. xviii. 8; Ps. lxxviii. 55. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXXV. As the judgments denounced in the last chapter belong not only to "Idumea," but to later times and occurrences, so the new face of things described in this is to be applied to the flourishing state of the Church, or golden age of the Gospel, to commence from our Saviour's appearing, and to be more fully completed when all His enemies "shall be destroyed." When the Divine justice is made manifest in punishing incorrigible sinners, it is usual to describe it as matter of rejoicing to the righteous. See Ps. lviii. 10, 11; Jer. li. 10, 48. And here the Church, which had before been desolate and forlorn, a "wilderness" and "solitary place," (see Rev. xii. 14,) is said to be about to rejoice, when these judgments shall be executed upon God's enemies and her persecutors. W. Lowth, Bp. Wilson. See the note on chap. xxix. 17.

Ver. 5, 6. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, &c.] This prophecy very fully expresses the power of miracles, with which our Saviour was to be dignified, in curing all manner of diseases, of which the Prophet here names only four, to give a specimen of the rest; and it seems as if he had chosen these sorts before others, because throughout the Scriptures we do not find that any Prophet did the like. Dean Allix. Our Lord's appeal, in His answer to the Baptist's messengers, lies not to miracles in general, but to such as were more particularly predicted of the Messiah. Dean Stanhope.

6, 7. — in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. And the parched ground shall become a pool, &c.] The cultivation and watering of desert and thirsty lands is so apt and constant an emblem, in the language of parables, to designate the more plentiful effusion of Divine grace and spiritual gifts, that expressions of this kind hardly need explanation: those that follow here are analogous, and serve only to set forth more at large, and with additional ornament, the same thing. Bp. Lowth. See notes on chap. xxx. 25; xliv. 3.

8. — but it shall be for those: &c.] The words here may be better translated, as the marginal rendering gives it in part, "But He (that is, God) shall go along with them in the way, and the simple shall not err therein." W. Lowth. Some ancient manuscripts are favourable to this way of taking the passage, and our old English versions translate to this purpose. Bp. Lowth. The meaning of the "wayfaring man," or the "simple's not erring," (as figuratively applicable to the Christian church,) is, that the duties required of us by God are so plain and evident, that he, who sets himself to the practice of them, though he be of slow understanding, cannot but know them; or, again, that the condition of the covenant required of us under Christ is not such, as that any man through weakness, ignorance, or involuntary error, should lose his part of the promise of that covenant; but only deliberate sins against grace and against knowledge are imputed to any man to his ruin. Dr. Hammond. See note on Deut. xxx. 14.

9. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast] We may understand to be implied by this, that men of brutish appetites, of cruel and voracious tempers, shall despise Christ's preaching; neither shall any that delight in wickedness, or trust in themselves and their own reason, the haughty scorners, receive His doctrine, or embrace the Gospel, but the godly alone and humble. Bps. Chandler and Wilson.

10. And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads:] The last phrase may allude to the crowns or garlands put on the heads of newly married persons; and used at other times of publick rejoicing: compare 1 Thess. ii. 19. The former part to the expressions of joy used in going up to Jerusalem on the solemn festivals. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXXVI. The history of the invasion of Sennacherib, and of the miraculous destruction of his army, which makes the subject of so many of Isaiah's prophecies, is very properly inserted here, as affording the best light to many parts of those prophecies; and as almost necessary to introduce the prophecy in 3 Then came forth unto him Eliakim, Hilkiah's son, which was over the house, and Shebna the ‖ scribe, and Joah, Asaph's son, the recorder.

‖ Or, secretary.

4 ¶ And Rabshakeh said unto them, Say ye now to Hezekiah, Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, What confidence is this wherein thou trustest?

[b] Ezek. 29. 6, 7.

7 But if thou say to me, We trust in the LORD our God: is it not he, whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah hath taken away, and said to Judah and to Jerusalem, Ye shall worship before this altar?

8 Now therefore give ‖ pledges, I pray thee, to my master the king of Assyria, and I will give thee two thousand horses, if thou be able on thy part to set riders upon them.

‖ Or, hostages.

9 How then wilt thou turn away the face of one captain of the least of my master's servants, and put thy trust on Egypt for chariots and for horsemen?

10 And am I now come up without the LORD against this land to destroy it? the LORD said unto me, Go up against this land, and destroy it.

11 ¶ Then said Eliakim and Shebna and Joah unto Rabshakeh, Speak, I pray thee, unto thy servants in the Syrian language; for we understand it: and speak not to us in the Jews' language, in the ears of the people that are on the wall.

12 ¶ But Rabshakeh said, Hath my master sent me to thy master and to thee to speak these words? hath he not sent me to the men that sit upon the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own piss with you?

13 Then Rabshakeh stood, and cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and said, Hear ye the words of the great king, the king of Assyria.

Before CHRIST 710.

14 Thus saith the king, Let not Hezekiah deceive you: for he shall not be able to deliver you.

15 Neither let Hezekiah make you trust in the LORD, saying, The LORD will surely deliver us: this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

16 Hearken not to Hezekiah: for thus saith the king of Assyria, ‖ † Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me: and eat ye every one of his vine, and every one of his fig tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his own cistern;

20 Who are they among all the gods of these lands, that have delivered their land out of my hand, that the LORD should deliver Jerusalem out of my hand?

21 But they held their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not.

22 ¶ Then came Eliakim, the son of Hilkiah, that was over the houshold, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah, the son of Asaph, the recorder, to Hezekiah with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rabshakeh.

the thirty-seventh chapter, being the answer of God to Hezekiah's prayer, which could not be properly understood without it. We find the same narrative in the second book of Kings, chapters xviii, xix, and xx: and this and the three following chapters of Isaiah, for much the most part, the account of the sickness of Hezekiah only excepted, are but a different copy of that narration. The difference of the two copies is little more than what has manifestly arisen from the mistakes of transcribers. Some few sentences, or members of sentences, are omitted in Isaiah, which are found in the book of Kings: whether these omissions were made by design or by mistake, may be doubted. *Bp. Before CHRIST 710.

AND [a] it came to pass, when king Hezekiah heard it, that he rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth, and went into the house of the LORD.

[a] 2 Kings 19. 1, &c.

2 And he sent Eliakim, who was over the houshold, and Shebna the scribe, and the elders of the priests covered with sackcloth, unto Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz.

4 It may be the LORD thy God will hear the words of Rabshakeh, whom the king of Assyria his master hath sent to reproach the living God, and will reprove the words which the LORD thy God hath heard: wherefore lift up thy prayer for the remnant that is † left.

† Heb. found.

5 So the servants of king Hezekiah came to Isaiah.

6 ¶ And Isaiah said unto them, Thus shall ye say unto your master, Thus saith the LORD, Be not afraid of the words that thou hast heard, wherewith the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me.

‖ Or, put a spirit into him.

7 Behold, I will ‖ send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour, and return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

8 ¶ So Rabshakeh returned, and found the king of Assyria warring against Libnah: for he had heard that he was departed from Lachish.

9 And he heard say concerning Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, He is come forth to make war with thee. And when he heard it, he sent messengers to Hezekiah, saying,

10 Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah king of Judah, saying, Let not thy God, in whom thou trustest, deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be given into the hand of the king of Assyria.

11 Behold, thou hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all lands by destroying them utterly; and shalt thou be delivered?

12 Have the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers have destroyed, as Gozan, and Haran, and Rezeph, and the children of Eden which were in Telassar?

13 Where is the king of Hamath, and the king of Arphad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivah?

14 ¶ And Hezekiah received the letter from the hand of the messengers, and read it: and Hezekiah went up unto the house of the LORD, and spread it before the LORD.

Before CHRIST 710.

15 And Hezekiah prayed unto the LORD, saying,

16 O LORD of hosts, God of Israel, that dwellest between the cherubims, thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth: thou hast made heaven and earth.

17 Incline thine ear, O LORD, and hear; open thine eyes, O LORD, and see: and hear all the words of Sennacherib, which hath sent to reproach the living God.

18 Of a truth, LORD, the kings of Assyria have laid waste all the † nations, and their countries, † Heb. lands.

19 And have † cast their gods into the fire: for they were no gods, but the work of men's hands, wood and stone: therefore they have destroyed them.

† Heb. given.

20 Now therefore, O LORD our God, save us from his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art the LORD, even thou only.

21 ¶ Then Isaiah the son of Amoz sent unto Hezekiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Whereas thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib king of Assyria:

22 This is the word which the LORD hath spoken concerning him; The virgin, the daughter of Zion, hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorn; the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee.

† Heb. By the hand of thy servants.

23 Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed; and against whom hast thou exalted thy voice, and lifted up thine eyes on high? even against the Holy One of Israel.

† Heb. the tallness of the cedars thereof, and the choice of the fir trees thereof.

¶ Or, Forest and closet.

25 I have digged, and drunk water; and with the sole of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of the ‖ besieged places.

¶ Or, Hast thou not heard how I have made it long ago, and formed it of ancient times?

26 ‖ Hast thou not heard long ago, how I have done it; and of ancient times, that I have formed it? now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldest be to lay waste defenced cities into ruinous heaps.

should I now bring it to be laid waste, and defenced cities to be ruinous heaps?

27 Therefore their inhabitants were † of small power, they were dismayed and confounded: they were as the grass of the

‖ Or, sitting. 28 But I know thy ‖ abode, and thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy rage against me.

29 Because thy rage against me, and thy tumult, is come up into mine ears, therefore will I put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou camest.

30 And this shall be a sign unto thee, Ye shall eat this year such as groweth of itself; and the second year that which springeth of the same: and in the third year sow ye, and reap, and plant vineyards, and eat the fruit thereof.

† Heb. the escaping. [b] 2 Kings 19. 31. Chap. 9. 7.

33 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning the king of Assyria, He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shields, nor cast a bank against it.

34 By the way that he came, by the same shall he return, and shall not come into this city, saith the LORD.

37 ¶ So Sennacherib king of Assyria departed, and went and returned, and dwelt at Nineveh.

38 And it came to pass, as he was worshipping in the house of Nisroch his god, that Adrammelech and Sharezer his sons smote him with the sword; and they escaped into the land of † Armenia: and Esar-haddon his son reigned in his stead.

† Heb. with great weeping.

4 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD to Isaiah, saying,

5 Go, and say to Hezekiah, Thus saith the LORD, the God of David thy father, I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears: behold, I will add unto thy days fifteen years.

6 And I will deliver thee and this city out of the hand of the king of Assyria: and I will defend this city.

7 And this shall be a sign unto thee from the LORD, that the LORD will do this thing that he hath spoken;

5. — I have heard thy prayer,] From these words, compared with the first verse, it appears, that this sickness would have put an end to Hezekiah's life, if he had not earnestly prayed to God to spare him; and that God was moved by his prayers to reverse the sentence of death which was gone out against him, and to grant him a longer continuance on the throne of his kingdom. It appears also from the preceding chapter, that Hezekiah by his prayers obtained another miraculous deliverance; namely, that from the army of the Assyrians. Those things are written for our admonition, to excite us to be very diligent and devout in the worship of God, since the issues of life and death, and of all human affairs, are in His hands; and He has assured us, that He is nigh unto all them that call upon Him, that He hears their prayers, and will deny them no manner of thing that is good for them. Reading.

15. What shall I say? &c.] The suddenness of my deliverance surprises me, so that I want words to express my thankfulness: all I can say is, that no sooner did God promise to restore my health, but I immediately found the effects of His goodness. The sense of the latter part of the verse, "I shall go softly &c." is more intelligible in our old translation, which renders the words thus, "I will, so long as I live, remember this bitterness of my life;" that is, The remembrance of the misery I endured shall continually excite me to renew my thankfulness for this Thy mercy. W. Lowth.

16. O Lord, by these things men live, &c.] O Lord, by those words and powerful acts, that proceed from Thee, is the life of man both had and maintained: and especially this life of mine, whereby my breath is still kept in me, is an immediate work of Thine. Bp. Hall.

— thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back.] Hezekiah's prayer hath no confession of sin, but his thanksgiving afterwards hath a very strong one: "Thou hast cast all my sins behind Thy back." And therefore, when he pleaded at first, "Remember, O Lord, I beseech Thee, how I have walked before Thee with a perfect heart, and done that which is good in Thy sight," ver. 3, we should understand him to mean, that as a king he had been zealous for God's true religion, to which consequently his life was of importance; not that as a man he had not deserved death, which all men have. Abp. Secker.

20. The Lord was ready to save me: &c.] The case of Hezekiah, a person of the highest rank, in the prime of life, and the full tide of prosperity, seized with a mortal disease, ought strongly to remind the securest of us all, how uncertain our condition is here on earth. By the goodness of God, a Prophet was sent to him, to admoniah him of the preparation that his state required: and the same goodness hath provided, that we shall all be frequently admonished of the same thing by the ministers of His word. The admonition given him was the means of prolonging his days in peace and comfort; and those given us, if received in a right manner, may, both naturally and providentially, contribute to procure us longer and happier lives in this world; and will certainly lead us to a life of eternal happiness in the next. Abp. Secker.

Chap. XXXIX. See the notes on 2 Kings xx. 12—19. The nature of Hezekiah's crime, and his humiliation on the message of God to him by the Prophet, is more expressly declared by the author of the book of Chronicles, 2 Chron. xxxii. 25, 26, 30, 31. Bp. Lowth.

4 Then said he, What have they seen in thine house? And Hezekiah answered, All that is in mine house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures that I have not shewed them.

5 Then said Isaiah to Hezekiah, Hear the word of the LORD of hosts:

6 Behold, the days come, that all that is in thine house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store until this day, shall be carried to Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith the LORD.

7 And of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away; and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.

8 Then said Hezekiah to Isaiah, Good is the word of the LORD which thou hast spoken. He said moreover, For there shall be peace and truth in my days. Before CHRIST 712.

Chap. XL. The course of prophecies, which follow from hence to the end of the book, and which, taken together, constitute the most elegant part of the sacred writings of the Old Testament, interspersed also with many passages of the highest sublimity, was probably delivered in the latter part of the reign of Hezekiah. The Prophet in the foregoing chapter had delivered a very explicit declaration of the impending dissolution of the kingdom, and of the captivity under the kings of Babylon. As the subject of his subsequent prophecies was to be chiefly of the consolatory kind, he opens them with giving a promise of a restoration, and the return of the people from that captivity, by the merciful interposition of God in their favour. But the views of the Prophet are not confined to this event: the redemption from Babylon is clearly foretold; and at the same time is employed as an image, to shadow out a redemption of an infinitely higher and more important nature—the deliverance of the people of God, Gentiles as well as Jews, from the captivity of sin, and the dominion of death. The Prophet connects these two events together, and hardly ever treats of the former without throwing in some intimations of the latter; sometimes he is so fully possessed with the glories of the future kingdom of the Messiah, that he seems to leave the more immediate subject of his commission almost out of the question. Indeed this evangelical sense of the prophecy is so apparent, and stands forth in so strong a light, that some interpreters cannot see that it has any other, and will not allow the prophecy to have any relation at all to the return from the captivity of Babylon. This literal sense however seems obvious and plain; and, for the spiritual, we have the irrefragable authority of John the Baptist, and of our blessed Saviour Himself, as recorded by all the Evangelists, for applying this beginning of the prophecy to the opening of the Gospel by the preaching of John, and the introducing of the kingdom of the Messiah. Bp. Loweth.

Ver. 1. Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God.] The Prophet declares at once God's command to His messengers, (His prophets, as the Chaldee rightly explains it,) to comfort His people in captivity, to impart to them the joyful tidings, that their punishment has satisfied the Divine justice, and the time of reconciliation and favour is at hand. Bp. Lowth.

2. — she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins.] Double in proportion to God's usual severity in punishing men's sins; see Jer. xvi. 18; Dan. ix. 12: or some take the word "sins" for the punishments due to sin, (as it is often used,) and understand this as a promise of ample recompence for the effects of past displeasure, on the reconciliation of God to His returning people. Compare chap. lxi. 7; Job xlii. 10. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

3. The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, &c.] "The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness," the Baptist applies to himself; as describing a preacher faithfully delivering the word of God in a desert and uncultivated place, that is, among a people barren and unfruitful in good works. The message follows, ver. 3, 4, where, under the allusion of mending or levelling the roads for the progress of great princes, that alteration is suggested, which should be made in the minds and dispositions of men, in order to qualify them to receive the benefit of the Gospel: the roughness of their tempers, and crookedness of their wills, to be rectified and made straight, in order to bring them to that meek and humble spirit which God has promised to "guide in judgment," and instruct in "His way;" Ps. xxv. 9. Dr. Berriman. The idea is taken from the practice of Eastern monarchs, who, whenever they entered upon an expedition, or took a journey, especially through desert and unpractised countries, sent harbingers before them to prepare all things for their passage, and pioneers to open the passes, to level the ways, and to remove all impediments. Bp. Lowth. See note at Matt. iii. 3; and compare Baruch v. 7.

—— our God.] This being spoken of HIM, of whom John the Baptist was to be the forerunner; and the application having been afterwards expressly made by the Baptist to our Lord Jesus; (see John i. 23;) it is evident that He is the Person to whom the Prophet attributes the incommunicable name of Jehovah, and styles Him "our God." Wogan.

5. And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together.] Here it is most evident that the Prince, whose way is to be prepared, can be no other than the Messiah, that great Prince or Potentate who is the general subject of all the Prophets: "the glory of the Lord" foretold in future time, to be manifested to the Gentiles, or to "all flesh," can point out nothing but His glorious days, which are else where drawn out under the like stupendous characters. Bp. Lowth, Dr. Berriman.

The Prophet then introduces a voice, commanding him to make a solemn proclamation, ver. 6, 7, 8. The import of it is, that the people, the flesh, is of a vain temporary nature; that all its glory fadeth, and is soon gone: but that the word of the Lord endureth for ever. What is this, but a plain opposition of the flesh to the spirit; of the carnal Israel to the spiritual; of the temporary Mosaick economy to the eternal Christian dispensation? You may be ready to conclude, (the Prophet may be supposed to say,) by the introduction to my discourse, that my commission is only to comfort you with a promise of the restoration of your religion and polity, of Jerusalem, of the temple; and its services and worship in all its ancient splendour; these are earthly, shadowy, fading things, which shall soon pass away, and be destroyed for ever; these are not worthy to engage your attention in comparison of the greater blessings, the spiritual redemption, the eternal inheritance, covered under the veil of the former, which I have it in charge to unfold unto you. This appears to be agreeable to St. Peter's interpretation of this passage, quoted by him, as the margin refers. Bp. Lowth.

9. O Zion, that bringest good tidings, &c.] The marginal reading gives a much better sense: compare also chap. xli. 27; lii. 7. W. Lowth. The Hebrew participle, rendered "thou that tellest," is in the feminine gender; and the office of announcing and celebrating such glad tidings, as are here spoken of, belonged peculiarly to women; Exod. xv. 20, 21; Judg. xi. 34; 1 Sam. xviii. 6, 7. Bp. Lowth. See note at Ps. lxviii. 11.

10, 11. Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, &c.] This is to be understood of Christ. The words, "His reward is with Him," compared with Rev. xxii. 12; and "He shall feed His flock like a shepherd," compared with the passage of St. John referred to in the margin, are sufficient indications of the Person intended. Dr. Waterland.

With ver. 10 we may compare also Matt. xvi. 27. The expressions in ver. 11 eminently belong to Christ, and represent the gentleness He shall use to the weak ones of His flock, giving them instruction as they are able to bear it, and taking all possible care to bring back stragglers to His fold: as appears by the many allusions in the New Testament to this and similar passages in the Old. W. Lowth.

12. Who hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, &c.] Here begins a lofty description of God's almighty power, shewing that He is great above all His works, and able to do beyond what we can think or conceive; the design of it is, to persuade the people to put their whole trust in Him, to rest assured that He is able to perform who promises, and withal to arm them against idolatry, ver. 18, &c. W. Lowth. The work of creation is the favourite topick which God is pleased to insist upon most, whenever he would distinguish His own peculiar majesty and power above and beyond all the gods of the nations, or excite in His people the highest idea possible suitable to His transcendent excellency; see ver. 26. Many texts to the same purpose might be cited from the following chapters, from the Psalms, and from the Old Testament in general. Dr. Waterland.

16. — Lebanon is not sufficient.] This image is beautiful and uncommon: it is imitated, Judith xvi. 16. Bp. Lowth.

19. The workman melteth a graven image, &c.] The passage may be translated thus: "The workman overspreads the graven image," (of wood namely, mentioned in the next verse,) "even the refiner, or goldsmith, spreadeth it over with gold, and casteth sheets of silver." And so in chap. xliv. 10: "Who hath formed a god, and overspread a graven image" (of wood, see ver. 13—17, and Jer. x. 3, 4.) "that is profitable for nothing?" The noun, rendered "molten image," strictly and properly means the "metalline case or covering spread over" the carved wood, Isa. xlviii. 5; Jer. x. 14. The metalline case is often joined with the carved wooden image which it covered: see Deut. xxvii. 15; Judg. xvii. 3, 4; xviii. 14; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3. Solomon's cherubim were images of this kind, made of olive wood, and overlaid with gold, 1 Kings vi. 23, 28. Parkhurst.

Chap. XLI. In this and the following chapters, God is introduced as pleading His own cause against the false gods of the Heathens, and challenging the idols to shew such instances of their power and goodness, in protecting their votaries, as might be alleged in His behalf, with respect to His care and providence over the Jews: proper instructions to preserve that people from being drawn aside to comply with the Babylonish idolatry. They contain likewise in them a plain prediction of the calling of the Gentiles, and their turning "from idols to serve the living and true God," 1 Thess. i. 9. W. Lowth.

Ver. 1. — O islands;] See notes on chap. xi. 11; xlii. 4.

—— let the people renew their strength:] This seems to be a charge to the nations to make use of their utmost strength in defending their idolatry in the proposed debate. Vitringa.

2. — the righteous man from the east,] Some explain this of Abraham; others of Cyrus. The character of "the righteous man" (or "righteousness," as some give it) agrees best with Abraham; he was called out of the East, and his posterity (who may fairly be taken into the account) were introduced into Canaan, and established there, on purpose to stand as a barrier against idolatry: Cyrus, though not properly a worshipper of images, had nothing in his character to cause such an alarm among idolaters, as is mentioned ver. 5—7; and the Prophet, having just touched upon that circumstance, resumes Abraham and the Israelites, ver. 8. Bp. Lowth. On the other side it may be said, that Cyrus did overthrow the Babylonians, the great supporters of idolatry, their confederates, and many nations; did in consequence liberate the people of God, and restore the true worship: the characteristicks also here used are rather those of a mighty conquerour; and the similar passages which occur ver. 25, and in succeeding chapters, xlv. 1, 13; xlvi. 11, (applying undoubtedly to Cyrus,) incline us to think that he may here also be intended. Vitringa.

4. — I the Lord, the first, and with the last; I am he.] That is, "I Jehovah;" who by the import of My name am the "first," or original of all other beings, and shall be with the "last," that is, am "everlasting." Dr. Wells. Comparing the passages of our Prophet referred to in the margin, we find that the phrase, "first and last," expresses the peerless majesty of God, who is He the "true God;" His eternity, supreme power, dignity, and glory, and His creation and government of all things: in those of St. John, from the Revelation, the same Divine title is given to the Son. Dr. Waterland.

6, 7. They helped every one his neighbour; &c.] In these verses, the several artificers concerned in idol-making are represented as assisting one another, to carry on their common interest; (see Acts xix. 25;) the passage may fitly be applied to the heathen powers combining together to support their idolatry, and suppress the Christian religion. W. Lowth.

14. Fear not, thou worm Jacob, and ye men of Israel;] Or rather, "few men," as the word signifies in the original. (See the margin.) God defended the children of Israel, as long as they continued His people, though very few in comparison, against all the world; and commands them here not to fear, notwithstanding the smallness of their number, and weakness of their estate; He promises them all along (ver. 8—16,) that He will support and uphold the seed of Abraham to the utmost, and at length give them victory over all the heathen nations, their enemies. *Bps. Under the familiar image of a threshingfloor, the Prophet here represents the ruin and dispersion of the wicked, the enemies of Israel. With the Jewish people, (and in simple times elsewhere,) the arts of husbandry formed the chief occupation of all, and even the highest did not disdain them; accordingly, we read in Scripture of kings and other great men being thus employed, and find the poets taking their images from the same quarter. *Bp. 25. I have raised up one from the north, &c.] Cyrus is represented here as coming from "the north," and from the "east:" he was born of two different people, the Persians by his father, the Medes by his mother, and therefore called by the heathen oracle, a Mule. Now Persia lay to the east of Babylon; Media northward; and Cyrus's army (of which the Medes made a considerable part) is described, Jer. l. 9, 41, as coming out of the north. For his profession of belief in the great "God of heaven and earth," see Ezra i. 2. Dean Prideaux, W. Lowth.

27. The first shall say to Zion, &c.] This verse is rather obscurely put: our translators have supplied "shall say;" properly the verb give belongs to both parts, and the same may be more clearly expressed thus, "I first give the word to Zion," (that is, give notice by my prophets of these events, saying,) "Behold, behold them:" (they are at hand!) Chap. XLII. The Prophet, having opened his subject with the preparation for the return from the captivity at Babylon, and intimated that a much greater deliverance was covered under the veil of that event, proceeded to vindicate the power of God, as Creator and Disposer of all things; and His infinite knowledge, from His prediction of future events, and in particular of that deliverance: he went still further, and pointed out the instrument by which He should effect the redemption of His people the Jews from slavery; namely, a great conqueror, whom He would call forth from the north and the east to execute His orders. In this chapter he proceeds to the greater deliverance; and at once brings forth into full view, without throwing any veil of allegory over the subject, the Messiah. St. Matthew has applied it directly to Christ; nor can it with any justice or propriety be applied to any other person or character whatever. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. — he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles.] Meaning here, the law to be published by the Messiah; the institution of the Gospel. Bp. Lowth.

2, 3. He shall not cry, &c.] See note on Matt. xii. 18. He was (as all interpreters explain the proverbial expressions here used) not to employ the least degree of force or violence in the propagation of the new law, till it finally prevailed against all opposition. Accordingly, by the mildness and piety of the followers of Christ, by the secret influence of a Divine blessing attending on their feeble efforts, the doctrine of the cross insensibly gained ground, spread itself far and wide, and in the end became victorious over all the rage and power and sophistry of an unbelieving world. Bp. Hurd.

3. A bruised reed shall he not break, &c.] Those that are humble and contrite shall He rather relieve and comfort, than add any thing to their sorrow and affliction: and those that have received but the weakest beginnings of grace shall have no discouragement from Him, but shall be rather cheered up by Him: yet, so shall He be gracious to the penitently dejected, that He shall not bear with the obstinate sinner; but shall give severe judgment upon him according to the justice of his demerits. Bp. Hall.

4. — the isles shall wait for his law.] Those parts of the world, to which men are wont to travel by sea from Judea, which are most difficult to come at, shall attend to His doctrine, receive His institutions, and submit themselves to His authority: by this phrase is particularly meant the western parts of the world. Dr. Berriman. See note on chap. xi. 11.

5. — he that created the heavens, &c.] See chap. xl. 12, and notes there.

6. — give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles;] God expressly declares here, that the Messiah should mediate a covenant between God and the people; and that the fruit of this covenant should extend to the Gentiles; who should enjoy the same privileges with the Jews, and be incorporated with them, chap. xlix. 8, 9; lv. 3, 4; lxi. 8, 9. The extension of the Messiah's kingdom over the whole earth is mentioned by Isaiah so often, and in so emphatical a manner, that it seems to be the main drift of all his writings. Dean Allix. Indeed the general object of prophecy is the uniting of all nations in the faith of Christ, and the conversion of the Gentiles makes a standing part of all the prophecies of the Saviour of mankind. Bp. Horsley.

7. To open the blind eyes, &c.] The Prophet seems here to set forth the spiritual redemption, under images borrowed from the temporal deliverance. Bp. Lowth.

8. I am the Lord: that is my name:] The import of the name Jehovah (rendered by our translators "the Lord," see note on Exod. iii. 15,) is, according to the best criticks, ancient and modern, eternal, immutable, necessary existence. Dr. Waterland.

—— my glory will I not give to another,] We read, Ps. lxxiv. 11, that "the Lord will give grace and glory;" 2 Cor. iv. 17, "an exceeding and eternal weight of glory;" but that divine, infinite, incomprehensible glory, that belongeth to Him, as Supreme King of kings, as His peculiar prerogative, of that He is most jealous; in that will brook no sharer. Since therefore our chief aim ought to be, that in every thing God may have "the glory" due to His name; we must beware, not only that we give not the glory of religious worship to image, saint, or other creature, (as it follows, "neither My praise to graven images,") but also that we do not by flattery or obsequiousness give to mortal man any part of that honour which is due to the infinite and immortal God alone; or, by what is called vain-glory, derive the least part to ourselves. Bp. Sanderson.

9. Behold, the former things are come to pass,] The Prophet seems here to exult and say, The prophecies, which I have delivered to you concerning your redemption from the Babylonian bondage, will soon be so exactly completed, that I regard them as things past; and therefore new things do I declare; that is, hence I claim your belief of other prophecies, concerning the great redemption, to take place hereafter; though there be no appearance as yet of any causes tending to produce it; for "before they spring forth I tell you of them." Bp. Hurd.

11. Let the wilderness and the cities thereof lift up their voice,] The most uncultivated countries, and the most rude and uncivilized people, shall confess and celebrate with thanksgiving the blessing of the knowledge of God graciously imparted to them. The desert and the rocky country may particularly point here to Arabia Deserta and Arabia Petræa: Kedar was a clan of Arabs; (see note on chap. xxi. 15;) some of these dwelt for the most part in tents; others inhabited or frequented cities or villages; there are others, who sometimes live in deserts and sometimes in cities. Bp. Lowth.

19. This verse may more correctly stand thus, "Who is blind, but My servant? and deaf, as he to whom I have sent My messengers? Who is blind, as he who is perfectly instructed; and deaf, as the servant of the Lord?" Bp. Lowth. By the "servant" and "messengers" here are meant the Jewish people and prophets. W. Lowth.

21. The Lord is well pleased &c.] This verse might be translated more plainly thus, "The Lord took delight in this people for His righteousness' sake, He hath given them an excellent law, and thereby made them honourable." W. Lowth. The Prophet seems to refer, in the first instance, to the Mosaick Law, which God had given with much splendour and solemnity, and intended as the great honour and ornament of His people; and to the care and kindness He had constantly shewn them, out of regard to the promises made to their fathers, notwithstanding their constant disobedience; and also to the Law, which was to be given by the Messiah, that future mark of God's exceeding favour, which He was well aware the Jews would treat in the same manner as they had all the former, ver. 22, &c. Vitringa.

Chap. XLIII. ver. 3. — I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee.] This may mean generally, that God had often saved His people at the expense of other nations, whom He had, as it were in their stead, given up to destruction. Bp. Lowth.

14. — the Chaldeans, whose cry is in the ships.] "Exulting in their ships." Babylon was very advantageously situated, both in respect to commerce, and as a naval power. It was open to the Persian gulf by the Euphrates, which was navigable by large vessels; and being joined to the Tigris above Babylon, by the canal called Naharmalcha, or the Royal river, supplied the city with the produce of the whole country to the north of it, as far as the Euxine and Caspian seas. *Bp. 20. The beast of the field shall honour me, &c.] We may apply this to the Gentiles, fitly compared in their unbelieving state to the beasts of the field, embracing the Gospel, with joy and thankfulness to God for the means of conversion. Dr. Wells.

22. But thou hast not called upon me, O Jacob; &c.] The connexion is, But thou, Israel, whom I have chosen and formed for Myself, to be My witness against the false gods of the nations, even thou hast revolted from Me, hast neglected My worship, and hast been perpetually running after strange gods. The emphasis here, and in the following verses, seems to lie on the word me. The Jews were diligent in performing the external services of religion; in offering prayers, incense, sacrifices, oblations: (see notes on chap. i. 11:) but their prayers were not offered with faith; and their oblations were more frequently made to their idols than to the "God of their fathers." their sins, and should be inflicted by the Assyrians, Babylonians, and other hostile nations round them. And because some of his expressions might be interpreted as if all the twelve tribes were to be utterly cast away, therefore he frequently intersperses consolations, as in this chapter, to assure the people, that if they were duly corrected and reformed by their captivity, God would bring them out of it, and raise them up again to be His Church and people. As God thus promised His people a restoration from their captivity, upon their true repentance and return to their duty; so will He rescue us all from the slavery of sin and Satan, if we sincerely feel the oppression and misery of it, and would prefer being employed in doing God's will, and keeping His commandments. This disposition the Jews manifested in their captivity at Babylon: they were deeply humbled for their former transgressions of God's law, and the affronts they had offered Him by worshipping idols. And doubtless the Holy Spirit of God had a regard to this happy change of their minds and manners, when He dictated the gracious promises in this chapter: for He assures us by the same Prophet, that "there is no peace to the wicked." So long as men continue in their sins, they are at enmity with God, excluded from the benefit of His promises, and liable to all His threatenings and judgments. Reading.

Chap. XLIV. ver. 2. — that made thee, and formed thee from the womb,] He speaks of the Jewish people as of a single person; and as God hath sometimes designed certain persons for particular offices from their birth and conception, (see chap. xlix. 1, 5; Jer. i. 5,) so He set apart the posterity of Abraham to be His people from the very original of the family. W. Lowth.

3. For I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, &c.] The waters here spoken of, according to the ordinary style of the Prophets, are the graces of God's Spirit. Dean Allix. See notes on chap. xxx. 25; xxxv. 6, 7. The plentiful effusion of the Divine Spirit here predicted, Jews and Christians have ever understood to refer to the days of the Messiah. CHAP. XLV.

1 God calleth Cyrus for his church's sake. 5 By his omnipotency he challengeth obedience. 20 He convinceth the idols of vanity by his saving power.

17. And the residue thereof he maketh a god,] The sacred writers are generally large and eloquent upon the subject of idolatry: they treat it with great severity, and set forth the absurdity of it in the strongest light. But this passage of Isaiah (ver. 18—20) far exceeds any thing that was ever written on the subject, in force of argument, energy of expression, and elegance of composition. One or two of the Apocryphal writers have attempted to imitate the Prophet, Wisd. xiii. 11—19; xv. 7, &c. Baruch vi. Bp. Lowth.

19. —for he hath shut their eyes,] The Old Translation expresses the sense better, "their eyes are stopped." W. Lowth.

20. He feedeth on ashes:] He feedeth on that which affordeth no nourishment. A proverbial expression for using ineffectual means, and bestowing labour to no purpose. In the same sense Hosea says, "Ephraim feedeth on wind," chap. xii. 1. Bp. Lowth.

—— Is there not a lie] That is, a lying vanity "in my right hand?" This was a just appeal to common sense against the abominable stupidity of worshipping idols, which, when wrought up to their highest perfection, can but resemble some great man, but can never be endued with the sense of the poorest idiot, or even of the vilest brute: how much less can any thing of Divine power or knowledge be ascribed to them? The Pagans of old endeavoured to defend their worship of images by saying, that they did not terminate their worship in them, but only used them as a medium to convey their devotions to a divine invisible being. And some idolatrous Christians have used the same argument for the same purpose. But God, who best knows the nature of religious worship, charges these devotees with idolizing the figures before which they prostrate themselves, not only in this chapter, but in various other places of His holy word. Reading.

23. Sing, O ye heavens; &c.] The expressions here, and in parallel passages, denote the joy to be so great and universal, that even the inanimate parts of the creation are said to be affected with it, and are exhorted to bear a part in the general chorus. W. Lowth.

24. — I am the Lord — alone; — by myself;] We are not to suppose that this is said to the exclusion of any Person of the blessed Trinity, but only in opposition to creatures or other gods; see chap. ii. 11, 17; xliii. 11. The word God is probably in such places to be understood in a large indefinite sense, comprising the whole Trinity, where the context or other circumstances do not confine the signification and intent to one Person only. Dr. Waterland.

27. That saith to the deep, Be dry, and I will dry up thy rivers:] By the remarkable manner in which Babylon was taken did the event exactly correspond with this prophecy: Jeremiah also has noted it, chap. l. 38; li. 36. See note on chap. xiv. 23. Bp. Lowth.

28. That saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, &c.] Here does Isaiah, near 200 years beforehand, name the very person who should order the enlargement of the Jews: and Jeremiah, chap. xxix. 10, points out the year in which it should happen. Dr. Berriman. Thus God calleth things that are not, that have no existence, as if they were, because He has power to fulfil all His pleasure, and can, whenever He sees fit, produce those things into light, which He suffers to remain unaccomplished for many years after the first prediction. Reading.

Chap. XLV. ver. 1. — the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus,] From the custom which obtained among the Jews of separating, by the ceremony of anointing, both persons and things to particular purposes, the person who is constituted and appointed by God (as Cyrus) to some great office or employment, is said to be "the Lord's anointed." Bp. Kidder.

—— I will loose the loins of kings,] See note on chap. v. 27.

—— to open before him the two leaved gates;] The gates of Babylon within the city, leading down to the river, were left open when Cyrus's forces entered through the channel, in the general disorder occasioned by the festival then celebrated: and the gates of the palace were imprudently opened by the king's orders, to inquire the cause of the tumult without. Bp. Lowth.

2. — the gates of brass,] In every side of the great square wall which encompassed Babylon were twenty-five gates, one hundred in all, of solid brass; those which led to the river, and those which enclosed the temple of Belus, were of the same material. Dean Prideaux.

3. — I will give thee the treasures of darkness, &c.] The riches which Cyrus found in his conquests amounted to a prodigious value: those parts of Asia abounded in wealth and luxury; Babylon had been heaping up treasures for many years, and the riches of Croesus king of Lydia, whom Cyrus conquered and took prisoner, are in a manner become proverbial. Bp. Newton.

4, 5. though thou hast not known me.] That is, Shalt be bred in ignorance of Me; and remain so, till I am made known to thee by My Prophet Daniel. Dr. Wells. See note at Ezra i. 1.

7. I form the light, and create darkness: &c.] This seems to be spoken in reference to the Persian sect of the Magians, who held the being of two first causes, Light, or the good god, who was the author of all good; and Darkness, or the evil god, the author of all evil; and that of the mixture of these two, as they were in a continual struggle with each other, all things were made. Dean Prideaux.

8. Drop down, ye heavens, &c.] These expressions, taken from the dew and the rain descending from heaven, and making the earth fruitful, and some nearly of the same kind, used Ps. lxxxv. 9—13, may perhaps be primarily understood to set forth, in a splendid manner, the happy state of God's people, restored to their country, and flourishing in peace and plenty, in piety and virtue; but they must undoubtedly have a further reference to the blessings of the great redemption by the Messiah. Bp. Lowth. In the prophetick writings the expressions often run so high, as to denote events and characters too gloriously great for the thing or person next at hand; which is esteemed a certain indication of their having in prospect some other more remote, in which they are to find their just completion. Dean Stanhope.

9. Woe unto him that striveth with his Maker! &c.] The Prophet warns the people not to be impatient, but to wait God's time for accomplishing their redemption: men may contend with their equals, with those who are made of the same clay with themselves, but should not presume to inquire of God the reasons of His proceedings, or find fault with His works of creation or providence, as if not wisely contrived or well-timed. W. Lowth.

11. — Ask me of things to come concerning my sons, &c.] These words import, that, although God be not obliged to render an account of His proceedings to His creatures, He was graciously pleased, through His prophets, to resolve any questions proposed concerning His people's future destiny. W. Lowth. An answer to that effect seems to be contained in the following verses, and the rest of the chapter generally; ver. 13, 14, declaring to God's people, not only that they shall be liberated from captivity, but that great happiness awaits them; and ver. 20, 22, 23, pointing to the universal call of the Gentiles, and second advent of Christ, as ver. 23 is applied by St. Paul in the passages referred to in the margin. Jos. Mede.

13. I have raised him up in righteousness, and I will direct all his ways:] This is to be immediately understood of Cyrus, whom God raised up to be the instrument of executing His justice upon the Babylonians, and fulfilling His mercy to the Jews; but many passages, manifestly relating to the deliverance of the Jewish nation effected by Cyrus, are with good reason and upon undoubted authority to be understood of the redemption wrought for mankind by Christ. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

14. — The labour of Egypt, &c.] All we meet with in this verse must be understood to have respect to religion; predicting that in aftertimes proselytes of various nations should submit themselves to the Church of God, fluttering as it were the hands that were used to be raised against her, becoming bound in spirit, and prisoners in the Lord Jesus, should dedicate themselves, and whatever their land produced most precious, to the service of God; which prophecy might be literally fulfilled, in a small degree, by the Jews' receiving formerly proselytes from all nations, and offerings to their temple from some kings and countries, yet must principally be applied to that event, which was so constantly before the eyes of the Prophets, and is so repeatedly treated of by them, the call of the Gentiles. Vitringa. See notes on chap. xiv. 1.

15. Verily thou art a God that hidest thyself,] The Prophet testifies here his firm trust in future deliverance, though God may seem to neglect His people for a time; and professes withal the unsearchableness of God's ways; see chap. lv. 8, 9. Vitringa. He turns from this solemn adoration of the secret and mysterious nature of God's counsels to a spirited denunciation of the confusion of idolaters, and final destruction of idolatry, contrasted with the salvation of Israel. Bp. Lowth.

19. I have not spoken in secret, in a dark place of the earth:] In opposition to the manner in which the heathen oracles gave their answers, and to their falsehood and ambiguity. They were generally delivered from some deep and obscure cavern; such was the seat of the Cumean sybil, mentioned in Virgil; such that of the famous oracle at Delphi. The answer given to Cræsus, when he marched against Cyrus, (a piece of history that has some connexion with this part of Isaiah's prophecy,) is well known; "Cræsus, by passing the Halys, will overthrow a great kingdom!" Cræsus supposed by this that he should overthrow the power of the enemy, but in reality he overthrew his own power In either event the oracle would have appeared true. Bp. Lowth.

By such fallacious oracles did those evil spirits, from whom they proceeded, delude mankind in those days, rendering their answers in such ambiguous terms, that, whatever were the event, they might admit of an interpretation to agree with it. Dan Prideaux.

23. — unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear.] We must observe, that these words, here said to be spoken by God Jehovah, are applied by St. Paul to Jesus Christ. Bp. Wilson.

It is a rule laid down by St. Paul, "that God swears by Himself," for this reason, "because He can swear by no greater," Heb. vi. 13. But the words in the text, being compared with Rom. xiv. 10, 11, are proved to be the words of Christ. Christ therefore has sworn by Himself; so that, if the Apostle's rule be applied, He must for this reason be God, and there can be no greater. Jones of Nayland.

Such instances constantly occur, and all of them are plain proofs of the Divinity of Christ, and that the Prophets of the Old Testament had all along an eye to the times of the New, and spoke of the Messiah as God. W. Lowth.

Chap. XLVI. ver. 1. Bel boweth down,] See Dean Prideaux's note on Gen. x. 9.

— their idols were upon the beasts, &c.] The images of these deities were to be no longer carried about in solemn procession by their worshippers, but in triumph and with derision by the Persians; as was usual for conquerours to do in token of complete victory. W. Lowth. Compare Jer. xlviii. 7; Dan. xi. 8.

3. — house of Israel, which are borne by me &c.] The Prophet contrasts the power of God, and His tender goodness effectually exerted towards His people, with the inability of the false gods of the heathen. He, like an indulgent father, had carried His people, "as a man doth bear his son," Deut. i. 31; had protected them, and delivered them from their distresses: the idols must be themselves carried about by their worshippers, (ver. 7,) removed from place to place with much labour and fatigue, nor can they answer when their votaries cry unto them. Bp. Lowth. They were so far from being able to defend them, that they could not save themselves; and those, who were wont to be bowed to and adored, are forced themselves to bow and stoop to the will of the plundering soldier, and are removed as common lumber, ver. 1, 2. Wogan.

8. Remember this, and shew yourselves men:] That is, Consider it well, think of it again and again. Consideration is the proper act of reasonable creatures, to whom it is peculiar to propose to themselves some end and design of their actions; if ye do not this, you do not shew yourselves men, but are rather like brute creatures who have no understanding, and act only by a natural instinct. Abp. Tillotson.

11. Calling a ravenous bird] The eagle; a very proper emblem of Cyrus; as in other respects, so particularly because his ensign was a golden eagle. *Bp. ——I have spoken it, I will also bring it to pass;] If in all succeeding ages, from that time to this, we attend to the great events that have happened in the world, we shall find them all conducted by the same sovereign and almighty hand: especially, if we observe, that many of these events were foretold long before they happened, and have since been exactly accomplished, we must conclude these to be visible and incontestable proofs of the eternal power and godhead of Him, who so "declared the end from the beginning;" His power effecting what His wisdom had foreseen and decreed. Hereby we are not only taught the use and benefit of history in general, especially of that contained in the holy Scriptures; but, by comparing events with the prophecies therein contained, we must be convinced with the utmost certainty, that the Scriptures are infallibly true; that they are the word of God, and not of man; the word of Him alone, who declares "the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done;" who besides can say, "What I have spoken I will also bring to pass; what I have purposed I will also do." Wogan.

6. — I have — given them into thine hand: thou didst shew them no mercy;] God charges the Babylonians, though employed by Himself to chastise His people, with cruelty in regard to them: they exceeded the bounds of justice and humanity in oppressing and destroying them; and though they were really executing the righteous decree of God, yet, as far as it regarded themselves, they were only indulging their own ambition and violence. Zechariah sets this matter in the same light, chap. i. 15: see too Isaiah x. 5—12. Bp. Lowth. See notes on chap. x. 7, 12.

7. And thou saidst, I shall be a lady for ever: &c.] Babylon is described here, and in the words full of insolence and blasphemy that follow, (ver. 8,) as fancying herself exempt from the calamities of fortune, and arrogating that self-sufficiency to herself which belongs to none but God. Mystical Babylon is in the passage of Revelation, referred to in the margin, described as guilty of the same pride and carnal security. W. Lowth.

9. But these two things shall come to thee, — the loss of children, and widowhood:] Babylon, having for many years been mistress of the East, and domineered over the countries round about, could ill brook the subjection her people were fallen under, the removal of the seat of government to Shushan by the Persians, and consequent diminution of the grandeur, pride, and wealth, of the city. In the beginning therefore of Darius Hystaspes' reign, taking advantage of the revolution and troubles of the Persian government, the Babylonians broke out into open rebellion. Unable to cope with his army in the field, they turned their thoughts wholly to support themselves in the siege; and took a most desperate and barbarous resolution, by which the prophecy in this verse was signally fulfilled: for, drawing together all their women and children, to make their provisions last longer, they agreed to cut off all unnecessary mouths, and each man choosing out one of his wives, and a servant for domestick purposes, they strangled all the rest, wives, sisters, daughters, and young children, useless for the wars. Dean Prideaux.

——for the multitude of thy sorceries, &c.] By "sorceries" may be either meant those forbidden acts of divination mentioned more particularly ver. 13, or, in general, wicked schemes of worldly policy, by which potent kingdoms are wont to undermine and oppress the weaker. W. Lowth.

At Babylon, (see ver. 13,) astrology, divination, and the interpretation of dreams, were fashionable studies with men of rank; they carried about with them pocket astronomical tables, which they consulted, as well as astrologers, on every affair of moment. Richardson. They are told here, that neither by their politicks, sorceries, astronomy, nor any part of their wisdom, shall they foresee or prevent their ruin. Bp. Wilson.

15. Thus shall they be unto thee with whom thou hast laboured, even thy merchants, from thy youth:] That is, "Thus shall thy merchants deal with thee, with whom thou hast laboured from thy youth." By "merchants" are meant either the dealers in the deceitful wares of divination and astrology, (ver. 12,) or, generally, any of those who have contributed by their traffick or counsel to maintain the grandeur of the Babylonish empire; compare Rev. xviii. 11, 12, 15, 23. W. Loweth.

Chap. XLVIII. The Prophet applies himself to the Jews as under the state of captivity, reproves them for their refractory temper and obstinacy, which had been the occasion of it, and exhorts them to be reformed by their afflictions, and fit themselves for the deliverance which God had promised. W. Lowth.

14 All ye, assemble yourselves, and hear; which among them hath declared these things? The LORD hath loved him: he will do his pleasure on Babylon, and his arm shall be on the Chaldeans.

15 I, even I, have spoken; yea, I have called him: I have brought him, and he shall make his way prosperous.

16 ¶ Come ye near unto me, hear ye this; I have not spoken in secret from the beginning; from the time that it was, there am I: and now the Lord GOD, and his Spirit, hath sent me.

17 Thus saith the LORD, thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel; I am the LORD thy God which teacheth thee to profit, which leadeth thee by the way that thou shouldest go.

18 O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea:

19 Thy seed also had been as the sand, and the offspring of thy bowels like the gravel thereof; his name should not have been cut off nor destroyed from before me.

20 ¶ Go ye forth of Babylon, flee ye from the Chaldeans, with a voice of singing declare ye, tell this, utter it even to the end of the earth; say ye, The LORD hath [c] redeemed his servant Jacob.

10. Behold, I have refined thee, but not with silver; &c.] Not with such a furious heat as is requisite to melt down silver, for then thou wouldest have been utterly consumed: see Jer. xxx. 11; Ezek. xxii. 20. Lowth.* See note on chap. iv. 4.

16. — and now the Lord God, and his Spirit, hath sent me.] The foregoing part of the verse shews that the words are spoken by God; and since it is here affirmed, that the Lord God hath sent Him, we can understand the words of none other but the second Person of the blessed Trinity; who was sent into the world by His Father, and anointed to His prophetical office by the Holy Spirit: see chap. xi. 2; xlii. 1; lxi. 1; Zech. ii. 10, 11. *W. 22. There is no peace, saith the Lord, unto the wicked.] All the great promises which God has made to His Church, to His people, to the families or nations of His true worshippers, are evidently to be so all along understood, as that wicked persons, of whatever family, nation, or profession of religion they be, shall be excluded from the benefit of those promises, shall be cut off from God's people; and the good and righteous of all nations, from the east and from the west, from the north and from the south, shall be accepted in their stead. Dr. S. Clarke. See note at chap. lvii. 20.

Chap. XLIX. ver. 1. Listen, O isles, unto me; and hearken, ye people, from far.] See note on chap. xi. 11. Hitherto the subject of the prophecy has been chiefly confined to the redemption from the captivity of Babylon, with strong intimations of a more important deliverance sometimes thrown in; to the refutation of idolatry; and the demonstration of the infinite power, wisdom, and foreknowledge of God. The character and office of the Messiah was exhibited in general terms at the beginning of chap. xlii, but here He is introduced in person, declaring the full extent of His commission; which is not only to restore the Israelites, and reconcile them to their Lord and Father, from whom they had so often revolted; but to be a light to lighten the Gentiles, to call them to the knowledge and obedience of the true God, and to bring them to be one church together with the Israelites, and to partake with them of the same common salvation procured for all by the great Redeemer and Reconciler of man to God. Bp. Lowth.

2. And he hath made my mouth like a sharp sword; &c.] How exactly does this passage suit the Messiah, who is represented as having "a sharp twoedged sword going out of His mouth," Rev. i. 16, who is Himself the Word of God; which "word is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any twoedged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart," Hebr. iv. 12. See note on chap. xi. 4. This mighty agent and instrument of God, "laid long up in store with Him, and sealed up among His treasures," is at last revealed, and produced by His power, and under His protection, to execute His great and holy purposes; He is compared to a polished shaft stored in His quiver for use in His due time. The polished shaft denotes the same efficacious word, which is before represented by the "sharp sword." The doctrine of the Gospel pierced the hearts of its hearers, "bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." The metaphor of the sword and the arrow, as applied to powerful speech, is bold, yet just: it has been employed by the most ingenious heathen writers. Bp. Lowth.

3. And said unto me, Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified.] That by "Israel" in this place is not meant either Jacob or the people that came from him, but the Messiah, will be very evident from comparing what is said afterwards. Bp. Kidder.

5. — Though Israel be not gathered, yet shall I be glorious &c.] If we follow the reading given here in the text of our translation, the sense is, That although Christ's ministry be unsuccessful in gathering the Jews into the Church, yet the preaching of His Apostles should meet with better success among the Gentiles: if we follow the reading of the margin, this verse and the next import, That God hath ordained Christ to be a light to the Gentiles, as well as the glory of His people Israel. W. Lowth.

7. — to him whom man despiseth, &c.] See notes on chap. liii. 1, 3.

—— kings shall see and arise, princes also shall worship,] See ver. 23; chap. lii. 15; Ps. lxxii. 10, 11.

8. — In an acceptable time have I heard thee, &c.] These words, which are spoken to Christ in the person of God the Father, are applied by St. Paul, in the passage cited in the margin, to His members of the Church in Corinth; This, says he, when the Gospel is imparted to you, is your time; which ye are concerned not to let slip. The argument drawn from hence is, that when the grace of God is offered, we must be very diligent to lay hold of and improve it; knowing, as we must, that this life is the utmost period of the day of grace; that the continuance of life is most uncertain; and that we cannot be sure that God will extend to us the opportunities of grace so long as life does continue. Dean Stanhope.

9. That thou mayest say to the prisoners, Go forth; &c.] The "prisoners" here mentioned may be perhaps more particularly applied to the Jews, referring to the "heavy burden" of the Mosaick Law; "they that are in darkness" to the Gentiles, who are described, Ephes. v. 8, to have been "darkness" itself: both expressions however may well suit either; the phrase seems to be taken from the custom of liberating captives at the inauguration of kings. Those, whom the Prophet has thus represented as captives rescued from bondage and darkness into the glorious light and liberty of the Gospel, he next exhibits under the emblem of a flock, feeding at its leisure in secure pastures, guarded by its shepherd from the ill effects of the heat, and plentifully supplied with all necessary food; an emblem not unfrequently used (see chap. xxx. 24, 25; xl. 11) to shadow out the future situation of the Church of Christ, safe under the protection and watchful care of the great Shepherd of souls, and blessed with the ample opportunities of grace, which God shall afford her; the Apostle St. John (as referred to in the margin) applies the passage in this manner. Vitringa.

12. — and these from the land of Sinim.] We have the same scene here as is laid before us chap. xliii. 5, 6, the restoration of the Jewish nation, and gathering of God's elect from all parts. The Latin Vulgate, instead of "land of Sinim," renders "the south country," which answers to the north before mentioned. W. Lowth. By "from far," may possibly be meant from Babylon; which, being to the east, would answer to the west. Abp. Secker. See chap. xxxix. 3; Jer. v. 15.

As our translation gives it, "Sinim" may mean Pelusium in Egypt, called "Sin," Ezek. xxx. 15; or the wilderness of Sin, Exod. xvi. 1; both which lay southward of Judea. W. Lowth.

13. Sing, O heavens; &c.] See note on chap. xliv. 23.

16. — I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me.] An allusion to some practice, common among the Jews at that time, of making marks on their hands or arms by punctures on the skin, with some sort of representation of the city or temple, to shew their zeal and affection for it. The pilgrims at the Holy Sepulchre, as Maundrell tells us, get themselves marked in this manner, with what they call ensigns of Jerusalem; and this art is practised by travelling Jews all over the world at this day. Bp. Lowth. See note on chap. xliv. 5.

17. — shall go forth of thee.] Shall become thy offspring, shall proceed, spring, issue from thee, as thy children. The accession of the Gentiles to the Church of God is considered as an addition made to the number of the family and children of Zion; see ver. 21, 22; and chap. lx. 4. Bp. Lowth. As the true religion had long been professed only by the Jews, and when explained to greater perfection, was to be propagated from them through the earth; the conversion of the Gentiles is very deservedly reputed an accession to the Jews, and an engraftment upon their stock. Dr. Berriman.

18. — thou shalt surely clothe thee with them all, &c.] As the Church is represented as Christ's bride, so this conversion, both of Jews and Gentiles, may fitly be represented by the bride's being adorned with all sorts of fine clothing or precious jewels, in order to her marriage; (Rev. xix. 7, 8;) or entering upon her triumphant state. Dr. Wells.

20, 21. The children which thou shalt have, after thou hast lost the other, &c.] The Church is represented as lamenting the loss of her children, and wondering at a new and numerous offspring settled in their room. The greatest part of the Jewish people were to fall by a deplorable apostacy; (see chap. x. 20;) but their defection was to be abundantly supplied by the accession of the Gentiles. Dr. Berriman.

22. — and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders.] This custom is practised in the East to a great extent. Dandini, in his voyage to mount Libanus, tells us, that "being on horseback they carry their young children upon their shoulders with great dexterity. These children hold by the head of him who carries them, whether he be on horseback or on foot; and do not hinder him from walking, or doing what he pleases." Fragments to Calmet.

23. — shall bow down to thee with their face toward the earth, &c.] It is well known, that expressions of submission, homage, and reverence, always have been, and are still, carried to a great degree of extravagance in the Eastern countries. The kings of Persia never admitted any one to their presence without exacting this act of adoration, for that was the proper term for it. Bp. Lowth. The whole passage here imports the assistance, submission, deference, and veneration, that the Gentiles and their kings and queens should one day afford and pay to the Church of God. Vitringa. See notes on chap. xiv. 1; xlv. 14.

24. Shall the prey be taken from the mighty,] This is an objection urging the seeming impossibility of rescuing the Jews from so powerful an enemy as the Babylonish empire. God answers it in the next verse. W. Lowth.

26. And I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh; &c.] Those that are allied to us, by country or kindred, or any other relation, are called "our own flesh:" see Judg. ix. 2; 2 Sam. v. 1; Nehem. v. 5. So the phrase here imports, that God will set these enemies of His people one against another, and make them kill and destroy each other; (see note on chap. ix. 20.) Cyrus conquered a great many of the allies of the Babylonians, and made them serviceable in reducing Babylon itself. W. Lowth.

Chap. L. ver. 1. — Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement, &c.] Husbands, through moroseness or levity of temper, often sent bills of divorcement to their wives on slight occasions, as they were permitted to do by the law of Moses, Deut. xxiv. 1. And fathers, being oppressed with debt, often sold their children; which they might do, for a time, till the year of release, Exod. xxi. 7. That this was frequently practised, appears from many passages in Scripture; the persons and liberty of the children too were answerable for the debts of the father; see 2 Kings iv. 1; Matt. xviii. 25. "They pay their debts in the East with their slaves, and in many places with their children," says Chardin. Bp. Lowth. The covenant which God made with His people is commonly represented under the notion of a marriage contract; and in allusion to this, God demands of those who despaired of His mercy (we may compare chap. xlix. 14) to produce the bill of divorcement which He had given their mother. He, on the contrary, had ever been ready to receive her, when she would return to Him from her idolatries and other iniquities; see Jer. iii. 1. He had no occasion to exercise the power of selling them; but, as He tells them, it was owing to their own sins that they were made slaves to other nations. W. Lowth. God indeed selleth us over to punishment, but not till we have first sold ourselves to sin; we first most unjustly sell away our souls, and then He most justly selleth away our bodies, our liberty, our peace, credit, &c. Let us beware that, whatever we do, we charge not God wrongfully, by making Him in the least degree the author of our sins, or so much as an accessary to our follies. Bp. Sanderson.

4. The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned, &c.] God the Father hath given to Me, the Messiah, His eternal Word and Son, power to express Him fully unto His people; that I should be able to speak comfortably to the weary and distressed souls: He doth not intermit to furnish me continually with His good Spirit. Bp. Hall.

6. — and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair:] See Bp. Lowth's note on chap. vii. 20.

—— I hid not my face from shame and spitting.] Another instance of the utmost contempt and detestation. It was ordered by the law of Moses, as a severe punishment, carrying with it a lasting disgrace, Deut. xxv. 9. In the year 1744, when a rebel prisoner was brought before Nadir Shah's general, Mr. Hanway says, "the soldiers were ordered to 'spit in his face,' an indignity of great antiquity in the East." Among the Medes it was highly offensive to spit in any one's presence; and so likewise among the Persians. Concerning modern notions, see the note on Numb. xii. 14. If spitting in a person's presence was such an indignity as in those countries it appears to have been, how much more spitting in his face? See Mark xiv. 65; xv. 19. Bp. Lowth, Parkhurst. This portion of Scripture contains an exact description of the barbarous indignities our blessed Saviour suffered, and looks more like an historical narration of facts already past, than a prediction of events several hundred years before they happened. We can have no doubt that the Prophet here personates the Messiah; nor, if we compare this account with that of our Lord's passion in the New Testament, that Jesus of Nazareth was that Messiah. Dean Stanhope.

7. — therefore have I set my face like a flint,] Our blessed Saviour, having fixed His end, pursued it resolutely, upon all occasions bearing up against all temptation and opposition; becoming thereby to us an example of a true sedate courage, and unshaken constancy of mind. Bp. Bradford. Our Lord was an example of holiness and obedience set before us, and His sufferings make the pattern perfect: had He lived in worldly prosperity, the poor and unfortunate would perhaps have upbraided the rich and prosperous for not following the copy, but would have thought their own hard circumstances a sufficient excuse for not attempting it. But what pretence is now left for any mortal? are we more wretched than our Master? are we poor and therefore discontented? Let us look to Him who had not where to lay His head, and yet paid a cheerful obedience to His God! Bp. Sherlock.

8. He is near that justifieth me;] My God is with Me, yea, He is in Me, and one with Me, and I with Him, so that I cannot but be borne out against all that shall stubbornly contend with Me. Bp. Hall.

10. — that obeyeth the voice of his servant,] The Septuagint and Syriack have a rendering here, (merely pointing the Hebrew a little differently,) which gives a much more elegant turn and distribution to the sentence; "Who is among you that feareth the Lord? Let him obey the voice of His servant. That walketh in darkness, and hath no light? Let him trust in the name of the Lord, &c." Bp. Lowth.

11. Behold, all ye that kindle a fire, &c.] The fire of their own kindling, by the light of which they walk with satisfaction, is an image designed to express, in general, human devices, and mere worldly policy, exclusive of faith and trust in God; which though they flatter the authors for a while with pleasing expectations, and some appearance of success, shall in the end turn to their confusion. Bp. Lowth.

Chap. LI. ver. 3. For the Lord shall comfort Zion: &c.] When the Prophets have occasion to foretell the marvellous change to be effected in the moral world, under the evangelical dispensation, they frequently borrow their ideas from the history of that garden, in which innocence and felicity once dwelt together, and which they represent as again springing up and blooming in the wilderness: such joy and gladness, such thanksgiving and melody are described as taking place at the restitution of all things, as were at their first creation, when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy. Compare chap. xli. 19; xxxv. 1. Bp. Horne.

The first completion of this prophecy was in the restoration of the Jews from their Babylonish captivity: but the promise ultimately and chiefly respects the Christian church, which in this world sojourns in a wilderness, as the Israelites had done before they entered their promised land. But this wilderness is not without its comforts: the righteous even in this world participate in that peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, which no man nor sufferings can take from them. In the future world their happiness shall be perfect and unmixed; their "wilderness" shall be turned into "Eden," and this "desert" into "the garden of the Lord." Then shall we regain an happier paradise than that which we lost; all pains and tears will be succeeded by "joy and gladness;" and all sighing and sorrow by "thanksgiving and the voice of melody." Wogan.

4. — I will make my judgment to rest for a light] Rather, "To break forth for a light;" the word in the original signifying both to "rest," and to "break forth." W. Lowth.

9. Awake, awake, put on strength. O arm of the Lord; &c.] The Prophet, by an elegant figure, addresses himself to God, to stir up His strength, and exert it in behalf of His oppressed people, as He delivered them in former time out of Egyptian bondage. "Rahab" is another name for Egypt; see note at Ps. lxxxvii. 4. The "dragon" stands for Pharaoh. W. Lowth.

11. — the redeemed of the Lord shall return, &c.] See notes on chap. xxxv. 10.

12. I, even I, am he that comforteth you: &c.] If God be for us, why is he that can harm us? The first incursions of violence and oppression may surprise; but the longest continuance of it ought not to dishearten or deject: the infirmity of our flesh may excuse all sudden fears, but a continued and incessant fear (ver. 13) is an indignity to God, and argues a total defect of faith. To be afraid of man is idle and vain: to distrust the power and goodness of God is impious and profane. Wogan.

13. — and where is the fury of the oppressor?] It is evermore at God's disposal, who sometimes has suffered it to touch the bodies of His servants; at other times has restrained it, and forbidden it to hurt the earth, or any inhabitant thereof. At all times faith and patience easily break it, and triumph over it: therefore let us fear it not. Reading.

14. The captive exile hasteneth that he may be loosed,] Will quickly be delivered. Bp. Wilson. Rather render, "He hasteneth (marcheth on with speed) who cometh to set free the captive;" that is, Cyrus, if understood of the temporal redemption from Babylon; in the spiritual sense, the Messiah. Bp. Lowth. The connexion of the next verse with this will better appear if we render there, "For I am the Lord thy God, &c." W. Lowth.

16. — I have put my words in thy mouth, &c.] I have made thee My oracle. This may be understood in a lower sense of Isaiah, but is chiefly meant of Christ. Compare chap. lix. 21, and the passage referred to in the margin. W. Lowth. See notes at those places.

"Planting" or "stretching out the heavens," as we read at ver. 13, (Bp. Lowth.) "and laying the foundations of the earth," are expressions to be understood of God's intention of building and making Israel into a state and political world. Jos. Mede. See notes on chap. xiii. 13; xxx. 26. The words imply that new state of things which is called, chap. lxv. 17, "new heavens and a new earth." W. Lowth.

17. — stand up, O Jerusalem, which hast drunk at the hand of the Lord the cup of his fury;] The bold image of the cup of God's wrath, often employed by the sacred writers, (see Ps. lxv. 8; Rev. xiv. 10,) is no where handled with greater force and sublimity than in this passage of Isaiah. It is called "the cup of trembling," as causing intoxication and stupefaction; and Jerusalem is represented in person as staggering under the effects of it, destitute of that assistance which she might expect from her children, (ver. 18,) not one of them being able to support or to lead her. They, abject and amazed, lie at the head of every street, overwhelmed with the greatness of their distress; like a wild beast entangled in a net, in vain struggling to rend it and extricate himself. This is poetry of the first order, sublimity of the highest proof. Bp. Lowth.

19. These two things are come unto thee; — desolation, and destruction, and the famine, and the sword:] That is, Desolation by famine, and destruction by the sword; taking the terms alternately; of which form of construction there are many examples: see Cant. i. 5. Bp. Lowth.

21. — drunken, but not with wine:] It has been observed, that this expression means, not simply without wine, but much more than with wine. The Greek tragedian, Æschylus, has the same expression; thus translated, "Intoxicate with passion, not with wine." Bp. Lowth. See notes on chap. xxix. 9.

23. — Bow down, that we may go over:] A very strong and expressive description of the insolent pride of Eastern conquerours; which, though it may seem greatly exaggerated, yet hardly exceeds the strict truth. See note on chap. xlix. 23, and Josh. x. 24. We are told, that the emperour Valerian, being taken prisoner by Sapor king of Persia, was commanded to bow himself down and offer his back, on which the Persian monarch set his foot, in order to mount his chariot, or his horse, whenever he had occasion. Bp. Lowth.

Chap. LII. ver. 1. Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion; &c.] The Prophet congratulates Jerusalem upon her restoration after her captivity, and tells her how every thing about her would put on a new face upon that joyful occasion. In which description he has plainly an eye to the renovation of the Church under the Gospel: and speaking on the subject very naturally introduces the sufferings and humiliation of Christ, together with the glory that should accrue to Him, and the advantages which all true believers should receive. W. Lowth.

2. — arise, and sit down,] The common manner of sitting in Eastern countries is upon the ground or floor. To sit on high, on a chair or throne, is a posture of more than ordinary state. Bp. Lowth.

7. How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings,] An expression highly poetical, for "How welcome is his arrival! how agreeable are the tidings which he brings!" The watchmen discover afar off on the mountains the messenger with the much wished-for news of the deliverance from Babylon; and immediately spread the joyful tidings, ver. 8. Nahum, who is generally supposed to have lived after Isaiah, has taken from him this very pleasing image; (see the margin:) the imitation does not equal the beauty of the original; but it may be observed, that Isaiah's subject is infinitely more interesting and more sublime. Nahum denounces the destruction of the capital of the Assyrian empire, the most formidable enemy of Judah; Isaiah's ideas are in their full extent evangelical; and St. Paul has applied the passage to the preaching of the Gospel; see the margin. Bp. Lowth.

The passage may be paraphrased thus: How welcome and pleasing are the Prophets of God, who upon the mountains of Judea preach these glad tidings of peace and deliverance! and how much more welcome are those evangelical teachers, that proclaim everlasting salvation to all believers! Bp. Hall.

10. — made bare his holy arm.] See note at Ps. lxxiv. 11.

11. Depart ye, — touch no unclean thing:] This admonition not to linger in Babylon is given chap. xlviii. 20, and repeated here, and by Jeremiah, chap. l. 8; li. 6. God's people, and the priests especially, are, with allusion to the legal pollutions contracted by touching any thing unclean, commanded to keep themselves free from all manner of pollution. The mystical sense of the command is extended by St. Paul to all Christians; and the passage applied by St. John to the mystical Babylon: see the margin. W. Lowth.

12. For ye shall not go out with haste, &c.] Your fathers were thrust out of Egypt in haste, Exod. xii. 33; but now ye shall have sufficient notice, so as to purify and prepare yourselves: and God shall be your guide and defence, like the pillar of the cloud, Exod. xiv. 19, 20. W. Lowth.

13. The subject of Isaiah's prophecy, from the fortieth chapter inclusive, has hitherto been in general, the deliverance of the people of God. This includes in it three distinct parts; the deliverance of the Jews from the captivity of Babylon; the deliverance of the Gentiles from their miserable state of ignorance and idolatry; the deliverance of mankind from the captivity of sin and death. These subjects, however, have a close connexion with one another; Isaiah has handled them as a Prophet and a poet; he has allegorized the former, and under the image of it has shadowed out the two latter; he has thrown them all together, has mixed one with another, has passed from this to that with rapid transitions, and has painted the whole with the strongest and boldest imagery. Hitherto they have been handled interchangeably and alternately: Babylon has been kept pretty much in sight; but here it is at once dropped, and hardly ever comes into sight again; the Prophet's views are almost wholly engrossed by the superiour part of his subject. Bp. Lowth.

13. Behold, my servant shall deal prudently,] Or, "shall prosper," as the margin reads, more agreeably to what follows. W. Lowth.

The state of Christ's exaltation is first mentioned here; but the next words shew that His suffering state was to precede in order of time, and the other to follow as the recompense and reward of His abasement, ver. 14, 15. Dr. Berriman. The solemn administration of Christ's kingly office could not take place, till the prophetick and priestly were discharged: the one, by teaching His people, and raising their affections and desires by the clearest revelation of happiness in a future state; the other, by making intercession for them, by the atonement of bloody sacrifice, the sacrifice of Himself. This is plainly told us in the ensuing chapter, the twenty-second Psalm, and other prophecies of the Old Testament; which St. Paul does in effect but expound in Heb. ii. 10; x. 12, 13; Phil. ii. 7—11. Dean Stanhope.

How gracious was it in God to forewarn the world by the spirit of prophecy of the mean appearance of their Redeemer; that their faith might be armed against the reproach and contempt which attended His poverty, and the great scandal of His cross! In human reckoning a mean condition bespeaks a mean man; but here the case was otherwise; for when God had foretold the mean appearance of His Son, His poverty became a proof of His authority, and the lowness of His condition shewed the excellency of His person. Bp. Sherlock.

15. So shall he sprinkle many nations;] He shall purify whole nations by His blood, and present them holy to God; the expression alludes to the legal sprinklings, by which the people were sanctified; compare Ezek. xxxvi. 25; Heb. ix. 13, 14; 1 Pet. i. 2. W. Lowth.

—— kings shall shut their mouths at him: for that which had not been told them shall they see; &c.] Out of respect or fear of Him Gentile kings shall keep silence; and those kings and nations shall be instructed in such heavenly truths as human reason could never be able to discover; and they, to whom no Prophets were sent, or promise made of a Saviour, shall consider and receive His doctrine. Bp. Chandler, W. Lowth.

Chap. LIII. The following chapter is so full a description of our blessed Saviour's sufferings, that it looks more like an history than a prophecy; and might with more reason be suspected to be a copy drawn from His life, than not to be a description of it. But this Scripture was in being long before our Lord was born, and was in the keeping of His enemies; of those who hated and despised Him, and at last put Him to a shameful death; and were at once the preservers and the fulfillers of the prophecy. Bp. Sherlock. It is certain that both ancient and modern Jews interpret it of the Messiah. Dean Allix. The writers of the New Testament apply it to Christ, and the patrons of infidelity will in vain attempt to apply it to any other. Dr. Berriman. It is so undeniable a proof of the truth of Christianity, that the bare reading of it, and comparing it with the Gospel history, has converted some unbelievers, and brought them home to the faith and religion of Jesus Christ. W. Lowth, Wogan.

Ver. 1. Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?] Who of the Jews, when Christ comes, shall believe this our report? even of them, before whom "the arm of the Lord," the virtue and power of God, is witnessed in His miracles? (so St. John understands the phrase, in the passage referred to in the margin:) the cause of so great unbelief follows, ver. 2. Bp. Chandler. It was the poverty and humility in which He came to visit us, so contrary to their proud and carnal conceits, that induced them to reject the Saviour, whom they were all along taught by their own Scriptures to expect: for this being the season of His humiliation for our sins, He grew up, as Isaiah here describes Him, small and of no reputation, from a family nearly extinct, like a tender plant springing unnoticed from its root hid in a barren and dry land, out of which nothing eminent was expected. In the manner of His appearance He had no form or comeliness, none of the advantages of worldly grandeur, no ornaments of state to set Him off; the usage He met with from the world was even more discouraging than His poor and lowly appearance; He was despised, &c. ver. 3. Bp. Horne.

3. He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, &c.] Many prophecies relating to our Lord regard only particular actions and circumstances of His life: but this points at no single calamity that befell Him, but is a general description of His condition during His abode on earth. Bp. Sherlock.

—— we hid as it were our faces from him;] Out of aversion or contempt. W. Lowth. The margin reads, "He hid His face from us:" mourners covered up the lower part of their face and their heads; 2 Sam. xv. 30; Ezek. xxiv. 17. Bps. Lowth and Chandler.

4. Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows:] The sense of these words is what St. Peter expresses, "Who His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree," 1 Pet. ii. 24; and the Apostle to the Hebrews, "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many," Heb. ix. 28. St. Matthew's meaning, in the passage referred to in the margin, is, that Christ healed diseases in such a manner, that even in that sense also the words of Isaiah were literally verified. Dr. S. Clarke. Surely the griefs He bare, and the sorrows He carried, were not His own, but ours; yet we, not considering for whom He suffered, did esteem Him the outcast of heaven and earth, stricken in judgment from above, smitten of God in His anger, and afflicted by His heavy displeasure. Bp. Horne.

5. — the chastisement of our peace] By which our peace was effected. Bp. Lowth.

6. — hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.] Alluding to the custom, in making atonement, of laying hands on the head of the sacrifice. Bp. Wilson. See this rite at once enjoined and interpreted, in the law of the scape-goat, Levit. xvi. 21, 22. Dean Stanhope.

7. — he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth.] The liveliest portraiture of resigned innocence! Bp. Horne. So meek and passive a behaviour must be the result of the most perfect resignation, and altogether inconsistent with any measure of complaint or murmuring. This character accurately agrees only with the blessed Jesus, who was not more a lamb for sacrifice, than for innocence, meekness, patience, and resignation. Dr. Berriman, Bp. Chandler.

8. He was taken from prison and from judgment:] We do not read that imprisonment was any part of Christ's sufferings: so the marginal reading is perhaps to be preferred; or we may render, "by tyrannical oppression." W. Lowth. "By oppressive judgment." Bp. Lowth.

—— who shall declare his generation?] The meaning is, that He was condemned to death, although He was a Person of such high and unspeakable dignity, that neither men nor angels can declare the manner of His generation. Bp. Horne.

9. — he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death;] Some render, "His grave was appointed with the wicked, but His sepulchre was with the rich." W. Lowth. Our blessed Saviour's enemies designed Him the burial of a malefactor; yet it was brought to pass by the providence of God, that His dead body was buried "with the rich," in the rich man's tomb; and His burial was done with care and cost by persons of rank and quality. This fully appears from the accounts of the Evangelists. Bp. Kidder.

10. — his soul an offering for sin.] These words plainly refer to the Mosaick institutions, which among the several sacrifices prescribed have provided one sort, which is peculiarly styled an offering or sacrifice for sin. Dr. Berriman. All other sin-offerings were only types and shadows of Christ's; that which He offered, by offering Himself, was the substance, the true and real sacrifice, which expiated the sins of the world; indeed the chief end of all the sacrifices of the Jews was to put them in mind of that which Christ was to offer for them; and so to give them occasion to exercise their faith, and put their confidence in Him for pardon and salvation. Bp. Beveridge.

—— he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.] By His voluntary oblation of Himself He shall obtain a long race of disciples and subjects; and the whole scheme of Providence for the salvation of mankind shall be entirely committed to His management. Bp. Chandler.

11. — He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied:] He shall rejoice to find that His death and sufferings have been the means of saving so many. W. Lowth.

—— by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many;] That is, Many shall be justified by the knowing of Him; which is the same thing with believing in Him; to which our justification is always ascribed in the New Testament. Bp. Beveridge.

12. Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, &c.] Therefore the multitudes of the nations are given Him for His inheritance; and the strong and mighty kingdoms of the world, rescued from the tyranny of Satan, shall become His. Bp. Horne. For some render, "I will bestow many upon Him;" and, "He shall divide the spoils of the strong." W. Lowth.

—— he was numbered with the transgressors; — and made intercession for the transgressors.] Our blessed Saviour's dying between thieves is here intimated. Dean Allix. (See the passages referred to in the margin.) We find Him hanging upon the cross between two common robbers, groaning under the bitterest agonies of death, without pity or compassion, derided and insulted: but neither the pains of the cross, nor those pangs which drew from Him that complaint, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" nor all the malice and scorn of the crucifiers, could make Him a moment forget His love and tenderness towards them; with His latest breath He pleads their cause, excuses their weakness, and begs for their pardon; "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Bp. Sherlock.

The prophecy contained between the thirteenth verse inclusive of the fifty-second chapter, and the conclusion of this, is perhaps the clearest and the strongest of all the prophecies of the Old Testament. It is an advantage which it possesses, that it is intermixed with no other subject. It is entire, separate, and uninterruptedly directed to one scene of things. The application of it also to the evangelical history is plain and appropriate. Here is no double sense: no figurative language, but what is sufficiently intelligible to every reader of every country. The obscurities, by which I mean the expressions that require a knowledge of local diction, and of local allusion, are few, and not of great importance. Nor have I found that varieties of reading,

[b] Luke 1. 32.

5 For thy Maker is thine husband; [b] LORD of hosts is his name; and thy Redeemer the Holy One of Israel; The God of the whole earth shall he be called.

Before CHRIST about 712.

6 For the LORD hath called thee as a woman forsaken and grieved in spirit, and a wife of youth, when thou wast refused, saith thy God.

7 For a small moment have I forsaken thee; but with great mercies will I gather thee.

8 In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment; but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the LORD thy Redeemer.

9 For this is as the waters of [c] Noah unto me: for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth; so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee.

[c] Gen 9. 11.

10 For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the LORD that hath mercy on thee.

11 ¶ O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy stones with [d] fair colours, and lay thy foundations with sapphires.

[d] 1 Chron. 29. 2.

12 And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones.

or a different construing of the original, produce any material alteration in the sense of the prophecy. Archdeacon Paley.

Let us, by a frequent perusal of this wonderful chapter, recollect our thoughts, and compose our spirits, and soften our hearts, and mortify our passions, and fix our affections on Him who loved us, and for our sakes fasted, and mourned, and wept, and lived poor, and died forsaken. Bp. Horne.

Chap. LIV. In the foregoing chapter, the Prophet described the sufferings of Christ; here he prophesies of the increase and glory of the Church, to commence from the time of Christ's passion, but not to be completed till His second coming, and after the restoration of the Jews to God's favour. W. Lowth.

Ver. 1. Sing, O barren, &c.] The Church of God under the Old Testament, confined within the narrow bounds of the Jewish nation, and still more so in respect of true believers, and which sometimes seemed to be deserted of God her husband, is the barren woman that did not bear, and was desolate; she is exhorted to rejoice, and express her joy in the strongest manner, on the reconciliation of her husband, (see ver. 6,) and on the accession of the Gentiles to her family. See chap. xlix. 20, 21. Bp. Lowth.

2. Enlarge the place of thy tent, &c.] The Prophet announces the conversion of the Gentiles, in words addressed to the Jewish church, as the emblem of the Christian. The allusion here is to the tabernacle, and the image presented is an enlargement of the sacred tent to contain new crowds of worshippers: the stakes are to be driven deep and firm; the cords lengthened and tightened, that the sides of the tent may be able to support the pressure of the multitudes within it: see Gen. ix. 27, where Noah foretells the admission of worshippers of Japhet's stock into the tent of Shem: (Bp. Horsley:) and see chap. xxxiii. 20. W. Lowth.

4. — for thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth.] That is, the bondage of Egypt; "thy widowhood," the captivity of Babylon. Abp. Secker.

5. — thy Maker is thine husband;] Makers, Husbands. Bp. Wilson. So it stands in the original; or, "Thy Makers have thee in marriage." See notes at Gen. i. 1; Eccles. xii. 1. The mystery of the blessed Trinity is intimated; and in this place the term is to be understood of the Son in the communion of the Father and Holy Spirit. Vitringa.

— the Holy One of Israel; The God of the whole earth shall he be called.] Jehovah is indeed the God of all the nations of the earth; the universal Father, whose tender mercies are over all His works: but to the Jews for a time He was more peculiarly a God; inasmuch as He chose them to be the depositaries of the true religion, while the rest of mankind were sunk in the ignorance and abomination of idolatry. Bp. Horsley. The time, it is here said, is now coming, when He shall not be called the God of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles. Compare Zech. xiv. 9; Rom. iii. 29. W. Lowth.

6. — when thou wast refused,] After thou hast been, as it were, cast off by Him for a time. Dr. Wells.

11. — behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colours, &c.] This verse and the following may in a qualified sense be applied to the rebuilding of the city and temple after the captivity, but most probably have a farther meaning. They seem to contain general images to express beauty, magnificence, purity, strength, and solidity, agreeably to the ideas of the Eastern nations. See Tob. xiii. 16, 17; and compare Rev. xxi. 18—21. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

The eleventh and twelfth verses may be thus paraphrased: O thou, my poor distressed Church, which now seest no cause of joy, or mitigation of thy sorrow, comfort thou thyself with the expectation of what blessings I have laid up for thee: for, how despised soever thou now seemest, I will exceedingly adorn and beautify thee. And I will make the Evangelical Church far more glorious than that, which was under the law; there shall nothing be wanting that may set forth the beauty and majesty thereof. Bp Hall.

[c] John 6. 45.

14 In righteousness shalt thou be established: thou shalt be far from oppression; for thou shalt not fear: and from terror; for it shall not come near thee.

15 Behold, they shall surely gather together, but not by me: whosoever shall gather together against thee shall fall for thy sake.

16 Behold, I have created the smith that bloweth the coals in the fire, and that bringeth forth an instrument for his work; and I have created the waster to destroy.

17 ¶ No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the LORD, and their righteousness is of me, saith the LORD.

13. And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children.] This teaching of God refers to the more plentiful instruction to be communicated to men in the days of the Messiah, whereby they were to be taught the will of God more fully and more plainly than in times past. This prediction of the communication of a greater measure of Divine knowledge, and larger effusion of the Divine Spirit upon the members of God's Church, is to be found in several places of the Prophets. Bp. Bradford. The words of Isaiah here our blessed Saviour expressly applies to His followers; (see the passage referred to in the margin.) With respect to the peace here promised, we know that the Governour of the world will make all things work together for the good of them that love Him; will direct us in all our doubts, comfort us in all our tribulations, supply all our wants, and in a little time will finish all our labours, and receive us to everlasting rest. Dr. Woodward.

Chap. LV. ver. 1. Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, &c.] The Prophet publishes the free offers of grace by the Gospel: the metaphor used here Christ Himself expounds to this sense, in the passage from St. John referred to in the margin. W. Lowth. See notes on chap. xxxv. 6, 7; xliv. 3.

It is one of "the sure mercies" of Christ, that the fountain of His salvation, the means of His grace, are open to all ranks of people. Poor as well as rich have access to the publick ordinances of the Church: servants as well as masters have leisure once at least in seven days to attend upon them: and he who is so indigent that he cannot purchase books, or so illiterate that he cannot read them, if he has but ears to hear and a heart to learn, may be fully acquainted here with the whole will of God, and obtain grace to deny all ungodliness and worldly lust, and to live soberly, righteously, and godlily, in this present world. Reading.

——he that hath no money;] No merits of his own. Bp. Wilson. Who is humbled under the conscience of his own wants and unworthiness. Bp. Hall.

2. ——for that which is not bread?] Literally, "for the no-bread." Bp. Lowth. See note on chap. x. 15. For such knowledge as will not profit you. All pretences to religious knowledge, but such as proceed from God Himself, are vain and useless; they can neither instruct men in the truth, nor lead them to happiness: the true knowledge of God and of happiness is afterwards denoted by "that which is good," and "fatness." W. Lowth. See note on chap. xxv. 6.

3. ——even the sure mercies of David.] By these are meant those blessings for which Almighty God had engaged His truth; and of the full attainment of which David so often expresses his perfect confidence: particularly that of an everlasting kingdom, to be continued to his posterity; which, having manifestly failed in the first and temporal sense, must have a second and more sublime one belonging to it; such as imports a spiritual and eternal kingdom: accordingly the Apostle, in the passage referred to in the margin, observes, that the resurrection of Christ, with the peculiarity of returning no more to corruption, was punctually foretold in these words of Isaiah. Dean Stanhope.

4. Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people,] Christ; the Revealer of My will in the most eminent manner. Dr. Wells.

——a leader] The word in the original is the same that is applied to the Messiah by Daniel, ch. ix. 25, 26, and rendered by our translators "Prince." The author of the first book of Chronicles, chap. v. 2, uses the same term; and there is little doubt but he had an eye to the same Person, whom he mentions as coming of the tribe of Judah. Dr. Berriman.

6. Seek ye the Lord while he may be found,] The command here is general, imposed not only upon the Jews or the Gentiles, but upon all mankind. Bp. Beveridge. Here Christ invites us all to a sincere repentance, and to accept of mercy while it is to be obtained. "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." Grace is freely offered to all; all are called upon to come. This is an act of infinite goodness; yet the words, "while He may be found," and "while He is near," carry with them no small terrour, as plainly intimating to us, that there is a time when He shall not be found; a day when He shall not be near: "when the wicked shall call upon Him, but He will not answer; when they shall seek Him early, but they shall not find Him," Prov. i. 28. Wogan. See note on chap. xlix. 8.

4 For thus saith the LORD unto the eunuchs that keep my sabbaths, and choose the things that please me, and take hold of my covenant;

5 Even unto them will I give in mine house and within my walls a place and a name better than of sons and of daughters: I will give them an everlasting name, that shall not be cut off.

6 Also the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the LORD, to serve him, and to love the name of the LORD, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant;

8. For my thoughts are not your thoughts, &c.] My purposes in revealing the Gospel carry in them such marks of goodness and condescension in forgiving sins, (see ver. 7,) and of truth and faithfulness in fulfilling My promises, (see ver. 10, 11,) that they exceed the measures of human proceedings, as far as heaven is high above the earth. W. Lowth.

13. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, &c.] General poetical images, expressing a great and happy change for the better. The wilderness turned into a paradise: the desert of the Gentiles watered with the heavenly snow and rain, which fail not to have their due effect, and becoming fruitful in piety and righteousness: or, as the Chaldee gives the moral sense of the emblem, (see note on chap. ix. 18,) "Instead of the wicked shall arise the just, and instead of sinners such as fear to sin." Compare chap. xxxv. 1, 2; xli. 19. Bp. Lowth. See note on chap. li. 3.

—— and it shall be to the Lord for a name, &c.] This change shall be to the everlasting praise of God, and for a memorial of His never-failing goodness to the Church. Bp. Hall.

Chap. LVI. ver. 1. Thus saith the Lord, Keep ye judgment, and do justice: &c.] True piety and honesty are the terms indispensably required of every one, Jew as well as Gentile, to give him a claim to enjoy the happiness of the triumphant state of the Church on earth, or the eternal happiness of heaven. Dr. Wells.

2. — that keepeth the sabbath.] The sabbath was ordained as a sign or token of God's covenant with His people: see Exod. xxxi. 13; Ezek. xx. 12. Accordingly the observation of it was the distinguishing character of a Jew, as a worshipper of the true God, who created heaven and earth, and instituted the sabbath, as a memorial of that creation. W. Lowth. 'Tis frequent in Scripture, by one religious duty to denote the whole of religion; and so the "keeping of the sabbath" here may signify all duties relating to God; and, what follows, "keeping his hand from doing any evil," those that refer to our neighbour. Dr. Wells.

3. Neither let the son of the stranger, &c.] Two descriptions of persons are mentioned in this verse, strangers and eunuchs, who, looking to the economy of the Old Testament, (see Deut. xxiii. 1, 2, 3,) might expect they should have an inferior share in the kingdom of Christ. Vitringa. God declares here, that the Gentile should be accepted, under the Gospel dispensation, (the partition wall being broken down,) equally with the Jew; and that whereas eunuchs were formerly forbidden to "enter into the congregation of the Lord," the times were now coming, when those restraints should be taken off; the inward endowments of the soul be sufficient to give persons a title to the communion of saints; and their names be written in the book of life, a more lasting remembrance than posterity could entitle them to. W. Lowth.

7. — and make them joyful in my house of prayer.] They who truly love and fear God above all things find more joy and comfort in His house than any where else: the whole work of the place is delightful to them, the Spirit of God cooperating with them in it, and God never failing to perform His promise here made, to those who come to His house duly prepared, and keep their minds intent upon Him, and the duties there performed. Bp. Beveridge.

—— shall be called] See note on chap. ix. 6.

—— an house of prayer for all people.] The temple was designed for other nations as well as the Jews to say their prayers in, at the first dedication by Solomon; (see 1 Kings viii. 41, 42,) though the number of proselytes was not considerable till the times of the second temple: this however, and the sacrifices above mentioned, are chiefly to be understood of the Christian worship, and the spiritual sacrifices of prayer and thanksgiving proper to it. The remark, "that the Prophet uses such expressions, with relation to the Gospel times, as are taken from the usages of his own," is a good rule for explaining the idioms of the prophetick writings. W. Lowth. See notes on chap. xix. 19.

9. All ye beasts of the field, come to devour, &c.] Here manifestly begins a new section: the Prophet, having in the foregoing chapters comforted the faithful Jews with many great promises of God's favour to be extended towards them, here makes a transition to the more disagreeable part of the prospect; and to a sharp reproof of the wicked and unbelievers, and especially of the negligent and faithless governours and teachers, (as dumb dogs, dreamers, sluggards, &c. ver. 10, 11,) of the idolaters and hypocrites, who would still draw down His judgments upon the nation; probably having in view the destruction of their city and polity by the Chaldeans, and perhaps by the Romans: compare Jer. xii. 7, 9, where he well explains this of Isaiah. The same subject is continued in the next chapter; in which the charge of apostacy and corruption becomes more general. Bp. Lowth.

10. His watchmen are blind: &c.] Jerusalem is here represented to the Prophet as trodden under foot, and plundered by the hostile nations round about her. This devastation he here sets forth under a proper metaphor. He represents his people as a flock of sheep: their rulers, both religious and civil, as shepherds; and their dogs set to watch the flock; and their enemies, who watched for their destruction, he resembles to wild beasts ravening after their prey. And seeing how wretchedly the flock was guarded, he cries out in an ecstatick manner, "O all ye beasts of the field, come, come, ye beasts of the forest, and devour." Not that he desired this; but he knew it would be the consequence of what follows; for, says he, "those that should watch our flock are blind." This is a warning to all spiritual watchmen, to discharge their trust faithfully; not to follow their own ways, and pursue their temporal gain, and ease, and safety, above all things; not to be silent when they ought to speak; not to shut their eyes when they should see: for in so doing they will lose their own souls, as well as the souls of those committed to their charge. Let us then beseech the universal Shepherd and Watchman, who never slumbereth nor sleepeth, to inspire all His ministers with a zeal for His glory, that they may constantly speak the truth, and boldly rebuke vice, after the example of our great Master, who kept back nothing of the Divine will from His people. Reading.

Chap. LVII. ver. 1. The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart: &c.] The death of good Hezekiah is probably denoted. Dr. Wells. The Prophet complains of the general neglect of people, to consider the loss of good and useful men, as a presage of evil: when God in mercy taketh away such, it should be a warning to us to look for evil to come. Bp. Sanderson.

2. He shall enter into peace:] The same sense is expressed at large, Gen. xv. 15, "Thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace." Bp. Lowth. These words appear to be an allusion to the future state; what more natural signification have they than that expressed in the Book of Wisdom, chap. iii. 1, 3, "The souls of the righteous are in the hand of God;—they are in peace." Dr. S. Clarke. Thus is the happiness of heaven frequently described to us in Scripture; and certainly it is no small encouragement towards making us love religion, that it promiseth to us in the next life a freedom from all the evils and troubles of this. Abp. Tillotson.

—— they shall rest in their beds, &c.] As death is compared to sleep, so is the grave to a bed. See chap. xiv. 18. W. Lowth.

3. —— under every green tree, &c.] See note on chap. i. 29.

—— slaying the children in the valleys] Offering them in sacrifice to Moloch; a sin severely prohibited, Lev. xx. 2, &c.; yet much practised in the times of the idolatrous kings of Judah, 2 Kings xxiii. 10; 2 Chron. xxviii. 3. The valley of Hinnom was chiefly noted for this inhuman practice, Jer. vii. 31. W. Lowth.

6. Among the smooth stones &c.] Of the worship of rude stones consecrated, there are many testimonies of the ancients. They are called "smooth stones," as being made smooth by the lapse of the stream. Bp. Hall. Or by oil poured upon them, which was a frequent practice among the heathens. W. Lowth.

7. Upon a lofty and high mountain hast thou set thy bed: even thither wentest thou up to offer sacrifice.] The bed here mentioned may most fitly be understood of such an one as was used at feasts, and was prepared for the entertainment which was made with part of the oblation. W. Lowth. There is at the same time a continued allusion to the practices of an adulteress.

10. Thou art wearied in the greatness of thy way; &c.] Thou hast tried all ways to save thyself from the evils that threaten thee: with what pains didst thou court the favour of foreign princes! and to no purpose; yet thou didst not refrain: "thou hast found the life of thine hand," that is, thou hast made a shift by these methods to support thyself for the present, therefore thou hast felt no remorse. W. Lowth, Bp. Wilson.

11. — have not I held my peace even of old, and thou fearest me not?] That is, And therefore thou fearest Me not? Sinners take encouragement to continue in sin, from God's patience and long-suffering. See Ps. l. 21; Eccles. viii. 11. W. Lowth.

13. — but he that putteth his trust in me shall possess the land,] To show the great goodness of God, it is usual with the Prophets to pass from denunciations of judgment to promises of mercy. The promise here made was fulfilled literally to the Jews, who returned from the Babylonish captivity; but the spiritual and more important sense is the free grace of God, offering pardon and salvation to all that repent and believe in Christ. Wogan.

15. — with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, &c.] It is humility which brings down "the high and lofty One, that inhabiteth eternity," to dwell amongst us, and conduct us through our pilgrimage of life to the lot of our inheritance, to the mount of holiness here, of joy and happiness hereafter. The corruption of nature, and perverse habits of sin, are the "stumblingblocks" (ver. 14) in our way; if these be "taken up," and removed by repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, we shall "possess the land, and inherit His holy mountain;" that is, be true members of His Church upon earth, and receive the inheritance in His kingdom of heaven, which was promised us in our baptism. Wogan.

19. I create the fruit of the lips;] The sacrifice of praise, saith St. Paul, Heb. xiii. 15, "is the fruit of the lips." God creates this fruit of the lips, by giving new subject and cause of thanksgiving by His mercies conferred on those among His people, who acknowledge and bewail their transgressions, and return to Him. The great subject of thanksgiving is peace; reconciliation and pardon offered to them that are nigh, and to them that are afar off; not only to the Jew, but also to the Gentile, as St. Paul more than once applies those terms, Eph. ii. 13, 17; see also Acts ii. 39. Bp. Lowth.

20. — the wicked are like the troubled sea, &c.] The wicked are represented here as full of uneasy and disquieting thoughts; they have no real comfort of mind from the pleasures of this world, must necessarily want all effectual support under the many evils and calamities of life, and are troubled perpetually with the reproofs of conscience, and unwelcome thoughts of death. Bp. Pearce. The impenitent and wicked are excluded from all share in the peace mentioned ver. 19, that reconcilement and pardon which is promised to the penitent only. The forty-eighth chapter ends with the same declaration as this; "There is no peace to the wicked." Bp. Lowth. See the notes there.

Chap. LVIII. ver. 2. Yet they seek me daily,] To "seek" God is the same as to "draw nigh" unto Him in His ordinances. W. Lowth. Isaiah is commanded to shew the Jews especially their hypocrisy in drawing nigh to God with their bodies only. Bp. Wilson.

3. — wherefore have we afflicted our soul,] By fasting and humiliation: a phrase used particularly of the great day of expiation, Lev. xvi. 29; xxiii. 27. W. Lowth. See notes on the former of these places.

—— in the day of your fast ye find pleasure,] It appears that, instead of producing the right effect of humility and self denial, their fasting increased their pride, and inflamed, rather than subdued, their irregular lusts and passions. Wogan. Travellers inform us, that in the Eastern countries Jews and Turks, upon their stated fasts, will keep the day strictly enough; but as soon as the stars appear, they fall to their viands, and abandon themselves to a mad kind of mirth the greatest part of the night. Reading.

—— and exact all your labours.] Meaning, the hardest labours, and most servile works. Bp. Hall. The intention of God, in directing His people to religious fasts, was not barely for their affliction in chastisement for their sins, but is principally intended for their amendment; nor is the design of such a fast any way answered by an outward humiliation, but by an inward reformation; by the heart's being melted down, by true contrition and sincere sorrow for sin, into a right sense of religion; and softened to all the impressions of humanity, good nature, and charity. See ver. 5, 6, 7. Dr. Delaney.

4. — ye fast for strife and debate, &c.] Your fasts have the appearance of devotion; but their true design is only to promote parties and contentions, and to oppress the innocent: such was the fast of Ahab, which we read of 1 Kings xxi. 10. W. Lowth.

5. — to spread sackcloth and ashes under him?] For his couch. Bp. Lowth.

7. — hide not thyself from thine own flesh?] From thy kindred and countrymen. W. Lowth. See notes on chap. ix. 20;

All men are by the ordinance of God so incorporated together, that they are not only all "members of the same body," 1 Cor. xii. 12, (of the same civil body, as they are men, and of the same mystical body, as they are Christians,) but even "members one of another," Rom. xii. 5; Ephes. iv. 25. Bp. Sanderson.

8. Then shall thy light break forth as the morning,] That is, Thy low and afflicted condition shall be suddenly changed into an happy and glorious state: "and thine health shall spring forth speedily:" thou shalt be restored to thy former prosperity: "and thy righteousness shall go before thee," like a harbinger, to prepare the way to honour and esteem, as well as to shine before men for their example and the glory of God: "and the glory of the Lord shall be thy rereward," following thee in all thy ways, and, as it were, bringing up the rear, both to do thee honour, and to protect thee. W. Lowth, Wogan.

9. — the putting forth of the finger, and speaking vanity;] The first expression alludes to some gesture they used in conversation, whether of mocking or threatening: or it may signify an attempt towards invading the right of others. See chap. lix. 3; Ps. cxxv. 3. "Vanity" here means falsehood and deceit. W. Lowth.

10. — if thou draw out thy soul &c.] The force of this expression is, to satisfy the hungry with all readiness and benevolence, agreeably to that of the Apostle, "God loveth a cheerful giver," 2 Cor. ix. 7; see also Rom. xii. 8. The Septuagint gives the sense more fully; "if thou give bread from thy soul." Vitringa. A charitable temper is commonly expressed by a large soul; and the contrary disposition by a narrow one. W. Lowth.

13. If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; &c.] If thou abstain from following thy own ways and pleasure on the sabbath, which is dedicated to My service. It appears from hence, that the precept of keeping the sabbath day holy did not enjoin merely a bodily rest, but implied also setting the day apart for the services of religion. See Jer. xvii. 21, &c. W. Lowth.

Chap. LIX. The last chapter more particularly reprobated the hypocrisy of the Jews in pretending to make themselves accepted with God by fasting and outward humiliation without true repentance, while they continued to oppress the poor, and indulge their own passions and vices; with great promises however of God's favour on condition of their reformation. This chapter contains a more general reproof of their wickedness; bloodshed, violence, falsehood, injustice. At ver. 9, they are introduced as making an ample confession of their sins, and deploring their wretched state in consequence of them. On this act of humiliation a promise is given that God, in His mercy and zeal for His people, will rescue them from this miserable condition; that the Redeemer will come like a mighty hero to deliver them, ver. 17; He will destroy His enemies; convert both Jews and Gentiles to Himself, and give them a new covenant, and a law, which shall never be abolished. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1, 2. Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; &c.] This seems to be, as it were, an answer to the cavils of the Jews, calling God's power in question because He did not deliver them from their enemies, as formerly. W. Lowth.

5. They hatch cockatrice' eggs, and weave the spider's web:] Figurative expressions: their villanous contrivances are compared to a cockatrice's eggs, which are both poison in themselves, and when hatched produce a venomous serpent; and to a spider's web, both for the artificial fineness of them, and for the purpose of ensnaring, for which they are intended. He goes on, ver. 6, "Their webs shall not become garments:" that is, though their contrivances are finely wrought, yet they are too thin and weak to be of any real advantage, and their works can neither cover nor defend them. W. Lowth. And so do all the devices, which we applaud in ourselves and others, as matters of great reach, and contrived with deep policy, resemble, agreeably to this comparison of the Prophet, a spider's web; a thing of great curiosity to the eye, spun of a fine and subtile thread, and in exact proportion, but of no strength at all. Bp. Sanderson.

10. — in desolate places as dead men.] We are banished from the world, as the dead that have no longer any portion in it. See Ps. xliv. 19. W. Lowth.

16. And he saw that there was no man, and wondered that there was no intercessor:] See note on chap. lxii. 5; compare chap. lxiv. 7, and Ezek. xxii. 30. W. Lowth.

The sins of men, and even of God's own people, (as they are described in the beginning of the chapter, and there acknowledged and confessed by the penitent members of the Church, ver. 9—15,) were grown to so enormous a height, and so past all hope of human means of reformation, that nothing less than the very arm of God, even His own Son, was able to apply the remedy. When "He saw there was no man," no mere man, capable or qualified to redeem his brother, or give to God a ransom for him; when He saw there was "no intercessor," not even among the angels, to mediate or undertake for mankind, then He Himself took it upon Him to execute the great design of saving man, and delivering him out of the hand of his enemies. Wogan.

20. And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, &c.] This is expounded by St. Paul of that general salvation of the Jewish nation which he assures us shall come to pass in the latter times: see the passage referred to in the margin; and compare Obad. 17, 21. Ver. 21 is to be understood of Christ, the great Prophet and Oracle of the Church, who came from heaven to declare unto us the whole counsel of God; and whom we are to hear and obey in all things. Compare chap. li. 16; lxi. 1. W. Lowth.

—— and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob,] Our translators have expressed the sense of the present reading of the Hebrew text: that of St. Paul, following the Septuagint, with which some other versions agree, is, "and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob," Rom. xi. 26. Bp. Lowth.

The first coming of the great Redeemer was to Zion; His second coming will be to the world in general. He came first to His church, to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, to His own people: but "His own received Him not, because their deeds were evil." None received Him then, but those "that turned from transgression in Jacob:" nor can any receive Him now, but such as repent of their sins. Salvation must commence in this life: Jesus will be a Saviour to none hereafter, but those whom He first saves from sin here: He is a Redeemer to them only who turn from their transgressions. With them, and them alone, He ratifies and confirms His "covenant" of grace. To them only the Father gives of the "Spirit that is upon" His Son, the Spirit of adoption and grace. Wogan.

Chap. LX. The subject of this chapter is the great increase and flourishing state of the Church of God by the conversion and accession of the heathen nations to it; which is set forth in such ample and exalted terms, as plainly shew, that the full completion of this prophecy is reserved for future times. This subject is displayed in the most splendid colours, under a great variety of images highly poetical, designed to give a general idea of that perfect state of the Church, which we are taught to expect in the latter days. Bp. Lowth. It is agreeable to the custom of the times and countries in general, in which the Scriptures were written, and to the style and manner of Prophets in particular, to abound with figurative schemes of speech: on such an occasion as the subject of this chapter presents, we are least of all to wonder at the boldest metaphors and descriptions: where the benefits spoken of are of so exalted a nature, as to make that pomp of expression the effect of necessity, which would on other occasions pass for artificial. Other benefits may be magnified above their just proportions; but no words can come up to the real dignity of these; and therefore the most magnificent descriptions, borrowed from objects familiar to our senses, do not adorn or exalt, but only speak of them in the most respectful manner that our capacities admit. Dean Stanhope.

Ver. 1. Arise, shine; for thy light is come;] Light is the usual emblem of happiness, and darkness of affliction; Jerusalem is bid to arise, and give light to all about her, to communicate to others part of the honour and lustre which she had received from God, the true "Sun of Righteousness," Mal. iv. 2. W. Lowth.

5. Then thou shalt see, and flow together, and thine heart shall fear, and be enlarged;] Thy joy shall break out upon thee like an overflowing river, and the sudden transports of it shall produce an astonishment like that arising from fear; the effects of one passion are ascribed to another. *W. 22 A little one shall become a thousand,

Midian; Gen. xxv. 4. These people abounded in camels, and such beasts of burden, and their substance chiefly consisted in cattle. W. Lowth. What is said of the animals' ministering and going up, Vitringa understands as implying, that they shall offer themselves voluntarily; which gives a very elegant and poetical turn to the image: it being a general notion that prevailed with sacrificers among the heathen, that the victim's being brought without reluctance to the altar was a good omen; and the contrary a bad one. Bp. Lowth.

8. Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?] A flock of birds resembles a dark cloud. W. Lowth. The Prophet speaks of men's ready submission to the Gospel, and the great number of those that should come in upon the preaching of it. Mr. Peirce. ... He alludes to the rapidity with which doves return to their habitations; considering also the purity and innocence of this bird, to what can the elect of God be better compared, or the Church, than to the dove-cote? This is the force of the word translated "window." The Holy Spirit frequently uses this emblem; see Ps. lxviii. 13; Hos. xi. 11. Vitringa.

9. Surely the isles shall wait for me, &c.] By "the isles" are meant the heathen nations: and their "waiting for" Christ expresses that readiness, with which they entertained the Gospel when first preached to them, as if they had been long in expectation of it. So Christ is said to be "the desire of all nations," Hag. ii. 7. Wogan.

13. The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, &c.] This expression denotes that all the cedars and other choice trees of Lebanon should contribute to the rebuilding and beautifying of God's temple; which implies in a spiritual sense, that every thing should tend to adorn and render perfect the Church; which is called the house and building of God, 1 Tim. iii. 15; 1 Cor. iii. 9. W. Lowth.

——I will make the place of my feet glorious.] The temple of Jerusalem was called the house of God, and the place of His rest or residence. His visible symbolical appearance, called by the Jews the Shechinah, was in the most holy place, between the wings of the cherubim above the ark. This was considered as the throne of God; and the ark itself as His footstool: see Ps. xcix. 5; 1 Chron. xxviii. 2. Bp. Lowth.

14. The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; &c.] See notes on chap. xiv. 1; xlix. 23.

17. For brass I will bring gold, &c.] As it is said of Solomon's times, that gold and silver were so plentiful, that there was no use of inferiour metals, 1 Kings x. 21, 27; so, in pursuance of the same metaphor, the New Jerusalem is described, Rev. xxi. 18, as made of "pure gold." The Prophet adds here, that in those happy days, that golden age, as we say commonly, the very officers of the publick revenues, and collectors of taxes, (a sort of men generally blamed as guilty of exaction and oppression, see Luke iii. 13,) shall be lovers of peace, and observers of justice. He goes on to describe complete security from all sort of violence, &c.; and, ver. 21, we read, "Thy people also shall be all righteous;" such characters can belong only to the New Jerusalem: (W. Lowth.) the description of which, Rev. xxi. 23, &c, is entirely taken from this chapter of Isaiah. Jos. Mede.

nation.] The evangelical Prophet is very particular throughout this chapter in describing the sudden and mighty increase of Christianity, its triumphant progress through all nations, and its prevalence over all the other religions of the world; and this wonderful enlargement of it he takes occasion here to represent as so much the more admirable, on account of the small appearance it should make at first, and the slender and unpromising beginnings with which it should set out. Bp. Atterbury. It is well known, by the instrumentality of how incompetent persons, a few fishermen, of no authority, address, or education, and in how short a compass of time, this great revolution, the greatest that ever was in the religious world, was effected. In about forty years the Gospel was preached in almost every region of the world then known: this speedy propagation of it could never have been effected by persons so unequal to the task, had not the same Divine Spirit, who foretold it, assisted them in it, according to the promise here given, "I the Lord will hasten it in his time." Bp. Newton.

We see the truth of this prediction in the event. The Church, which was confined to a small spot, the land of Israel, is now become catholick, or universal, and in some measure hath "filled the whole earth," Dan. ii. 35, so that "a little one is become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation." But still this prophecy will not receive its final completion till the coming of that glorious kingdom, which we daily pray may come; when the will of our heavenly Father shall be done upon earth, as it is now in heaven. And O! let all, who look for these things, pray, that the Lord may "hasten it in His time;" and with "the Spirit and the bride say, Come; and let him that heareth say, Come; and let him that is athirst come. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly," Rev. xxii. 17, 20. Wogan.

Chap. LXI. ver. 1. The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; &c.] That these words are meant of Christ, He Himself declared; when, having read them in the synagogue at Nazareth, He said to those who heard them, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears:" see Luke iv. 21. Bp. Beveridge.

—— the Lord hath anointed me] See note on chap. xlv. 1.

—— to preach good tidings unto the meek;] Or, "to the poor," as the word is rendered by the Septuagint, whom the Evangelists follow. W. Lowth. See notes on chap. xi. 4; xxvi. 6.

This preaching to the poor was very different from the way of the Jewish doctors and teachers; they would scarce instruct any one but for great reward; the poorer sort they had in great contempt: see John vii. 48, 49. Abp. Tillotson.

—— to proclaim liberty to the captives, &c.] The proclaiming of liberty to them that are bound, and the year of acceptance with the Lord, is a manifest allusion to the proclaiming of the year of jubilee, Lev. xxv. 9, &c.; the year of general release; of debts and obligations; of bond men and women; of lands and possessions, which had been sold from the families and tribes to which they belonged. Our Saviour by applying this text to Himself, a text so manifestly relating to the institution above mentioned, plainly declares the typical design of that institution. Bp. Lowth.

3. — beauty for ashes, &c.] A description of the change of habit and appearance that should take place in proportion to the change of circumstances. Whereas, whilst they were mourners, they used to put ashes on their heads; now they were to wear a crown or diadem; for the word rendered here "beauty," signifies an ornament proper to the head, and is so translated, Ezek. xxiv. 17. W. Lowth.

— the garment of praise] Namely, the garment wont to be used in times of thanksgiving to God. Dr. Wells.

6. But ye shall be named the Priests of the Lord: &c.] If we suppose these words contain a peculiar promise to the Jews after their conversion, they import, that God will restore to them that honourable title of being a "kingdom of priests," formerly given to them, Exod. xix. 6; and some conceive the Jewish church to be represented in the Revelation by the "four and twenty elders," (alluding to the four and twenty courses of the priests,) "clothed in white raiment, (as priests,) and having on their heads crowns of gold," as advanced to a regal dignity; Rev. iv. 4. But this privilege of being "priests to God" does in some degree belong to all Christians; see 1 Pet. ii. 5; especially when they shall come to be wholly free from the bondage of sin, and continually employed in God's service; Rev. v. 10; xx. 6. W. Lowth. See notes on chap. lxvi. 21.

7. For your shame ye shall have double;] See note on chap. xl. 2.

8. For I the Lord love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt offering;] To the tenour of the covenant, promised at the end of the verse, consisting of inward righteousness, (see Jer. xxii. 33,) God opposes the outward ceremonial service prescribed by the former covenant, which very often had no inward devotion accompanying it. W. Lowth. See notes on chap. i. 11. God will not be pleased with the offerings of such as get riches by unlawful ways; see Deut. xxiii. 18. Yet how common is this sin among Christians, who hope to sanctify their ill-gotten wealth by dedicating a part of it to some pious uses! But God will not be mocked. Bp. Wilson.

† Heb. If I give &c.

9 But they that have gathered it shall eat it, and praise the LORD; and they that have brought it together shall drink it in the courts of my holiness.

---

9. And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, &c.] They shall be acknowledged for God's ancient people, unto whom all the promises of the Gospel were made, and principally belong: see Acts iii. 25; xiii. 46. They shall be esteemed as the first-born or elder brethren in the Church. W. Lowth.

10. I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, &c.] The Jewish Church is here introduced as speaking, and returning her thanks to God for these great favours, that He hath advanced her and her sons to such honour after their dispersion, and made her thereby glorious in the eyes of the world. W. Lowth. She who was formerly described as sitting on the ground, and bewailing her condition, now comes forward with a joyful and assured heart, arrayed in all the splendour of the sanctuary. Vitringa. Allusion is made, as is evident from the marginal rendering, to the dress of the priesthood; of which so great was the magnificence, and so contrived and calculated were they, as Moses expresses it, "for glory and for beauty," that nothing can be imagined more striking, or to minds prepared, as those of the Jews were, to unite with this uncommon splendour the idea of the utmost sanctity, more awful, or more imposing! Bp. Lowth.

Chap. LXII. ver. 1. For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace,] Some interpreters have thought that the Prophet does not speak here in his own person, as our argument has it; but that God is the speaker, and professes His constant anxiety for His people; or that the Messiah declares that He will never cease interceding with God, till the redemption of Israel be brought to pass. Edit.

2. — thou shalt be called by a new name,] To "be called" signifies, in the sacred dialect, "to be;" (see notes on chap. ix. 6;) and the "new name" here promised implies a new condition, a change for the better. No particular name is pointed to; several appropriate to the altered state of Jerusalem are to be met with in the prophecies; (see ver. 4, 12 of this chapter:) compare Rev. ii. 17; iii. 12. Vitringa.

5. — so shall thy sons marry thee:] The word translated "thy sons," has been wrongly pointed by the Masoretes; and should rather be rendered "thy Restorer." The passage, thus corrected, will stand, "As a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy Restorer wed thee;" which corresponds exactly with what follows, "As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee." Bp. Lowth.

6. I have set watchmen &c. — ye that make mention of the Lord, keep not silence,] The faithful, in particular the Priests and Levites, are exhorted by the Prophet to beseech God with unremitting importunity to hasten the redemption of Zion. The image is taken from the temple service, in which there was appointed a constant watch; 1 Chron. ix. 33; see Ps. cxxxiv. Dp. Lowth. The margin gives it here, "the Lord's remembrancers;" it alludes to the office of the Priests and Levites, and their daily prayers for the welfare of the Church. The Scripture elsewhere speaks of God, after the manner of men, as one that may be overcome by importunity; see Luke xi. 8, 9; xviii. 5, 6, 7. W. Lowth. See note on Gen. vi. 6.

8. The Lord hath sworn by his right hand, &c.] What assurance could be more strong or satisfactory? God, as He cannot swear by any greater, swears by Himself, (Heb. vi. 13,) and His own Divine attributes: when this expression is used, some immutable decree of the Divine counsel follows; it is done in condescension to man's limited understanding, and as an assistance to the weakness of his faith. Vitringa.

9. But they that have gathered it shall eat it, and praise the Lord; &c.] The expressions here allude to the ordinances of the law, which required the people to spend their firstfruits, and other hallowed things, at the temple, in grateful acknowledgment to God for His blessings. W. Lowth.

Chap. LXIII. ver. 1. Who is this that cometh from Edom, &c.] The Prophet introduces some person, whether himself in vision or another, (St. Jerome fancies the angels,) wondering at an object which presents itself. This object is a Conqueror returning bloody from battle: of whom by way of dialogue, and in answer to the questions, who He is, and why so habited, an account is given; representing a mighty victory, obtained with much blood and slaughter, won by the powerful but single arm of this mighty Warriour; by which a total rout was given to His adversaries, at a time, when, if He had not interposed, no other was disposed, no other able, to have quelled the outrage and havock which they were making. His stained garments demonstrate the sharpness of the engagement, as His mien and manner of approach denote the invincible greatness of His strength.

In this description we have represented the hardships and the success of that combat with the enemies of our souls, by which Christ brought salvation to mankind; vanquishing sin and death, wresting the prey out of the hands of Satan, and, as the Apostle expresses it, "having spoiled principalities and powers, triumphing over them in His cross." Dean Stanhope. It is Christ that is thus magnificently described, returning to His capital, from the land of the enemy, after His passion. Bp. Horne. His "coming from Edom" is His rising from the dead; His return "from Bozrah" His coming back, having vanquished hell: Idumea standing for the kingdom of darkness and death, and Bozrah (the strong city of Edom) for the seat of the prince of darkness; agreeably to the custom, so familiar with the Prophets, of putting the sworn enemies of the commonwealth of Israel to express the mortal and immortal enemies of the souls of God's people. Bp. Andrewes.

Guided partly by the passage from the Revelation referred to in the margin, as well as by chap. xxxiv and lix, other commentators have expounded this prophecy of a still future deliverance of the Church from her enemies, like that foretold in Ezek. xxxviii, and Rev. xx. Bp. Lowth inclines to this interpretation; remarking, that he knows of no event in history, to which from its importance and circumstances it can be applied, unless perhaps to the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish polity, which in the Gospel is called the coming of Christ, and the days of vengeance, Matth. xvi. 28, Luke xxi. 22. And Vitringa observes, that the great Personage here introduced is described, not as a sufferer, but as an agent; sprinkled not with His own blood, but with that of His enemies; and in the act, not of appeasing the wrath of God for the sins of His elect, but of executing it in the punishment of His enemies. The Church, however, by introducing it into her service for the Monday before Easter, appears to have considered this emblematick vision as applying to the death and passion of our blessed Saviour; whereby He trod the winepress of the Divine wrath alone, by the shedding of His own precious blood, and thus overcame the power of Satan. Edit.

5. — I wondered that there was none to uphold: therefore mine own arm brought salvation &c.] I acted as one that looked for a while to see if any one of My people could find out human means to help and deliver them from the utter ruin they were likely to fall into; but after it was manifest, that no human succour was to be had, I was resolved to vindicate My own honour; and My zeal and concern for My people made Me go through with the undertaking, in spite of all opposition: compare Zech. viii. 2. Dr. Wells, W. Lowth.

6. And I will tread down the people &c.] Rather read with the Septuagint and Vulgate, "and make them drunk in my fury," and so for the following sentences in this verse. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth, Vitringa.

— and I will bring down their strength to the earth.] God's judgments are often represented by a cup of intoxicating liquor, because they astonish men, and bereave them of their usual discretion. W. Lowth. See notes on chap. li. 17; Jer. xxv. 15.

7. I will mention the lovingkindnesses of the Lord, &c.] The remaining part of this chapter, with the whole chapter following, contains a penitential confession and supplication of the Israelites in their present state of dispersion, in which they have so long marvellously subsisted, and still continue to subsist, as a people; cast out of their country, without any proper form of civil polity or religious worship; their temple destroyed, their city desolated and lost to them; and their whole nation scattered over the face of the earth; apparently deserted and cast off by the God of their fathers, as no longer His peculiar people. They begin with acknowledging God's great mercies and favours to their nation, and the ungrateful returns on their part; that by their disobedience they had forfeited the protection of God, and caused Him to become their adversary: the Prophet represents them, induced by the memory of the great things God had done for them, as addressing their humble supplication for the renewal of His mercies: they beseech Him to regard them in consideration of His former lovingkindness; confess their own wickedness and hardness of heart; acknowledge Him for their Father and Creator; intreat His forgiveness; and deplore their miserable condition. Bp. Lowth.

9. — the angel of his presence saved them:] The Angel who conducted the Israelites by the pillar of cloud and of fire was no other than the Logos, or second Person of the blessed Trinity; this divine Person is sometimes called an Angel, as Exod. xiv. 19; but at others the incommunicable name of Jehovah is given to Him: see note on Exod. xiii. 21. W. Lowth.

Concerning the Person, here called "the Angel of God's presence," see Exod. iii. 2, 6; xiii. 21; xiv. 19; xxiii. 20, 21; Judges xiii. 18, compared with Is. ix. 6; Zech. xii. 8; and Mal. iii. 1. In this last passage from Malachi it is plain, that "the Messenger, or Angel of the covenant," the covenant of grace, was no other than Christ: and as allusion is made to the same Person in all the other passages before mentioned, and in the words of Isaiah in the text, it follows that He, who appeared to Moses, He who was seen by Manoah, He who was spoken of by Zechariah, He whom Isaiah describes as saving and redeeming Israel, must also be Christ. In the language of the Prophet, Christ is styled "the Angel of God's presence:" but mark the authority and dignity of His person; sometimes He is called "Wonderful;" sometimes "the Lord;" sometimes He is said to have "the name of God in Him;" and sometimes He is styled "God." He, therefore, to whom such appellations are given, can be no created being: He must be the eternal Son of God: He must be "the Word of God," by whom God speaks to mankind; He must be the same that "was in the beginning with God, and was God;" the same "by whom all things were created;" the same who was made man, the same who redeemed us, the same who ever liveth to make intercession for us. Bp. Huntingford.

—— in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them, &c.] If Isaiah found it reasonable, in terms so affectionate, to magnify the deliverance of God's people out of Egypt, and their settlement in the promised land; how insensible are they who read and hear of the release from a heavier tyranny, the destruction of the spiritual Pharaoh, the passage into the true and heavenly Canaan, opened at the expense of our Leader's own life, without impressions as grateful as human hearts can admit! And if he confess, that, after all the extraordinary appearances of Almighty God in their behalf, His people's disingenuous behaviour turned Him to be their enemy; how greatly ought we to fear, how carefully to avoid, any unworthy returns to One who hath loved us so tenderly, which may justly alienate His affection from us, and be at once our eternal ruin and reproach. Dean Stanhope.

13. — that they should not stumble?] That is, without obstacle. Bp. Lowth. The progress of the Israelites through the Red sea is compared here, for its freedom, to that of a courser in a country where there are the fewest impediments; and the safety of what might appear an hazardous passage, and the security to which it led, to cattle's going to pasture. Vitringa.

16. Doubtless thou art our father, &c.] However we have made ourselves by our sins unworthy to be owned by our father Abraham, yet do not Thou cast us utterly off from the benefit of that covenant, which Thou madest with him and his seed. Bp. Hall.

17. O Lord, why hast thou made us to err from thy ways,] The sense of this passage would have been more truly expressed, and the words as grammatically rendered, "why hast Thou suffered us to err." It is a pathetick expostulation with Almighty God, begging of Him to return to His sinful people, to convert and heal them. Dr. Waterland.

18. The people of thy holiness have possessed it but a little while: &c.] The Prophet says, "a little while," in comparison of God's promise, which, as the Jews commonly understood it, gave them the possession of Canaan for ever: see Gen. xvii. 8. If we understand what follows of the devastation made by the Romans under Titus, and by the Mahometans since, the phrase is exactly parallel to the words of Christ, Luke xxi. 24, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles." W. Lowth.

Chap. LXIV. ver. 4. — men have not heard, &c.] St. Paul treating of God's extraordinary mercy in sending His Son into the world, and that wonderful manifestation of God in the flesh, by the Gospel, not to the Jews only, but to the Gentiles also, which he calls a mystery that had been hidden from the princes of the world, cites this passage from Isaiah: see the margin. The Apostle indeed applies the passage to the mystery of Christ's incarnation, as if it were the primary and more immediate sense of the prophecy. But as the coming of Christ in the flesh is the foundation of all God's blessings to mankind, the words, both in the Prophet and in the Apostle, are generally understood of the future and ultimate happy effects of the Divine mercy in the state of glory, and those joys and felicities of heaven, which are "prepared" and reserved for them that love God, and "wait for Him." Wogan.

5. Thou meetest him that rejoiceth and worketh righteousness,] That is, Thou preventest with Thy blessings him that rejoices to work righteousness. Dr. Wells.

behold, thou art wroth; for we have sinned: in those is continuance, and we shall be saved.] We have been guilty of great offences, but Thy mercies endure for ever, and Thy gracious promises are still the same: see Mal. iii. 6. The pronoun those refers to God's ways, by which we may understand, not only His laws, but likewise the dispensations of His providence. W. Lowth.

6. But we are all as an unclean thing, &c.] In this confession which the holy Prophet makes of the sins of the people, we see, not only the corrupted and degenerate state of the Jewish Church at that time, but what that temper and true spirit of piety is, which rules in good men. Such likewise was the behaviour of Daniel and other worthies in the Old Testament; and of St. Paul and other good men in the New: they assumed to themselves the characters, not of saints, but of sinners; they gloried not in their perfection, but confessed their sins and unworthiness. Wogan.

10. Thy holy cities are a wilderness,] Some refer this expression to all the cities of Judah; but the metropolis only was properly and especially "the holy city:" see chap. lii. 1. This was divided into the upper and lower city: see note on chap. xxii. 1. Vitringa, W. Lowth.

11. Our holy and our beautiful house, — is burned up with fire:] See our Saviour's prediction of the destruction of the temple, Matt. xxiv. 2. W. Lowth.

St. Jerome, and several other learned men, understood this chapter as a prayer for the manifestation of the Messiah. To Him indeed every part of it will, upon examination, be found very applicable; especially the fourth verse, which is applied by St. Paul to the times of Christ, and which has been already verified by Him in some degree; but will be more perfectly fulfilled at His second appearing, when He shall bow the heavens, and come down in the glory of His Father with the holy angels, to judge the quick and the dead; and shall raise His servants out of the corrupt dust of the earth, and give them bodies like His own glorious body; and shall cause them to ascend with Him into those immortal joys and pleasures which we have not at present tongues to express, nor thoughts to conceive; where He now liveth and reigneth, with the Father and the Holy Ghost, God blessed for evermore. Reading.

Chap. LXV. This chapter contains a defence of God's proceedings in regard to the Jews, with reference to their complaint in the preceding chapter. God is introduced declaring that He had called the Gentiles, though they had not sought Him; and had rejected His own people for their refusal to attend to His repeated call; for their obstinate disobedience, their idolatrous practices, and detestable hypocrisy: that nevertheless He would not destroy them all; but would preserve a remnant, to whom He would make good His ancient promises. Severe punishments are threatened to the apostates; and great rewards are promised to the obedient, in a future flourishing state of the Church. Bp. Lowth.

9 And I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob, and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains: and mine elect shall inherit it, and my servants shall dwell there.

17 ¶ For, behold, I create [c] new heavens

Ver. 3. — that sacrificeth in gardens, &c.] Instances of heathenish superstition and idolatrous practices, to which the Jews were immoderately addicted before the Babylonish captivity. See note on chap. i. 29. These apostates sacrificed upon altars built of bricks; in opposition to the command of God in regard to His altar, which was to be of unhewn stone, Exod. xx. 25. Bp. Lowth.

4. Which remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments,] For the purposes of necromancy and divination, to obtain dreams and revelations; for "monuments," we might render "caverns." Bp. Lowth. It was a common custom among the heathens for persons to lodge all night in the temples of their idols, (which were no better than monuments of the dead,) in order to obtain dreams that might be beneficial. W. Lowth.

—— which eat swine's flesh,] Which was expressly forbidden by the law, (Lev. xi. 7,) but among the heathen was in principal request in their sacrifices and festivals. Antiochus Epiphanes compelled the Jews to eat swine's flesh as a full proof of their renouncing their religion, 2 Macc. vi. 18; vii. 1. Bp. Lowth.

—— broth of abominable things is in their vessels;] That is, they make no difference of those meats which the law hath declared unclean. Bp. Hall.

5. Which say, Stand by thyself, &c.] The extreme offensiveness to God of spiritual pride and hypocrisy is compared to that of "smoke in the nose;" and the continual provocation kindled by it to "a fire that burneth all the day." Wogan. This description of a proud hypocrite agrees exactly with the temper of the Scribes and Pharisees in our Saviour's time. W. Lowth.

6. — into their bosom,] See note at Ps. lxxix. 12.

7. — which have burned incense upon the mountains, &c.] See the note on Gen. xxii. 2, "Upon one of the mountains."

8. — As the new wine is found in the cluster, &c.] As a few good grapes are found among a cluster of bad ones, and one speaks to another, that would pluck it from the tree, to spare it; so will I not destroy the whole nation for the sake of the few good persons which spring out from among the rest. W. Lowth.

10. And Sharon shall be a fold of flocks, and the valley of Achor &c.] These are two of the most fertile parts of Judea, famous for their rich pastures: the former to the west, not far from Joppa: the latter north of Jericho, near Gilgal. Bp. Lowth.

11. — that prepare a table for that troop, &c.] It was customary both among the Jews and Gentiles, after some part of the sacrifice had been offered upon the altar, to make a feast of the remainder. See chap. lvii. 7; Ezek. xxiii. 41. We read, 1 Cor. x. 21, of the "table of devils;" to whom the Gentiles sacrificed. W. Lowth.

The disquisitions and conjectures of the learned respecting the names "Gad and Meni" (see the margin) are infinite and uncertain: perhaps the most probable may be, that Gad means good fortune, and Meni the moon. Bp. Lowth.

12. Therefore will I number you to the sword,] An allusion to the derivation of the word Meni, which signifies "number:" such plays upon the words are frequent in the Prophets. W. Lowth.

15. And ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen:] Mine elect shall look upon you as a standing monument of God's indignation; your name shall be mentioned in a common form of imprecation, God do to me, as He has done to the wicked Jews, &c. The other name mentioned here may mean, that of Christians. W. Lowth. But see note on chap. lxii. 2.

16. — the God of truth;] The God of Amen in the Hebrew, rightly translated, "the God of truth:" Rev. iii. 14. Jesus Christ is called Amen; being the faithful and true witness, yea, the "Truth" itself, John xiv. 6, and perhaps in allusion to this place. Compare 2 Cor. i. 20. Bp. Beveridge, W. Lowth.

22 They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect † shall long enjoy the work of their hands.

of religion; different from that which God had given to the Jews, and subversive of it; for it follows, "the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind." Bp. Hurd. The Prophet describes, under this character, the state of things in the days of the Messiah. Dr. Berriman. St. Peter, in his second Epistle, chap. iii. 13, applies this passage of Isaiah to that new and refined state which is to succeed to the dissolution of this world, and in which righteousness is to dwell, agreeably to what is said chap. lx. 20, 21; see also Rev. xxi. 1. Jos. Mede, W. Lowth. And many have taken this for the primary and principal sense of the passage; but it appears that the establishment of the Christian Church and religion is what is more obviously and primarily pointed at in the expression, "new heavens and new earth;" (see chap. li 16;) and that it is only to their more hidden and fullest meaning that St. Peter (referring to this and other passages of Isaiah) applies them as above. This creation of new heavens and earth began, at the time when the Gospel of Christ began its progress; is to be completed at that other time, when it shall please God (the Creator) to render it perfect, in the consummation of all things. The beginning and end are here blended together. Vitringa. The two advents of Christ are for the most part not distinguished in the Old Testament. Dr. Berriman. See note on chap. ix. 5.

18. — rejoice for ever in that which I create:] Rather, "rejoice in the age to come, which I create," agreeing with ver. 17. Bp. Chandler.

20. There shall be no more thence an infant of days, &c.] There shall be no untimely deaths: the Prophet describes this renovation of the world as a state similar to that which the Patriarchs enjoyed before the flood; the purport of the latter part of this verse is, that he that died an hundred years old might be looked on as dying in childhood, cut off in the beginning of his days, as a punishment for sin: it may be more plainly rendered, "He that dies an hundred years old, shall die a child; and the sinner that dies an hundred years old, shall be accursed." W. Lowth. Or, "He that dies an hundred years old, shall be (esteemed) accursed as a sinner." Dr. Wells.

22. — as the days of a tree are the days of my people,] It is commonly supposed that the oak, one of the most long-lived of the trees, lasts about a thousand years; the Prophet's idea, that the people should live to the age of the antediluvians, is therefore very justly expressed by the days of a tree. Bp. Lowth.

Chap. LXVI. A continuation of the subject of the foregoing chapter, which the Prophet pursues with more express declaration of the new economy, and of the flourishing state of the Church under it. The increase of the Church is to be sudden and astonishing. They that escape of the Jews, that is, that become converts to the Christian faith, are to be employed in the Divine mission to the Gentiles, and are to act as priests in presenting the Gentiles as an offering to God. See Rom. xv. 16. And both, now collected into one body, shall be witnesses of the final perdition of the obstinate and irreclaimable. These two chapters manifestly relate to the calling of the Gentiles, the establishment of the Christian dispensation, and the reprobation of the apostate Jews, and their destruction executed by the Romans. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. Thus saith the Lord, The heaven is my throne, &c.] It hath pleased the Divine goodness to signify to us by this, that He lives and reigns on high, infinitely above all that we can think; and that the earth is at His foot to do what He will with it, and all that is on it: so that the earth is full of His glory, and the heaven of heavens is not able to contain it. Yet nevertheless, as God is said to dwell in heaven, because He there unveils Himself, and shines forth in all His glory, before the pure and holy creatures that dwell there, and are capable of beholding it; so is He said to dwell upon earth, in those places where He is graciously pleased to discover any of His Divine perfections in a more peculiar manner than elsewhere: thus were the tabernacle, and afterwards the temple, called God's house; and now in the Christian church, wheresoever His faithful people meet together in His name, He is there with them. Bp. Beveridge.

A temple, in the Jewish notion, was God's habitation, where He resided as a king. W. Lowth. See note on chap. lx. 13. The Jews valued themselves much upon their temple, and the pompous system of services performed in it, which they thought of perpetual duration. Bp. Lowth. God admonishes them not to rely on His temples being among them; that the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; that an humble and truly pious man is a living temple to Him, ver. 2; (compare chap. lvii. 15;) and that without inward piety, "he that killeth an ox" for sacrifice "is as if he slew a man," &c. Dr. Wells. Or ver. 3 may be translated more literally, "He that killeth an ox (the words is as if having been supplied) killeth a man; that sacrificeth a lamb, beheadeth a dog," &c.; and understood to express instances of extreme wickedness joined with hypocrisy; of the most flagitious crimes committed by those, who at the same time affected great strictness in the external services of religion. God upbraids the Jews with the same practices, Ezek. xxiii. 39; and the hypocrisy of the Pharisees is described as much the same, Matt. xxiii. 14. Bp. Lowth.

Before CHRIST about 698.

3 He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man; he that sacrificeth a ‖ lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck; he that offereth an oblation, as if he offered swine's blood; he that † burneth incense, as if he blessed an idol. 7 Before she travailed, she brought forth; before her pain came, she was delivered of a man child.

8 Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children.

9 Shall I bring to the birth, and not ‖ cause to bring forth? saith the LORD: shall I cause to bring forth, and shut the womb? saith thy God.

11 That ye may suck, and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations; that ye may milk out, and be delighted with the ‖ abundance of her glory.

‖ Or, brightness.

12 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream: then shall ye suck, ye shall be [d] borne upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees.

[d] Chap. 49. 22, & 60. 4.

13 As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem.

14 And when ye see this, your heart shall rejoice, and your bones shall flourish like an herb: and the hand of the LORD shall be known toward his servants, and his indignation toward his enemies.

15 For, behold, the LORD will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire.

16 For by fire and by his sword will the LORD plead with all flesh: and the slain of the LORD shall be many.

17 They that sanctify themselves, and purify themselves in the gardens ‖ behind one tree in the midst, eating swine's flesh,

‖ Or, one after another.

3, 4. — they have chosen their own ways, &c.] God threatens the people, that, because they were abominable in their lives, He would abandon them, and give them over to a spirit of delusion. God is said to choose those things for us, which He permits us to fall into: when men abandon themselves to wickedness and impiety, God withdraws His grace from them; and, by His secret and just judgment, they are deprived of the faculty of discerning between truth and errour, between good and evil. See Rom. i. 28; 2 Thess. ii. 10, 11, 12. Abp. Tillotson. See notes on chap. vi. 10.

5. — said, Let the Lord be glorified:] Or, in derision called on God to do something extraordinary in your behalf. W. Lowth.

7. Before she travailed, she brought forth; &c.] In the prophetick language, the affliction which a people suffers, or persecution, in labouring to bring forth a new kingdom, is represented by the pain of a woman in labour to bring forth a man-child. Sir I. Newton. It is intimated here, that the increase of the Christian Church should be so sudden, as to be compared to a woman's bringing forth before her pains came on her. Dr. Wells.

12. — I will extend peace to her like a river,] Compare chap. xlviii. 18. W. Lowth.

13. — your bones shall flourish like an herb:] Ye shall be renewed, as if dry bones should recover their moisture; (compare Eccles. xlvi. 12; xlix. 10.) In like manner St. Paul calls the receiving of the Jews into the Church, "life from the dead," Rom. xi. 15. The Jews from ancient times have used this text as a form over a person interred, at the same time throwing grass into the grave, to testify their belief in a resurrection. W. Lowth. See notes on chap. xxvi. 19. This passage, as well as that in chap. xxvi, seems to be, if not a direct assertion, at least an allusion, to a future resurrection of the dead; when the worshippers of the true God, in all ages of the world, shall have their lot in the kingdom promised to the saints of the Most High. Dr. S. Clarke.

15. For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, &c.] See the introductory note on this chapter; and the note on chap. ii. 10.

17. — behind one tree] The last word is supplied. Some versions have the reading which is given in our margin: but many learned men have supposed, that by the Hebrew Achad (signifying one) may be meant the Syrian deity Achad or Adad, which they held to be the highest and greatest of the gods, the same with Jupiter and the Sun, and which name, says Macrobius, signifies one: we trace this idol in the names of the Syrian kings, Ben-hadad, Hadad-ezer, &c.; according to this interpretation we may render, "after the rites of Achad, in the midst of those who eat swine's flesh," &c. Vitringa, Bp. Lowth. Or, "behind (the chapel or shrine of Achad, or) the Sun, in the midst" (of the garden.) W. Lowth.

—— eating swine's flesh, and the abomination, and the mouse.] See notes on chap. lxv. 4. The heathens used some meats by way of purification, chiefly such as were not used for common food: such were several of those meats forbidden by the law, and called "abominable" by Moses, Deut. xiv. 3; of this kind was probably "the mouse," which is expressly prohibited, Lev. xi. 29. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST about 698. and the abomination, and the mouse, shall be consumed together, saith the LORD.

18 For I know their works and their thoughts: it shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come, and see my glory.

19 And I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, that draw the bow, to Tubal, and Javan, to the isles afar off, that have not heard my fame, neither have seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles.

20 And they shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the LORD out of all nations upon horses, and in chariots, and ‖ Or, coaches. in ‖ litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the LORD, as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel into the house of the LORD. Before CHRIST about 698.

21 And I will also take of them for [a] priests and for Levites, saith the LORD.

22 For as the [f] new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the LORD, so shall your seed and your name remain.

23 And it shall come to pass, that † from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the LORD.

24 And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me: for their [g] worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.

† Heb. from new moon to his new moon, and from sabbath to his sabbath.
[g] Mark 9. 44.

19. — unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, &c.] All quarters of the globe. "Pul" does not occur any where else; it is supposed to be a place in the extremity of Egypt: the Prophet's object here is to designate the most remote parts. Vitringa.

21. And I will also take of them for priests &c.] Such was to be the privilege of the Gospel-times! They were not to be legal "priests and Levites," but "taken from all nations:" such as might be proper ministers of the great High Priest, who was to come from the tribe of Judah, and be, not after the order of Aaron, but after the order of Melchisedek. Dr. Berriman.

22. — the new heavens and the new earth, &c.] Very rationally then does the Apostle (Heb. xii. 28) call the Christian dispensation "a kingdom which cannot be moved." Dr. Berriman.

23. — from one new moon to another, — shall all flesh come to worship] The expression here is accommodated to the condition of the Church under the Old Testament; (see note on chap. xix. 19;) but we are to understand, that in the "new world" here treated of, not the Jews only, (as was the case at the time of the delivery of the prophecy,) but all nations should come before the Lord to worship, in the frequent festivals of those blessed times. Jos. Mede. We are perhaps to understand the words to speak of these saints as being perpetually employed in serving and praising Him: see Rev. iv. 8; vii. 15. W. Lowth.

24. — for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched;] These words of the Prophet are applied by our blessed Saviour (in the passage from St. Mark referred to in the margin) to express the everlasting punishment of the wicked in hell: as our Lord expressed the state of the blessed by sensible images, such as Paradise, Abraham's bosom, &c, so He represents the place of torment under the image of Gehenna, and the punishment of the wicked, by the worm which there preyed on the carcases, and the fire which consumed the wretched victims: (see note on chap. xxx. 33:) marking however this difference strongly, that in the figurative Gehenna, the instruments of punishment shall be everlasting, the suffering without end. Bp. Lowth.

In these two concluding chapters we are made acquainted with God's reasons for rejecting His ancient people the Jews, and for calling the Gentiles into the Church and kingdom of the Messiah. His reason for rejecting the Jews was their incorrigible wickedness: His reason for calling the Gentiles was, not any merit or worthiness in them, but His own free grace and goodness towards them. Let these considerations impress upon our minds a profound sense of gratitude and love for the mercy of God to us Gentiles, and an awful apprehension of His justice towards those who refuse His grace: or, as St. Paul expresses it, let us in this extraordinary dispensation towards the Jews and Gentiles "behold the goodness and severity of God: on them which fell, severity; but toward us, goodness, if we continue in His goodness; otherwise we also shall be cut off." Reading, Wogan.

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET JEREMIAH.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Prophet Jeremiah was of the sacerdotal race, being, as he records himself, one of the priests that dwelt at Anathoth in the land of Benjamin, a city appropriated out of that tribe to the use of the priests the sons of Aaron, (Josh. xxi. 18,) and situate, as we learn from St. Jerome, about three miles north of Jerusalem. Some have supposed his father to have been that Hilkiah the high priest, by whom the book of the law was found in the temple in the reign of Josiah; but for this there is no better ground than his having borne the same name, which was no uncommon one among the Jews; whereas had he been in reality the high priest, he would doubtless have been mentioned by that distinguishing title, and not put upon a level with priests of an ordinary and inferiour class.

Jeremiah appears to have been very young when he was called to the exercise of the prophetical office; from which he modestly endeavoured to excuse himself by pleading his youth and incapacity; but being overruled by the Divine authority, he set himself to discharge the duties of his function with unremitted diligence and fidelity during a period of at least forty-two years, reckoned from the thirteenth year of Josiah's reign. In the course of his ministry he met with great difficulties and opposition from his countrymen of all degrees; whose persecution and ill usage sometimes wrought so far upon his mind, as to draw from him expressions in the bitterness of his soul, which many have thought hard to reconcile with his religious principles; but which, when duly weighed, may be found to demand our pity for his unmerited sufferings, rather than our censure for any want of piety and reverence towards God. He was in truth a man of unblemished piety and conscientious integrity; a warm lover of his country, whose misery he pathetically deplores; and so affectionately attached to his countrymen, notwithstanding their injurious treatment of him, that he chose rather to abide with them, and undergo all hardships in their company, than separately to enjoy a state of ease and plenty, which the favour of the king of Babylon would have secured to him. At length, after the destruction of Jerusalem, being carried with the remnant of the Jews into Egypt, whither they had resolved to retire, though contrary to his advice, upon the murder of Gedaliah, whom the Chaldeans had left governour in Judea, he there continued warmly to remonstrate against their idolatrous practices, foretelling the consequences that would inevitably follow. But his freedom and zeal are said to have cost him his life; for the Jews at Tahpanhes, as tradition goes, took such offence thereat, that they stoned him to death; which account of the manner of his end, though not absolutely certain, is at least very probable, considering the temper and disposition of the parties concerned. Their wickedness however did not long pass without its reward; for, in a few years after, they were miserably destroyed by the Babylonian armies, which invaded Egypt according to the Prophet's prediction, chap. xliv. 27, 28.

The idolatrous apostacy, and other criminal enormities of the people of Judah, and the severe judgments which God was prepared to inflict upon them, but not without a distant prospect of future restoration and deliverance, are the principal subject matters of the following prophecies; excepting only the 45th chapter, which relates personally to Baruch; and the six succeeding chapters, which respect the fortunes of some particular heathen nations. It is observable however, that though many of these prophecies have their particular dates annexed to them, and other dates may be tolerably well conjectured from certain internal marks and circumstances, there appears much disorder in the arrangement, not easy to be accounted for on any principle of regular design, but probably the result of some accident or other, which has disturbed the original order. The best arrangement of the chapters appears to be according to the list, which will be presently subjoined: the different reigns, in which the prophecies were delivered, were most probably as follows.

The twelve first chapters seem to contain all the prophecies delivered in the reign of the good king Josiah.

During the short reign of Shallum, or Jehoahaz, his second son, who succeeded him, Jeremiah does not appear to have had any revelation.

Jehoiakim, the eldest son of Josiah, succeeded. The prophecies of this reign are continued on from the 13th to the 20th chapter inclusively; to which we must add the 22d, 23d, 25th, 26th, 35th, and 36th chapters, together with the 45th, 46th, 47th, and most probably the 48th, and as far as to verse 34 of the 49th chapter.

Jeconiah, the son of Jehoiakim, succeeded. We read of no prophecy that Jeremiah actually delivered in this king's reign: but the fate of Jeconiah, his being carried into captivity, and continuing an exile till the time of his death, were foretold early in his father's reign, as may be particularly seen in the 22d chapter.

The last king of Judah was Zedekiah, the youngest son of Josiah. The prophecies delivered in his reign are contained in the 21st and 24th chapters, the 27th to the 34th, and the 37th to the 39th inclusively, together with the six last verses of the 49th chapter, and the 50th and 51st chapters concerning the fall of Babylon.

The siege of Jerusalem in the reign of Zedekiah, and the capture of the city, are circumstantially related in the 52d chapter: and a particular account of the subsequent transactions is given in the 40th to the 44th inclusively.

The arrangement of the chapters, alluded to above, is here subjoined: 1—20, 22, 23, 25, 26, 35, 36, 45, 24, 29, 30, 31, 27, 28, 21, 34, 37, 32, 33, 38, 39 from the 15th to the 18th verse, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 46, and so on. Dr. Blayney.

The prophecies of Jeremiah, of which the circumstantial accomplishment is often specified in the Old and New Testament, are of a very distinguished and illustrious character. He foretold the fate of Zedekiah, chap. xxxiv. 2—5; (compare with 2 Chron. xxxvi. 19; 2 Kings xxv. 5; and Jer. lii. 11;) the Babylonish captivity, the precise time of its duration, and the return of the Jews. He described the destruction of Babylon, and the downfall of many nations, chap. xxv. 12, (see also chap. ix. 26; xxv. 19—25; xlii. 10—18; xlvi. and following chapters,) in predictions, of which the gradual and successive completion kept up the confidence of the Jews for the accomplishment of those prophecies, which he delivered relative to the Messiah and His period, chap. xxiii. 5, 6; xxx. 9; xxxi. 15; xxxiii. 14—18; xxxiii. 9, 26. He foreshewed the miraculous conception of Christ, chap. xxxi. 22; the virtue of His atonement; the spiritual character of His covenant; and the inward efficacy of His laws, chap. xxxi. 31—36; xxxiii. 8. Jeremiah, contemplating those calamities which impended over his country, represented, in the most descriptive terms, and under the most expressive images, the destruction that the invading enemy should produce. He bewailed, in pathetick expostulation, the shameless adulteries which had provoked the Almighty, after long forbearance, to threaten Judah with inevitable punishment, at the time that false prophets deluded the nation with the promises of "assured peace," and when the people, in impious contempt of "the Lord's word," defied its accomplishment. Jeremiah intermingles with his prophecies some historical relations relative to his own conduct, and to the completion of those predictions which he had delivered. The reputation of Jeremiah had spread among foreign nations, and his prophecies were deservedly celebrated in other countries. Many heathen writers have likewise undesignedly borne testimony to the truth and accuracy of his prophetick and historical descriptions. Dr. Gray.

As to the style of Jeremiah, this Prophet is by no means wanting either in elegance or sublimity, although, generally speaking, inferior to Isaiah in both. His thoughts indeed are somewhat less elevated, and he is commonly more large and diffuse in his sentences; but the reason of this may be, that he is mostly taken up with the gentler passions of grief and pity, for the expression of which he has a peculiar talent. This is most evident in "the Lamentations," where those passions altogether predominate; but it is often visible also in his "Prophecies," in the former part of the book more especially, which is principally poetical; the middle parts are chiefly historical; but the last part, consisting of six chapters, is entirely poetical, and contains several oracles distinctly marked, in which this Prophet falls very little short of the lofty style of Isaiah. But of the whole Book of Jeremiah it is hardly the one half which I look upon as poetical. Bp. Lowth.

Chap. I. ver. 1. The words of Jeremiah.] This chapter forms an entire section by itself. It contains the call of Jeremiah, and the commission given him by God, the purport of which is explained by two symbolical images. God encourages him to proceed in the execution of it by assuring him of protection and support. Dr. Blayney.

——— Anathoth.] See the Introduction for the situation of this place.

2, 3. — in the days of Josiah, — unto the end of the eleventh year of Zedekiah.] See the chapters distributed according to the reigns of the several kings in the Introduction to this book.

Jeremiah prophesied forty-one years and upwards, if we take in the prophecies he uttered in Egypt after the captivity, chap. xliii, xliv, which are not included between the reigns of Josiah and Zedekiah. W. Lowth.

4. Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying.] This seems to have been a visible appearance of the Divine Majesty, made by the Son of God, or the second Person of the blessed Trinity; see note on Is. vi. 1: who appeared in an human shape, as a prelude to the incarnation, first to Adam, Gen. iii. 8; then to Abraham, Gen. xviii. 2; afterwards to Joshua, Josh. v. 13; as also to Ezekiel, chap. i. 26; and to Daniel, chap. viii. 15, 18; x. 6, 10. Of the same kind was this vision represented to Jeremiah. Compare the ninth verse of this chapter with the forementioned texts of Daniel. W. Lowth.

5. — I knew thee.] Some persons have been designed for certain offices by a particular decree of God, from or before their coming into the world. So was John the Baptist, Luke i. 15; and St. Paul, Gal. i. 15; and the Prophet Jeremiah here in the text. This favour is expressed by "knowing" him, or taking especial notice of him, as if a prince should single out one particular person, and call him by name, and appoint him to some honourable office and trust. So God expresses His peculiar favour for Moses, by saying, "I know thee by name;" Exod. xxxiii. 12, 17. W. Lowth. The phrase "I knew thee" may signify, "I had thee in my view," or approved thee as a fit and proper object: as in Acts xv. 18, "Known unto God are all His works from the beginning of the world:" He contemplated the plan of them, and approved it in His mind, before He created and brought them into being. Dr. Blayney.

To the same effect it is said, that God "sanctified" him, or set him apart for the prophetical office: the same phrase being applied to our Saviour Himself, whom God in an eminent manner "sanctified" or set apart for the offices of King, Priest, and Prophet; and in due time "sent" Him into the world" to execute the same, John x. 36. W. Lowth.

6. — I am a child.] Not strictly within the years of childhood: but he calls himself "a child," by way of extenuating his abilities. Solomon calls himself "a little child" when he was married, and at least twenty years old, 1 Kings iii. 1, 7. And the word "child," or youth, is elsewhere used of those who were arrived at the first years of manhood. So Isaac is called a "lad," or youth, when he must have been twenty or thirty years old. The Romans extended their word for youth to thirty or forty years of age. W. Lowth. The same word is translated a "young man" in 2 Sam. xviii. 5.

8. Be not afraid of their faces: for I am with thee.] The style of God's commission to His prophets and messengers commonly runs in these words, "I will be with thee:" see Exod. iii. 12; Deut. xxxi. 8; Josh. i. 5; importing that God, who sent them, will enable them to discharge the office He has committed to them, and will give them strength proportioned to the business they undertake. W. Lowth.

am with thee to deliver thee, saith the LORD.

9 Then the LORD put forth his hand, and [f] touched my mouth. And the LORD said unto me, Behold, I have [g] put my words in thy mouth.

10 See, I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to [h] root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant.

11 ¶ Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, Jeremiah, what seest thou? And I said, I see a rod of an almond tree.

12 Then said the LORD unto me, Thou hast well seen: for I will hasten my word to perform it.

13 And the word of the LORD came unto me the second time, saying, What seest thou? And I said, I see a seething pot; and the face thereof is † toward the north.

14 Then the LORD said unto me, Out of the [i] north an evil † shall break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land.

15 For, lo, I will [k] call all the families of the kingdoms of the north, saith the LORD; and they shall come, and they shall set every one his throne at the entering of the gates of Jerusalem, and against all the walls thereof round about, and against all the cities of Judah.

Before CHRIST about 628.

16 And I will utter my judgments against them touching all their wickedness, who have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, and worshipped the works of their own hands.

17 ¶ Thou therefore gird up thy loins, and arise, and speak unto them all that I command thee: be not dismayed at their faces, lest I ‖ confound thee before them.

18 For, behold, I have made thee this day [l] a defenced city, and an iron pillar, and brasen walls against the whole land, against the kings of Judah, against the princes thereof, against the priests thereof, and against the people of the land.

19 And they shall fight against thee; but they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee, saith the LORD, to deliver thee.

10. — to root out, and to pull down, &c.] The Prophets are said to do things, when they declare God's purpose of doing them. See Is. vi. 10; Ezek. xliii. 3. In the same manner God here appoints Jeremiah to declare His purposes concerning the overthrow or restoration of kingdoms and nations, according as they should persist in, or repent of, their sins: compare chap. xviii. 7. In pursuance of these directions, some of the following prophecies foretell the destruction of the Jewish and other nations; see chap. xxv. 15, &c.: and others predict their restoration; see chap. xxx. xxxi. xlviii. 47; xlix. 6, 39. W. Lowth. See Gen. xli. 13.

11. — I see a rod of an almond tree.] The almond tree is supposed to have received its Hebrew name, because it is the first tree that waketh or riseth from its winter repose. Accordingly, Pliny says, that this tree flowers in January, and by March brings its fruit to maturity; (meaning in warm southern climates;) and more modern travellers attest the same fact. And the word in the next verse, rendered "hasten," signifies properly to wake or watch: so that here is at once an allusion to the property of the almond tree, and in the original an affinity of sound, which makes the allusion more striking there, than it can be in a translation. Parkhurst, Dr. Blayney.

13. — toward the north.] The phrase should be rendered "from the north," or "from the face of the north," as in the margin. From the next verse it appears, that the evil was to come from the north: and therefore the steam, which was designed for an emblem of that evil, must have issued from that quarter. The pot denoted the empire of the Babylonians and Chaldeans, lying to the north of Judea, and pouring forth its multitudes, like a thick vapour, to overspread the land. Dr. Blayney. See the note on chap. iv. 6.

These comparisons had no appearance of meanness among a people accustomed to see in the temple of the Lord victims, the flesh of which was dressed in caldrons, for the use of the priests, and of the individuals who came thither to offer sacrifice. Calmet.

15. — all the families of the kingdoms of the north,] There were inferiour kings and princes, who were either allies or tributaries to the Babylonian empire: compare chap. xxxiv. 1; l. 41; li. 27. God saith, all these shall join their forces with the Chaldean army, in order to the conquest of Judea. The word "family" is equivalent to people here, and in chap. viii. 3; x. 25. W. Lowth.

In wars of this sort kings of extensive empires led with them inferiour princes, their subjects or allies. We may see an instance of this in the army of Holofernes, Judith ii. 7; and in that of Ben-hadad, king of Syria, who had with him as many as two and thirty kings, 1 Kings xx. 1. Calmet.

—— shall set every one his throne] Each prince shall pitch his royal pavilion, with all the marks of sovereignty belonging to it, in token of having obtained a complete victory, and taken entire possession of the city: see chap. xliii. 10. W. Lowth. To "set up a throne" in or over any place, denotes taking full possession of it, and exercising authority and dominion there. Dr. Blayney.

17. — gird up thy loins, &c.] See the notes on 1 Kings xviii. 46; Job xxxviii. 3.

18. For, behold, I have made thee this day a defenced city, &c.] For, behold, I do this day confirm thee against all the opposition which shall be made unto thee; thou shalt be more surely defended from henceforth than a strongly walled city; more firm than a pillar of iron, or walls of brass. Bp. Hall.

Chap. II. The prophecy, begun in this chapter, is continued to the end of the fifth verse of the next chapter. In it God professes to retain the same kindness and favourable disposition towards Israel which He had manifested in their earlier days. He expostulateth with them on their ungrateful returns for His past goodness; and sheweth, that it was not want of affection in Him, but their own extreme and unparalleled wickedness and disloyalty, which had already subjected, and would still subject, them to calamities and misery. He concludes with a pathetick address, exhorting them to return to Him, with an implied promise of acceptance; and laments the necessity He was under Ver. 2. — I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, &c.] I remember My first kindness to thee, when I delivered thee out of Egypt, (compare Hos. ii. 15,) and espoused thee to Myself, to be My own peculiar people. The covenant which God made with the Jews at mount Sinai is commonly represented under the metaphor of a marriage contract. W. Lowth.

5. — walked after vanity,] That is, after the idolatrous worship of the heathens. Idols are commonly styled "vanities," chap. x. 15; xiv. 22; xvi. 19; and "things of nought," chap. xiv. 14; because "an idol is nothing in the world," as St. Paul speaks, 1 Cor. viii. 4. W. Lowth.

6. — a land — of pits,] Irwin describes the wilderness, through which God led His chosen people, as presenting in various parts a wild confusion of hanging precipices, disjointed rocks, and hideous and horrid chasms, which appear very alarming and tremendous to travellers. Harmer.

— the shadow of death,] This image was borrowed from those dusky caverns and holes among the rocks, which the Jews ordinarily chose for their burying-places; where death seemed to hover continually, casting over them his broad shadow. Dr. Blayney.

8. The priests said not, Where is the Lord? &c.] The priests, whose office it was to instruct others in their duty, Mal. ii. 6, 7, were ignorant or regardless of it themselves. This was the principal reason of that degeneracy of manners which prevailed among the people. See Hos. iv. 6. W. Lowth.

9. — I will yet plead with you.] That is, I will maintain by arguments the equity of My proceedings, and the iniquity of yours. Dr. Blayney.

10. — the isles of Chittim,] See the note on Gen. x. 5.

"The isles of Chittim" are Italy, and the adjacent provinces of Europe which lie along the Mediterranean sea. And as these were to the west of Judea, and Kedar in Arabia to the east, the plain purport of this passage is, Look about you to the west and to the east. Dr. Blayney.

11. Hath a nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods?] Men are very tenacious of the religion of their forefathers, and with difficulty prevailed on to renounce it, though the change be never so reasonable. Whereas the Jews have changed the worship of the true God for idols and vanities. W. Lowth.

12. Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, &c.] See the note on Is. i. 2.

13. — they have forsaken me the fountain of living waters, &c.] God is the Author and Giver of all blessings, both spiritual and temporal; and from Him all good gifts are derived, as from an inexhaustible spring or fountain: see Ps. xxxvi. 9. And wherever else men place their happiness, whether in false religions, or in the uncertain comforts of worldly blessings, they will find themselves disappointed, just as they that expect to find water at broken cisterns or conduits. W. Lowth.

14. Is Israel a servant? &c.] God redeemed Israel from the bondage of Egypt, and adopted him for His son, Exod. iv. 22: so that his present servitude, and his being made a prey to so many foreign enemies, cannot be ascribed to his birth or primitive condition, but must be imputed to his sins, of which his slavery is the consequence. Compare Is. l. 1; lii. 3. W. Lowth.

15. The young lions roared upon him,] In the figurative style of prophecy, "lions" denote "powerful princes and conquerours." Such were Pharaoh-necho king of Egypt, and Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon; whose successive hostilities against the kingdom of Judah seem here to be foretold.

It may be observed, that the verbs in this verse express the time past; but the context shews that they must be understood of the future. Nor is it unusual for the Prophets thus to speak of events foreseen by them, as if they had been already accomplished. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney. See the note on Deut. xxxii. 15.

16. Also the children of Noph &c.] This alludes to the severe blow which the nation received in a capital part, when the good king Josiah was defeated by the Egyptians, and slain in battle: or when afterwards, upon the deposition of Jehoahaz, the glory of the monarchy was debased, by its being changed into a tributary and dependant kingdom, 2 Kings xxiii. 33, 34. Noph and Tahapanes were two principal cities of Egypt, otherwise called Memphis, and Daphnæ Pelusiacæ. Dr. Blayney.

—— have broken the crown of thy head.] The Prophet here pursues the metaphor of the lions, ver. 15, whose custom it is "to tear the arm with the crown of the head," Deut. xxxiii. 20. The margin reads, "feed upon thy crown;" that is, destroy and devour the principal or best parts of the country. So the best spices are called "the head of spices" in the original, Exod. xxx. 23; Cant. iv. 14. W. Lowth.

18. — to drink the waters of Sihor?] At ver. 13 it is said, that the people had "forsaken Jehovah, the fountain of living waters;" by a like figure they are here reproved for proceeding, after the manner of the Egyptians and Assyrians, "to drink the waters of their rivers;" that is, to have recourse for help to the gods, on whom those nations placed their dependence. Sihor is a name given to the Nile, Is. xxiii. 3; and the Euphrates is called "the river" by way of eminence. Dr. Blayney. See note on Gen. xv. 18.

19. — it is an evil thing and bitter, &c.] This is applicable to individuals as well as to nations. Life was not intended to be led inconsistently; one part in doing wrong, the other in being sorry for it. Uniform obedience is our Maker's demand; and whoever departs from it wilfully, though he may return, will assuredly be made to "know and see," one way or other, that "it is a thing evil and bitter, that he hath forsaken the Lord his God." Abp. Secker.

22. For though thou wash thee with nitre, &c.] Though thou endeavourest to wash away thy sins by the rites of expiation prescribed by the law, or practised by idolaters; though thou insistest upon thy own innocence and justification, (ver. 23;) yet the "marks" or stains of thy sins will always appear in the sight of God, till they are cleansed by a sincere repentance and reformation. W. Lowth.

—— nitre.] See note at Prov. xxv. 20. It is found in abundance in Egypt, and in many parts of Asia, where it is called soap earth, because it is dissolved in water, and used like soap in washing. Dr. Blayney.

23. — see thy way in the valley,] See how thou hast prostituted thyself, and practised the grossest idolatry in the valley; alluding to those idolatrous acts which were practised in the valley of Hinnom. See chap. vii. 31; Is. lvii. 5, 6. Dr. Blayney. The horrible practice of the Jewish idolaters, in burning their sons and their daughters in the fire, effectually confuted their pretences to innocence, since this way of worship had been expressly forbidden by God, Lev. xx. 2, &c. W. Lowth.

—— thou art a swift dromedary traversing her ways;] The impossibility of restraining one of these fleet animals, when hurried away by the impetuous call of nature, is represented as a parallel to that unbridled lust and eagerness, with which the people of Judah ran after the gratification of their passion for idolatry, which is called spiritual whoredom. Dr. Blayney.

For the dromedary, see the note on Gen. xxiv. 10; and for the wild ass, see the notes on Job xxxix. 5—8; Hosea viii. 9.

—— traversing her ways;] That is, winding or crossing her way or path: running up and down in a disorderly manner. Parkhurst.

24. — all they that seek her will not weary themselves; &c.] The animal is described in the season of her lust, when "all they that seek her," that is, the males, "will not weary themselves," but on the contrary will find her eager to meet them. Calmet.

25. Withhold thy foot from being unshod, &c.] This is probably a warning to beware of the consequences of pursuing the courses they were addicted to; as if it had been said, Take care that thou dost not expose thyself by thy wicked ways to the wretched condition of going into captivity unshod, as the manner is represented, chap. xx. 4; and of serving thine enemies in hunger, and in thirst, and in want of the necessaries of life, Deut. xxviii. 48. Dr. Blayney.

—— but thou saidst, There is no hope: no; &c.] But thou continuest obstinate, and sayest secretly, There is no hope of my reclaiming: no; I have taken a deep affection to the strange gods of the Gentiles, and I will go after them. Bp. Hall. They are the words of desperate sinners, who are resolved to continue in their wickedness, in spite of all the reason that can be offered to the contrary. Compare chap. xviii. 12. W. Lowth.

28. — according to the number of thy cities are thy gods, O Judah.] The Israelites had now contracted all the habits of the Egyptians. It had been long peculiar to their superstition, for every city of that empire to have its tutelary deity, besides those which were worshipped in common. Jeremiah here tells us, that the people of Judah bore part with them in that extravagance. Bp. Warburton.

30. In vain have I smitten your children; &c.] The design of God's judgments is men's reformation: and where they do not attain this end, it shews that such a people are incorrigible. The people of Judea were so far from "receiving correction," and turning God's chastisements to their own improvement, that they put to death the Prophets, who in God's name reproved them and exhorted them to repentance. See 2 Chron. xxiv. 20, 21; xxxvi. 16; Neh. ix. 26; Matt. xxiii. 30—37; Acts vii. 52. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

Merely feeling the pressure of distress will do us no service, without attending properly to Him from whom it comes. On the contrary, when God saith, "In vain have I smitten your children, they received no correction," it implies that they were hardened in wickedness; whereas, when "the voice of the Lord crieth, the man of wisdom will hear the rod, and who hath appointed it," Mic. vi. 9. Abp. Secker.

31. O generation, see ye the word of the Lord. &c.] O ye unthankful generation, attend to this word of the Lord. Have I been barren of My favours to you? Have I yielded you no variety of comfortable fruits? Have I not enlightened you with the knowledge of My name and My laws? and now, when I have brought you into your promised land, and settled you there, ye are ready to say in your presumption, We are lords, and have gotten to ourselves these dominions; we will regard Thee no more. Bp. Hall.

33. Why trimmest thou thy way to seek love?] The Prophet alludes, as before ver. 20, to the practices of a common harlot, who decks herself, and uses all the inveigling arts that may recommend her. Thus has Judea tried all methods to gain the friendship of foreign idolaters, who are called her lovers. See chap. iii. 1; iv. 30; xxii. 22. W. Lowth.

— therefore hast thou also taught the wicked ones thy ways.] Thou hast by these means not only confirmed those nations in their idolatrous practices, but hast also taught them to practise new idolatries, to which they were not accustomed. W. Lowth.

34. Also in thy skirts is found the blood of the souls of the poor innocents:] Thou art plainly found guilty of the blood of My Prophets. Bp. Hall. Or, of the children offered in sacrifice to Moloch: see ver. 23; chap. xix. 4; Ps. cvi. 38. The guilt of that innocent blood was as evident upon them, as if they had murdered them with their own hands, and the stains of blood had been found upon their clothes. W. Lowth. The "skirts" may signify both the skirts of a garment, and the outskirts or borders of a city or country; both which senses are probably here intended, the former being the metaphorical, the latter the literal, sense. Dr. Blayney.

— I have not found it by secret search,] "I have not found it (that is, the blood) by digging," as in the margin; or, according to the Greek and Latin versions, "in a digged hole or pit." Compare Ezek. xxiv. 7. Parkhurst.

36. — thou also shalt be ashamed of Egypt, &c.] The people of Judah seem to have courted the assistance of foreign nations by a sinful compliance with their idolatrous customs. This measure had failed them. Ahaz made himself tributary to the king of Assyria, but it turned to his disgrace and ruin: see 2 Chron. xxviii. 21. In like manner, the Prophet says, they shall be disappointed in their expectations of succour from Egypt: see chap. xxxvii. 5, 7; Lam. iv. 17; 2 Kings xxiv. 7. Dr. Blayney, W. Lowth.

37. — thine hands upon thine head:] To cover the head was a mark of great affliction. See chap. xiv. 3; 2 Sam. xiii. 19; xv. 30. Dr. Blayney.

Chap. III. ver. 1. — shall not that land be greatly polluted?] See Deut. xxiv. 4; and the note there.

2. — In the ways hast thou sat for them, as the Arabian in the wilderness;] That is, thou hast waited for opportunities of practising thine idolatries, as the Arabian waits for a prey in the wilderness. Bp. Hall. The Arabs wait for caravans with the most violent avidity, looking about them on all sides, raising themselves up on their horses, running here and there to see if they cannot perceive any smoke, or dust, or tracks on the ground, or any other marks of people passing along. Sir J. Chardin.

3. Therefore the showers have been withholden, &c.] The general import of this passage is, That God had begun in some degree to chastise His people, (as He threatened, Lev. xxvi. 19; Deut. xxviii. 23,) with a view to their reformation; yet His chastisement had not produced the desired effect, for they continued as abandoned as before, without shewing the least sign of shame or remorse. By "the showers" we are to understand what is otherwise called "the former or first rain," being the first that falls in autumn after a long summer's drought, which is usually terminated in Judea and the neighbouring countries by heavy showers, that last for some days. Dr. Blayney. Concerning the rains of Judea, see the notes on Deut. xi. 14; xxviii. 12.

5. Will he reserve his anger for ever? &c.] In this and the foregoing verse God puts into the people's mouths words, whereby they might express their humiliation and their hope in His mercy, which they might still expect on their true repentance. He concludes with affirming, that His arguments had no weight with them: "Behold, thou hast spoken and done evil things as thou couldest;" they continued to do as they had said or resolved; they carried their wicked thoughts into execution, in spite of all His remonstrances and expostulations. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

6. The Lord said also unto me] Here begins an entire new section, or distinct prophecy, which is continued to the end of the sixth chapter. The charge of hypocrisy upon Judah, ver. 10, points out the date of this prophecy to have been in the reign of Josiah, and some time after his eighteenth year, when the people under the influence of their good king were professedly engaged in measures of reformation; which however are here declared to have been insincere.

This prophecy consists of two distinct parts. The first part contains a complaint against Judah, for having exceeded the guilt of her sister Israel, whom God had already cast off for her idolatrous apostasy, ver. 6—12. The Prophet is hereupon sent to announce to Israel the promise of pardon upon her repentance, and the hopes of a glorious restoration in aftertimes, which are plainly marked out to be the times of the Gospel, when the Gentiles themselves were to become a part of the Church, ver. 12—21. The children of Israel, confessing and bewailing their sins, have the same comfortable assurances as before repeated to them, ver. 22; chap. iv. 2.

In the second part, which begins chap. iv. 3, and is prefaced with an address to the people of Judah and Jerusalem, exhorting them to prevent the Divine judgments by a timely repentance, the Babylonian invasion is clearly and fully foretold, with all the miseries which would attend it; and the universal and incorrigible depravity of the people is represented at large, and pointed out as the justly provoking cause of the national ruin. Dr. Blayney.

—— backsliding Israel] See the note on chap. vii. 24.

7. — And her treacherous sister Judah saw it.] The two kingdoms of Israel and Judah are described as sisters in iniquity. The same metaphor is applied to Samaria and Jerusalem, the two metropolis's of those kingdoms, Ezek. xxiii. 4, &c. The word "treacherous" properly denotes a wife unfaithful to her husband; see ver. 20. W. Lowth.

9. And it came to pass through the lightness &c.] She was not nice in her choice of objects; but eagerly fell in with all kinds of idolatrous worship indiscriminately, descending so low as to images of wood and stone. Dr. Blayney.

11. — The backsliding Israel hath justified herself] That is, hath appeared righteous in comparison with Judah. A phrase of the like sort occurs, Luke xviii. 14. Dr. Blayney.

Israel and Judah are both shamefully wicked: and yet, of the two, Judah is worse than Israel: her treachery is so much more, as she had more favours from Me. Bp. Hall. She sinned against greater convictions; and would not take warning by that desolation, which God brought on the whole kingdom of Israel for their idolatries. Compare Ezek. xvi. 51. W. Lowth.

12. — toward the north,] Assyria and Media, whither the ten tribes of Israel were carried by their conqueror, lay to the north of Judea. W. Lowth. See the note on chap. iv. 6.

14. — I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, &c.] The word "family" here is equivalent to a country or kingdom: compare chap. i. 15; Zech. xiv. 17, 18. W. Lowth. This passage relates to their call into the Christian Church, into which they were brought, not all at a time, nor in a national capacity, but severally as individuals, here and there one. So it is said, "And ye shall be gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel," Isaiah xxvii. 12. Dr. Blayney.

16. — they shall say no more, The ark of the covenant of the Lord:] Here God comforts the Jews with an assurance, that, though upon their return to Him they might not find themselves in possession of exactly the same privileges as they had before, they should receive ample indemnification, so as to leave them no just cause of regret. The ark of the covenant was the visible seat of God's residence among His people; it was therefore the object of their boast; but after the destruction of the first temple, they had it no more. But to compensate this loss, they are told in the next verse, that "Jerusalem should be called the throne of the Lord," to which, not the Jews only, but "all the nations should be gathered." By Jerusalem is meant the Christian Church: see Gal. iv. 26; Rev. xxi. 2, 3. The greater privileges of this latter would supersede all boast on account of those, which had at any time belonged to the Jewish Church. Dr. Blayney.

—— neither shall it come to mind; neither shall they remember it;] Meaning, The Jews shall then be convinced that the ark and other parts of the Mosaical dispensation are abrogated by Christ and His Gospel, which they will then embrace. Dr. Wells.

18. In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel,] Most of the prophecies, which mention the restoration of the Jews, join Judah and Israel together, as equal sharers in that blessing. See chap. xxx. 3; xxxi. 1; l. 4, 20; Is. xi. 13; Ezek. xxxvii. 16, 22; Hos. i. 11; Zech. x. 6. W. Lowth.

19. But I said, How shall I put thee &c.] But I said, How shall it come about, that thou, which deservedst not the name of a servant, shalt become a dear son to Me; and shalt have a pleasant and happy inheritance bequeathed to thee, even a blessed room in My Church? And I answered Myself again, It is by the means of thy faithful invocation of Me, and of thy true repentance and holy obedience, that this shall be effected. Bp. Hall. The conditions of adoption into the Christian Church, and of enjoying the privileges of the Gospel covenant, are expressly stated by Christ and His apostles to be the same as are here prescribed; namely, the profession of a true faith in God, and uniform obedience for the time to come. "Thou shalt call Me, My Father; and shalt not turn away from Me." Dr. Blayney.

21. A voice was heard upon the high places,] The Prophet, foreseeing that the Jews will at length be touched with an hearty repentance for all their misdoings, represents them as bewailing themselves upon "the high places," the scenes of their former idolatries. Compare chap. xxxi. 9; l. 4; Zech. xii. 10. W. Lowth.

22. — Behold, we come unto thee; &c.] What follows to the end of the chapter is spoken in the name of the Israelites, accepting the Divine invitation, ver. 22; acknowledging the vanity of their misplaced trust, ver. 23; and professing the deepest contrition and shame for their misbehaviour, ver. 24, 25. Dr. Blayney.

24. For shame hath devoured the labour of our fathers &c.] It is this shameful idolatry which hath undone both our late forefathers and us. Bp. Hall. "Shame," or "that shameful thing," meaning the idol that they worshipped, called by the same name, chap. xi. 13; Hos. ix. 10; and with good reason; because, in return for all the expense and pains bestowed on it, it only frustrated the hopes of its votaries; and left them mortified with disappointment, and overwhelmed with disgrace. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

The Hebrews, instead of pronouncing the name of Baal, of which they had a dread, used in its place the name of "Bosheth," shame, confusion. Thus instead of Mephi-baal, and Meri-baal, they said, Mephi-bosheth, and Meri-bosheth. Calmet.

Or it may mean in a general sense, that "shame;" that is, the destruction of our country and our captivity, attended with shame, have consumed us. Dr. Wells.

[d] Chap. 6. 26.

9 And it shall come to pass at that day, saith the LORD, that the heart of the king shall perish, and the heart of the princes; and the priests shall be astonished, and the prophets shall wonder.

10 Then said I, Ah, Lord GOD! surely thou hast greatly deceived this people and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall have peace; whereas the sword reacheth unto the soul.

Chap. IV. The two first verses of this chapter ought not to have been separated from the foregoing; being spoken in reply to the confession of the people of Israel, and concluding that part of the prophecy which respected them. Dr. Blayney. See the note on chap. iii. 6.

Ver. 2. And thou shalt swear, The Lord liveth, &c.] This is as much as to say, Thou shalt be of the number of those that worship the true God. For an oath is one of the most solemn acts of religious invocation; and therefore God's people are expressly charged to swear by His name, and by no other; Deut. vi. 13; x. 20; Josh. xxiii. 7. And to "swear to," or by, "the Lord of Hosts," is used as synonymous with the profession of His true religion, Is. xix. 18. Dr. Blayney.

—— and the nations shall bless themselves in him, &c.] A prediction of the Gospel times, when the heathens shall join with the true Israelites in paying all solemn acts of worship and devotion to the true God alone; see Is. lxv. 16: and in ascribing all honour and glory to Him and His only Son, the Messiah, in whom all nations were to be blessed. See Gen. xxii. 18; Gal. iii. 8; and compare Is. xlv. 25. W. Lowth.

3. For thus saith the Lord &c.] See note on chap. iii. 6.

—— Break up your fallow ground, &c.] Hitherto, O my people, your hearts have been like a rough, thorny, uncultured ground: but now break up this fallow ground of yours, by an unfeigned repentance, and root up these thorns of your corruptions. Bp. Hall.

4. Circumcise yourselves to the Lord, &c.] Circumcision, as well as baptism, had a moral import, and denoted the obligation of putting away all sinful lusts of the flesh, every irregular and inordinate affection and appetite. Dr. Blayney.

5. — Blow ye the trumpet in the land: &c.] The Prophet here describes the dreadful preparations for war, such as "blowing the trumpet," and "setting up the standard," for assembling men together; in order to their leaving the open country, and retiring with their families and goods "into the defenced cities," both for their own safety, and that they might maintain those garrisons against the power of the invading enemy. W. Lowth.

6. — from the north,] Babylonia, Chaldea, Assyria, and Media, are constantly represented in Scripture as being to the north of Judea. Probably the Prophets speak of the kings of Babylonia and Chaldea, not so much with a view to their geographical situation, which is rather to the east of Palestine, as to the course which they took in their expeditions against Judea. The deserts of Arabia being not practicable for an army, they commonly crossed the Euphrates at Tiphsah, or Thapsacus, and approached Judea on the north side, by way of Damascus and Syria. Calmet.

7. The lion is come up from his thicket, &c.] Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon; compare chap. v. 6; whose monarchy is represented by a lion, Dan. vii. 4. He is called here "the destroyer of the Gentiles," or rather nations; Judea and all the neighbouring countries being given up into his hands by God's decree. See chap. xxv. 9; xxvii. 6. W. Lowth. In the language of prophecy, several animals, as a lion, a bear, a leopard, a goat, according to their qualities, are put for several kingdoms and bodies politick. Sir Isaac Newton.

10. — surely thou hast greatly deceived this people] That is, Thou hast suffered them to be greatly deceived by their false prophets: see the note on Is. lxiii. 17. These pretenders to prophecy studied only to speak pleasing things to the people, and soothe them in their impenitency and carnal security: and Thou hast in Thy just judgment given them up to follow those delusions. Compare 2 Thess. ii. 11, 12. W. Lowth.

The Prophet takes care to remove all pretence of charging God, by throwing the blame upon the people themselves: see ver. 18. In one place "the sword" is said to "reach unto the soul:" in the other, the reason is assigned, because their "wickedness" had reached thither before. The people had been desperately wicked; would accept of no sober counsel, nor bear any just reproof: they loved "smooth things;" they delighted in flattery and lies; they "walked after the imagination of their own hearts," chap. xxiii. 17; and therefore God gave them up to strong delusions, and suffered them to be grossly imposed on by lying prophets of their own choosing. In Scripture phrase, God is frequently said to do what He permits to be done, because all events are in His disposal, and wait His pleasure. The device may be man's; but God directs it to better purposes than man could think of; and so, by taking the thing into His own hands, and governing the issue of it, He makes it in a certain sense His own. Dr. Waterland.

In prophetick language, tempestuous winds, or the motion of clouds, is put for wars. Sir Isaac Newton. In this place, under the metaphor of this wind, the Prophet describes the Chaldean armies invading Judea. W. Lowth.

12. — shall come unto me:] At my commandment: compare Matt. viii. 9. The winds, storms, and other meteors are said to fulfil God's word, and attend upon His commands. See Ps. cxlviii. 8; Job xxxviii. 35. W. Lowth. That the calamity spoken of was of God's appointment, coming from Him for a judicial purpose, is apparent from the words that follow. Dr. Blayney.

13. — he shall come up] That is, the person designed by "the lion," and "the destroyer of the Gentiles," ver. 7; namely, the king of Babylon. Compare Is. v. 26—28. Dr. Blayney.

14. — How long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee?] That is, How long wilt thou delude thyself with vain hopes of escaping the judgments of God by any other way than by repentance? Notwithstanding the frequent relapses of the people into idolatry, with what patience did God expect their repentance, and the result of all the merciful messages and warnings given them from time to time by His prophets, as one that earnestly desired it, and even longed for it! Compare xiii. 27, and viii. 6; where God is represented, after the manner of men, waiting with great patience, as one that would have been glad to hear any penitent word drop from them, to see any sign of their repentance and return to a better mind. Abp. Tillotson.

15. For a voice declareth from Dan, &c.] The rumour of the enemy's approach is heard first from Dan, which, being the most northern part of Judea, was first of all invaded. See chap. viii. 16. And the evil tidings still increase, as the army marches forward toward Jerusalem, by the way of mount Ephraim. W. Lowth.

16. — watchers.] By "watchers" are meant besiegers, placing centinels round the city, to prevent any from coming in or going out; and keeping the place in continual alarm by shouts of war. Dr. Blayney.

17. As keepers of a field, are they against her round about;] As in the East pulse, roots, &c, grow in open and uninclosed fields, when they begin to be fit to be gathered, guards are planted, if near a great road, more, if distant, fewer, in a round about these grounds, as is practised in Arabia. Sir J. Chardin.

18. — this is thy wickedness, because it is bitter, &c.] These are the bitter effects of thine obstinacy in wickedness, which, like a deadly wound or disease, toucheth the very heart and seat of life. W. Lowth.

19. My bowels, my bowels! I am pained at my very heart; &c.] Oh the unspeakable sorrow and affliction that I feel for the misery of my people! My bowels yearn, and my heart aches within me, to think of this woful destruction which is approaching to Jerusalem! I cannot contain myself, but I must break forth into lamentation; because I do, as it were, hear beforehand the sound of the trumpet of Nebuchadnezzar, and his alarm to this miserable war. Bp. Hall.

23—26. I beheld the earth, &c.] The images, under which the Prophet represents the approaching desolation as foreseen by him, are such as are familiar to the Hebrew poets on the like occasions. But the assemblage is finely made, so as to delineate all together a most striking and interesting picture of a ruined country, and to justify what has been before observed of the author's happy talent for pathetick description. The earth is brought back, as it were, to its primitive state of chaos and confusion; the cheerful light of the heavens is withdrawn, and succeeded by a dismal gloom; the mountains tremble and the hills shake under dreadful apprehensions of the Almighty's displeasure; a frightful solitude reigns all around; not a vestige is to be seen of any of the human race; even the birds themselves have deserted the fields, unable to find any longer in them their usual food. The face of the country, in the once most fertile parts of it, now overgrown with briars and thorns, assumes the dreary wildness of the desert. The cities and villages are either thrown down and demolished by the hand of the enemy, or crumble into ruins of their own accord for want of being inhabited. Dr. Blayney.

The Prophets often describe God's judgments upon a land or nation, as if the whole frame of nature were in a state of dissolution, because these particular judgments are an earnest of the general judgment. W. Lowth.

27. — yet will I not make a full end.] In the severest judgments which God brings upon a people, He still reserves a remnant, to whom He will make good His promises: see chap. xxx. 11; xlvi. 28. This sense of the words may be confirmed by 1 Sam. iii. 12; "When I begin, I will also make an end:" that is, I will make a thorough destruction, and pursue Eli's family with judgments, till I have utterly consumed it. Or the words may be understood in this sense; Though I make the whole land desolate by sword and famine, yet still I have severer judgments in reserve; (compare chap. v. 10, 18;) namely, the destruction of the city and temple, and the captivity of the people that outlive the former captivities. W. Lowth.

28. — because I have spoken it, I have purposed it, and will not repent,] God's purpose of delivering up the Jews into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar was irreversible, upon the supposition that the greatest part of them would continue impenitent, which He likewise foresaw; see ver. 22, and chap. vii. 16, 27, 28; xiii. 14; xiv. 11, 12; xxv. 9—11. Though elsewhere upon their repentance, to which God frequently exhorted them by His prophets, (see chap. xxv. 4, 5,) He promises the removal of His judgments: see ver. 14 of this chapter, and chap. vii. 3; xvii. 25; xviii. 11; xxii. 4; xxvi. 3; xxxvi. 3. Herein Jeremiah's preaching was very different from that of the false prophets, who promised peace and safety to the people, without interposing the condition of repentance and reformation: see ver. 10 of this chapter, and chap. xiv. 13; xxviii. 3, 4. W. Lowth.

30. — though thou rentest thy face with painting,] Rather, thy "eyes," as in the margin.

This alludes to the custom of the Eastern ladies, who, esteeming large eyes beautiful, make use of stibium, a sort of black paint, which is laid upon the eyelids with a pencil, and being of an astringent quality, partly contracts the eyelids, and partly, by the contrast of colour, tends to enlarge the appearance of the white part of the eyes. The original verb properly signifies to "rend" or tear, and may denote the use of this process to excess, so as it were to tear open the eyes, by way of enlarging them. Dr. Blayney.

The antiquity of this practice is undoubtedly great. Xenophon describes it as a custom among the Medes in the time of the elder Cyrus. Fragments to Calmet.

31. — the daughter of Zion,] Or of Jerusalem, is the same with Zion or Jerusalem: see chap. vi. 2, 23; Lam. i. 6; ii. 1. So "the daughter of my people" is to be understood, ver. 11 of this chapter; and the "daughter of Babylon," Ps. cxxxvii. 8. W. Lowth.

Chap. V. This chapter contains a vehement expostulation with the Jews for the manifold corruption of their manners, and the disorders of both their civil and their ecclesiastical government. And as a punishment for all these enormities, God threatens the invasion of the Chaldeans. W. Lowth. See Dr. Blayney's note on chap. iii. 6.

Ver. 1. — the broad places thereof,] The market places, and other spacious areas in the city, where citizens used to meet for the transaction of business. Dr. Blayney.

—— if ye can find a man,] See the note on Job xxii. 30.

2. And though they say, The Lord liveth; surely they swear falsely.] Though they make an outward and fashionable profession of the name of the Lord, in worshipping Him, in swearing by Him, yet it is but in falsehood and hypocrisy. Bp. Hall. "As the Lord liveth" was the common form of oath among the Jews; but now the only use they made of this sacred oath was to deceive and defraud. Wogan. See the note on chap. iv. 2.

3. O Lord, are not thine eyes upon the truth?] The eyes, turned upon or towards an object, denote not only a diligent inspection and nice discernment of it, but also an earnest expectation or looking after it. The phrase may here be taken in both senses: that God both seeth and discerneth the truth; and also expecteth it from others, especially from those who call upon His name in attestation of it. Dr. Blayney.

—— thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved; &c.] See the note on Isa. i. 5.

ignorant vulgar, who have neither leisure nor opportunity for learning their duty. One might expect from men of better education a truer sense of religion. W. Lowth.

There may be some hope, even for a wicked nation, while the fear of God remains in any considerable number of the wealthy and ruling part of it: but when once they come to be thoroughly corrupted, then every thing is ripe for ruin. And therefore the Prophet, after complaining very pathetically of the sinfulness and impiety of the bulk of his countrymen, still thought there was one resource left. But when he found that those of high condition were as bad or worse than the rest, he immediately gives up all, and pronounces their destruction. Abp. Secker.

6. — a lion, — a wolf, — a leopard.] The wild beasts here spoken of are the king of Babylon and his army. See chap. iv. 7. Dr. Blayney.

The quality of watchfulness is well attributed to the leopard: for it is the property of that animal to lie hid in ambush for the purpose of seizing his prey, and to dart upon it with rapidity when it approaches. Calmet.

7. How shall I pardon thee for this? thy children have forsaken me,] Repentance and turning to God is the only condition of pardon: but they that forsake Him, thereby forsake all means of grace and possibility of salvation. Wogan.

—— sworn by them that are no gods:] See the notes on chap. iv. 2; Josh. xxiii. 7.

—— when I had fed them to the full, they then committed adultery,] When I gave them My blessings in abundance, they made an ill use of My mercies, and riotously run into both bodily and spiritual adultery, and impudently trooped together to work filthiness. Bp. Hall.

Their lewdness was sometimes a concomitant of their idolatries: for many rites of the heathen religions were celebrated with drunkenness, uncleanness, and all sorts of debauchery. Heading.

9. — shall not my soul be avenged &c.] God's anger and vengeance signify in Scripture the execution of His justice: the effects of which are as terrible against obstinate sinners, as if they proceeded from the highest resentment. W. Lowth. See the notes on Gen. vi. 6.

13. And the prophets shall become wind, &c.] These words, spoken by the unbelieving Jews, mean, that, the Prophets being nothing but wind and vanity, their prophecies shall return upon their own heads; and that they shall feel themselves the judgments which they denounce on others. W. Lowth.

14. — I will make my words in thy mouth fire, &c.] The effect of those threatenings that are denounced by thy mouth shall be as speedy and certain as that of fire when applied to dry wood. To the same sense are the words of Hosea, chap. vi. 5, "I have hewed them by the Prophets." W. Lowth.

15. — I will bring a nation upon you from far,] This was threatened in case of disobedience by Moses, Deut. xxviii. 49. Dr. Blayney. Babylon is called "a far country," Is. xxxix. 3. Perhaps it is so called, in comparison of those of the Philistines, Moabites, Ammonites, and other borderers, who were the former oppressors of the Jews.

The words "house of Israel" are, after the captivity of the ten tribes, applied to the two tribes which remained. See chap. vi. 9; ix. 26; x. 1; Ezek. xiii. 5; xviii. 31. W. Lowth.

—— an ancient nation,] Babylon was built about an hundred years after the flood: and soon after, Nimrod erected a kingdom there: whence that country is called "the land of Nimrod," Mic. v. 6. W. Lowth.

22. Fear ye not me?] Considering God's other attributes may breed in us a high esteem and hearty love of God; but the consideration of His power is that which naturally and reasonably produceth a great fear of Him: He is most amiable for His goodness, and in regard to His wisdom greatly venerable, but His power arming the rest renders Him exceedingly terrible. See also chap. x. 6, 7; Luke xii. 5. Dr. Isaac Barrow.

—— which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea &c.] The keeping of the waters within bounds, so that they cannot overflow the earth, is often mentioned in Scripture as an immediate effect of God's overruling power and providence, Job xxxviii. 10, 11; Ps. xxxiii. 7; civ. 9; Prov. viii. 29. W. Loueth.

We know that there are certain natural causes which produce these effects on the sea and the land. But this ought not to prevent us from regarding the all-powerful hand of the Creator, who hath created, and who preserves His creatures in their proper and natural stations. We ought to admire these surprising effects of the first cause, which is His almighty will. To this point the language of Scripture continually directs us, by attributing every thing to God, by referring every thing to Him, by considering Him as the prime Mover of all the events, and even of the effects, which we are accustomed to refer to nature, or to chance: terms confused and ambiguous, of which religion knows nothing. Calmet.

24. —— that giveth rain, &c.] That giveth seasonable rain in the autumn and spring; and reserveth a dry season for the gathering in of the harvest. Bp. Hall. The vicissitude of seasons, of cold and heat, of drought and moisture, so wisely fitted for the growth of the fruits of the earth, and other uses of human life, is such a proof of a Divine providence, as is obvious to the meanest capacity: on which account it is frequently insisted upon by the sacred writers, Ps. cxlvii. 8; Matt. v. 45; Acts xiv. 17. W. Louth.

31. The prophets prophesy &c.] The pretended prophets prophesy falsely, speaking only what they know will please the people; and the priests agree with these false prophets, and so "bear rule," or keep up their authority and interest among the people. Dr. Wells. It is indeed "a horrible thing," and a proof of extreme corruption, when the ministers whom God has established, instead of opposing the wickedness of the people, countenance and encourage it. Osterwald.

Chap. VI. ver. 1. O ye children of Benjamin, gather yourselves to flee &c.] Jerusalem was in the lot of the tribe of Benjamin. Josh. xviii. 28; on which account the inhabitants are addressed by the name of "the children of Benjamin;" and are directed to leave the city, which God was about to destroy, and to take refuge in the mountains. Tekoa, according to St. Jerome, was a little town about twelve miles from Jerusalem; and Beth-haccerem (probably so called from the vineyards round about it) another little town on the same side, but nearer Jerusalem; and both of them in the mountainous parts of Judah, south of the capital. Dr. Blayney.

—— blow the trumpet in Tekoa, &c.] The design of these signals of war is to assemble men together, in order to their mutual defence; but it is in vain to attempt any such matter, and therefore the only use that can be made of them is to give notice to the people, that they should disperse themselves, and fly from the approaching enemy. W. Loueth.

—— a sign of fire] The Prophets often speak of these signals, which were raised upon the heights, to give notice to distant people of the approach and the irruptions of an enemy. They are particularly convenient and useful in mountainous countries like Judea. Calmet.

The alacrity and eagerness with which the Chaldeans undertake and execute the commission with which they were charged, is described in this and the following verse in a beautiful vein of poetry. Though it was late in the day before they received their orders, they are for beginning their march immediately; and, though it was night before they got to the place, they are unwilling to put off the assault till morning. Dr. Blayney.

6. — Hew ye down trees,] Which were to be employed in the siege of Jerusalem. Dr. Blayney. See the note on chap. xxxii. 24.

8. Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, &c.] Take warning by the many threatenings and judgments I have denounced against thee; amend thy ways and doings, lest, if thou persist in thy wickedness, My mind and affection be utterly alienated from thee, (see Ezek. xxiii. 17, 18; Hos. ix. 12,) and I cast off all bowels of compassion toward thee, and give thee up to ruin and desolation. This threatening God fulfilled afterwards, when He suffered the city and nation to be utterly ruined and destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar: but it still received a further completion, in that final desolation brought upon them by the Romans, under Titus and Vespasian. W. Lowth.

9. — turn back thine hand as a grapegatherer into the baskets.] That is, take them again into thine hand, and begin the work of gathering or gleaning anew. The address is from God to the Chaldeans; exhorting them, like a grapegatherer, to return again after the first time, and pick up those few inhabitants that were left before, like the grape-gleanings, and to carry them also into captivity. The Chaldeans did so, as may be seen, chap. lii. 28, 29, 30. Dr. Blayney.

10. — their ear is uncircumcised,] See the note on Exod. vi. 12.

—— and they cannot hearken:] While men are not duly disposed to hear the truth, they cannot give due attention to what God speaks to them. In the same sense Christ saith to the Jews, "How can ye believe, which receive honour one of another?" John v. 44; meaning, that such a temper was an obstacle to their believing on Him, and hindered them from receiving the truth in the love of it. W. Lowth. They cannot, because they will not, hear. Woe betide those, who have placed themselves by their own fault out of a condition of hearkening to the voice of God! It is the remark of St. Jerome upon this passage, "Inability, which proceeds from scorn and unbelief, is not exempted from punishment." Calmet.

—— the word of the Lord is unto them a reproach;] The subject of their scorn and derision: see chap. xx. 8. W. Lowth.

11. Therefore — I will pour it out &c.] See note on chap. i. 10. The Prophet is here said to pour out the Divine "fury upon the children abroad," who take delight in playing in the streets: see Zech. viii. 5; and the "young men who assemble" in meetings for diversion or conversation: compare chap. ix. 21. W. Lowth.

—— the aged with him that is full of days.] From hence it appears, that the word here rendered "the aged" means only a man that has passed a certain time of life, which may be considered as his zenith, so as from thenceforth to be upon the decline. In contradistinction to whom is placed one, who is arrived at what is esteemed the full period of human life; in respect to which the patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, David, and Job, are said to have died "full of years," or "days." See the same distinction made, Is. lxv. 20. Dr. Blayney.

14. They have healed also the hurt &c.] Instead of sharp and seasonable reproofs, they have gone about to salve up the spiritual sores of My people with flattering and plausible words; Peace, peace, all shall be well; when there is nothing but fear and danger. Bp. Hall.

15. Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed,] Shame is a great restraint upon sinners at first; but that soon falls off: and when men have once lost their innocence, their modesty is not like to be long troublesome to them. For impudence comes on with vice, and grows up with it. Smaller vices do not banish all shame and modesty, but great and abominable crimes harden men's foreheads, and make them shameless. When men have the heart to do a very bad thing, they seldom want the face to bear it out. Abp. Tillotson.

16. — Stand ye in the ways, &c.] Do like travellers, when they are at a loss which way they must go: in like manner do ye inquire, what way the patriarchs of old, the judges, the kings, and prophets of former times walked in: imitate their practices, wherein you will find true comfort and satisfaction, and not the late devices of your princes and prophets, whereby you have been seduced into errour, and betrayed into many mischiefs. Compare chap. xviii. 15. W. Lowth.

20. To what purpose cometh there to me incense from Sheba,] See Is. lx. 6. The Prophet reproves the hypocrisy of the Jews, whereby they sought to cover their inward corruption by the external shews of religion: which the Prophets often declare to be of no value when they do not proceed from a devout mind: see chap. vii. 21, 22; Is. i. 11. W. Lowth.

—— the sweet cane from a far country?] The calamus aromaticus is a reed of a very fragrant smell; which, when cut down, dried, and powdered, becomes an ingredient of the richest perfumes. We are informed by heathen writers that it came from Saba. Dr. Blayney.

26. — gird thee with sackcloth,] See the note on Gen. xxxvii. 29.

27. I have set thee for a tower and a fortress] As for thee, O my Prophet, I have set thee as in a watchtower, to descry the ways of My people; yea, I have made thee as a strong tower and fortress against all the rage of them; so that thou mayest fearlessly discover and reprove them. Bp. Hall.

28. — they are brass and iron; they are all corrupters.] They are all but falsifiers and corrupters. Bp. Hall. Brass and iron are the baser metals, used to adulterate the pure silver. Dr. Blayney.

29. The bellows are burned, &c.] All the means, that can be used to purge this people of their dross, prove ineffectual: the wicked are not separated from the righteous. Therefore your city shall be as one common furnace, wherein you shall be melted down all together. See Ezek. xxii. 19, &c. W. Lowth.

—— the lead is consumed of the fire,] Before the use of quicksilver was known, the refiners made use of lead for separating the silver from the other substances mixed with it. So we learn from Pliny's Natural History. Dr. Blayney.

—— the wicked are not plucked away.] Or, "the bad are not separated." By "the bad" are meant, according to the metaphor, "the base ingredients;" that is, the bad principles and habits which prevail so much, and adhere so closely, that all the endeavours and pains used by the refiner to purge them away and get clear of them are frustrated, and prove ineffectual: so that, as it follows in the next verse, nothing remains but to throw them aside, as a metal disallowed and cried down by authority, counterfeiting silver, but not capable of being brought to the sterling standard. Dr. Blayney.

30. Reprobate silver shall men call them, &c.] As base money is refused by every one, because it cannot bear the touchstone, so shall these hypocrites and evildoers be rejected both by God and by man; for none of their actions will bear the test of God's laws, or abide His severe trial. The Greek word, which is rendered "reprobate" in the New Testament, has an allusion to this place; and, in pursuance of the same metaphor, the laws and judgments of God are often compared to a refiner's fire: see Prov. xvii. 3; Is. i. 25; Zech. xiii. 9; Mal. iii. 2, 3; 1 Pet. i. 7. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST about 600. THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying, † Heb. whereupon my name is called.

Chap. VII. ver. 1. The word that came to Jeremiah] A new prophecy begins with this chapter, and is continued on to the end of chap. x. The date is not precisely marked; but the probability is, that it was delivered not long after the preceding one, and, as it should seem, on the following occasion. Besides the Prophets, who were commissioned to announce the approaching calamities of Judah and Jerusalem, there were others, who took on themselves to flatter the people with opposite predictions. They taught them to look upon such threats as groundless, since God, they said, would have too much regard for His own honour, to suffer His temple to be profaned, and the seat of His holiness given up into the hand of strangers. Jeremiah is commanded openly to reprove the falsehood of these assertions, and to shew, by an example in point, that the sanctity of the place would afford no security for the guilty; but that God would assuredly do by His house at Jerusalem, what He had done unto Shiloh; and cast the people of Judah out of His sight, as He had already cast off the people of Israel, for their wickedness; ver. 1—16. God justifies the severity of these proceedings by a representation of the people's impiety; ver. 17—28. The Prophet declares their sacrifices to be of no acceptance, whilst they continue deaf to the calls of God's messengers; ver. 21—28. He specifies the gross idolatries with which they were defiled; and pronounces a heavy sentence of Divine vengeance both on the dead and on the living, ver. 29; chap. viii. 3. Dr. Blayney.

4. Trust ye not in lying words,] Uttered by your false prophets, who foretell peace, and encourage you in impenitency. See chap. iv. 10; xiv. 13, 14. W. Lowth.

—— The temple of the Lord, are these.] As much as to say, God hath placed His name here, ver. 10, and hath chosen these stately buildings, as the place of His peculiar residence; and what reason is there to believe, that He will ever forsake it, and give it up to be destroyed by strangers and idolaters? Compare chap. xviii. 18; Mic. iii. 11. W. Lowth.

In the same manner our Saviour's disciples, immediately after their Lord had been foretelling the destruction of Jerusalem, came to Him, and with similar notions in their heads, as from our Saviour's reply may be collected, pointed out to Him the magnificent buildings of the temple, Matt. xxiv. 1, 2. Dr. Blayney.

The triple repetition of "The temple of the Lord" denotes a remarkable earnestness, and extreme presumption in the people. The Prophet employs the same repetition afterwards, in his apostrophe to Judea, "O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord," chap. xxii. 29. Calmet.

10. — and say, We are delivered to do all these abominations?] Will ye interpret the deliverances God hath formerly vouchsafed to you as so many licences to commit new abominations? Or do you think, when you offer your propitiatory sacrifices, that they will wipe away the guilt of all your past offences, and ye may securely renew your former ill practices, having such a certain and easy method of obtaining pardon? W. Lowth.

11. Is this house, which is called by my name, become a den of robbers &c.] Ye think all is well if ye present yourselves into My temple, though you bring with you the guilt of manifold sins: ye come hither full of theft, of oppression, of injustice: is My temple, think ye, for such worshippers? Is this house, which is called by My name, fit to be a den of thieves and robbers? Behold, I have well seen and noted with how wicked dispositions and hollow hearts ye come hither, saith the Lord. Bp. Hall.

12. But go ye now unto my place which was in Shiloh,] Shiloh was the place, where, upon the first coming of the Israelites into Canaan, the tabernacle, in which was the ark of God's presence, was set up, by Divine appointment, no doubt; and there it continued for a space of time, until the days of Samuel. It was during this residence that the Israelites received that signal defeat from the Philistines, when the ark of God was taken, as related, 1 Sam. iv. 10, 11: the pathetick description of which disaster, made by the Psalmist, Ps. lxxviii. 60—64, has caused it to be generally believed, that an allusion to it was likewise designed upon this occasion. Dr. Blayney.

13. —rising up early and speaking,] The phrase "rising up early," signifies diligence and assiduity: see Is. l. 4. The same sense is elsewhere expressed in the Hebrew, by doing any thing "in the morning," which our translators render "early," Ps. xlvi. 5; xc. 14. See likewise Ps. cxliii. 8; Is. xxxiii. 2. W. Lowth.

16. — the whole seed of Ephraim.] That is, all the ten tribes, who are often called by the name of Ephraim, that being the principal tribe among them. Their first king Jeroboam was of that tribe. See Is. vii. 2. W. Lowth.

16. Therefore pray not thou for this people, &c.] Nothing but an universal reformation, which God foresaw would not be effected, could deliver the Jews from that captivity and desolation, which He had threatened to bring upon them. In some cases the intercessions of good men have been so far prevalent, as to rescue sinners from the punishments they deserved; but here God declares, that nothing but a general amendment shall avert the judgments threatened. W. Lowth.

18. The children gather wood, &c.] All the sort of them, of all ages and both sexes, conspire together in their idolatry: children, fathers, women, put their hands to the work, and all agree to offer cakes, in the way of sacrifice, to the sun or moon. Bp. Hall.

—— cakes] Certain idolatrous cakes, artificially prepared of dough, and offered to the moon under the title of the queen of heaven. Parkhurst.

—— queen of heaven,] When we consider that the moon was at the beginning appointed to "rule the night," as well as the sun "to rule the day," Gen. i. 16; and that she manifestly does so, since her light is greater than that of all the planets and stars put together; and that the idolaters called the sun, or solar fire, not only Lord of heaven, but also King, there can be little doubt, but by "the queen of heaven," they meant the moon. Parkhurst.

19. Do they provoke me to anger? — do they not provoke themselves &c.] Do they think to shew their malice towards Me, as if they could hurt Me by their wickedness? Will not their sins turn at last to their own utter confusion? W. Lowth.

21. — Put your burnt offerings unto your sacrifices, and eat flesh.] The burnt offerings, after they were flayed, were to be consumed wholly upon the altar, Levit. i. 9; whereas in the sacrifices of the peace offering, only the fat was burnt upon the altar, the remainder belonging partly to the priest, and the rest was spent in a religious entertainment. See Lev. vii. 29—34; Deut. xii. 11, 18. Here the Prophet tells the Jews, they may, if they please, eat the flesh of their burnt offerings, as well as of their peace offerings, for God will accept neither of them from their hands; (see chap. vi. 20;) and looks upon them only as common meats; compare Hos. viii. 13. W. Lowth.

22. For I spake not — concerning burnt offerings or sacrifices.] God hereby intimates, that He did not primarily intend to appoint this way of worship, and to impose it upon the Jews, as that which was most suitable to His own nature, and most agreeable to Him, but that He condescended to it, as most accommodated to their state and inclination, because of the carnality of their hearts, and the promeness of the people to idolatry. Mlyn. Tillotson. It is a way of speaking, usual in Scripture, to express the preference due to one thing over another, in terms which express the rejecting of that which is less worthy: and thus we may understand the text here in correspondence with the parallel passage of Hosea, "I desired mercy, and not sacrifice," chap. vi. 6: the words in both places implying, that God always laid a greater stress upon sincere obedience, than on external observances; and designed the latter, as so many mounds and fences to guard and preserve the former. W. Lowth.

24. — and went backward, and not forward.] The metaphor is taken from headstrong oxen, that draw back and refuse to put their necks under the yoke: see ver. 26; Nehem. ix. 29; Hos. iv. 16. In the same sense the word "backsliding" is often applied to the Jews in this prophecy. W. Lowth.

29. Cut off thine hair, &c.] Mourn thou solemnly, O Jerusalem; and express thy sorrow by publick acts of humiliation, that the world may take knowledge of it. Bp. Hall. The cutting off of the hair was commonly practised in the time of great sorrow and mourning, chap. xlvii. 5; xlviii. 37; Is. xv. 2. W. Lowth.

This custom prevailed, not only amongst the Jews, but amongst Pagans also. Homer represents Achilles, as well as his soldiers, cutting off their hair at the funeral of Patroclus. Pope.

CHAP. VIII.

1 The calamity of the Jews, both dead and alive. 4 He upbraideth their foolish and shameless impenitency. 13 He threateth their grievous judgment, 18 and bewaileth their desperate estate.

AT that time, saith the LORD, they shall bring out the bones of the kings of Judah, and the bones of his princes, and the bones of the priests, and the bones of the prophets, and the bones of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, out of their graves:

2 And they shall spread them before the sun, and the moon, and all the host of heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have served, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have sought, and whom they have worshipped: they shall not be gathered, nor be buried; they shall be for dung upon the face of the earth.

3 And death shall be chosen rather than life by all the residue of them that remain of this evil family, which remain in all the places whither I have driven them, saith the LORD of hosts.

— the generation of his wrath.] That is, a race of men obnoxious to God's wrath: in the same sense the Apostle speaks of "the children of wrath." Eph. ii. 3. Dr. Blayney.

30. — they have set their abominations in the house &c.] Meaning the image and altars for idolatrous worship, which Manasseh had set up in the temple and the courts near it. See chap. xxiii. 11; xxxii. 34; 2 Kings xxi. 4, 7; xxiii. 4. This gave occasion for other profanations of the temple in aftertimes. See Ezek. viii. 5, 6, &c. W. Lowth.

31. And they have built the high places of Tophet, &c.] Respecting "Tophet," &c. see note at 2 Kings xxiii. 10.

—— which I commanded them not,] So far was God from commanding this practice, that He expressed the greatest detestation of it, and forbade it under the severest penalties: compare chap. xxxii. 35; and Lev. xx. 1—5. The words are spoken by the figure, called Meiosis, by which a great deal more is implied than expressed; see Deut. xvii. 3: where the text, speaking of the worship of the host of heaven, adds, "which I have not commanded:" the meaning is, I expressly forbade it. See instances of the like form of expression, Is. lxv. 12; Jer. ii. 8; Prov. xviii. 5; xxviii. 21; Rom. i. 28. W. Lowth.

32. — it shall no more be called Tophet, &c.] So great a slaughter shall be therefore in Jerusalem, that there shall not be room enough in the valley of Tophet for the burial of the slain; and therefore that valley shall change its name, and be called, "the valley of slaughter." Bp. Hall.

King Josiah first of all "defiled" this place, as it is said in 2 Kings xxiii. 10; that is, polluted it, or unconsecrated it, by burying dead bodies in it; compare ver. 16 of that chapter. And afterwards, when great numbers died in the siege of Jerusalem, and the famine that followed, it became a common burying-place of the Jews; see chap. xix. 6; whereby was fulfilled that prophecy of Ezekiel, chap. vi. 5; "I will lay the dead carcases of the children of Israel before their idols." Compare Lev. xxvi. 30; Ezek. vi. 4, 5, 13. W. Lowth.

34. — will I cause to cease — the voice of mirth, &c.] No more marriages shall be contracted in Jerusalem; no more shall there be heard in the cities of Judah the voice of mirth, and the songs of joy, and the noise of instruments of musick, which were wont to accompany these sorts of feasts. See chap. xvi. 9; xxv. 10; xxxiii. 11. Calmet.

There is no feast in the East without musick and dances, certainly then they are not omitted in nuptial solemnities. The noise of the musick, &c, is probably to be understood by "the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride," rather than the voices of the persons themselves. The voices of the "bridegroom" and of the "bride" appear to be distinctly mentioned, because in the East the women do not feast with the men. See note on Esth. i. 9. Sir J. Chardin, Harmer.

Chap. VIII. ver. 1—3. These three verses ought not to have been separated from those of the preceding chapter. Dr. Blayney.

1. At that time, saith the Lord, they shall bring out the bones &c.] The calamity, which I will bring upon the Jews and Jerusalem, shall not rest in the living, but shall reach to the very dead: for the very bones of their kings, and princes, and priests, and prophets, shall be torn up out of their graves. Bp. Hall.

2. — they shall not be gathered, nor be buried,] The bones, thus scattered about, shall not be gathered or laid up in their sepulchres. Not to enjoy the common rites of burial is spoken of as an aggravation of men's calamities, chap. xxii. 19; xxxvi. 30; Is. xiv. 19, 20; Eccles. vi. 3. W. Lowth.

The terrible and just vengeance of God upon the crimes and idolatries of the Jews, in destroying their city, and in causing their carcases to be exposed in the very place where they had exercised their abominable idolatries, ought to excite our very serious attention. God, provoked with the sins of the Jews, destroyed them and their temple, and gave them up to their enemies, as He had before done the kingdom of the ten tribes. Let us grow wise by their example, as well as by the example of those Christian churches, whose candlestick, that is, the light of God's word, has been removed from them, because they abused it. Such considerations should produce in our hearts a wholesome dread of the judgments of God, and should effectually move us to regard Him with fear, and to serve Him with sincerity. Osterwald.

4. Moreover thou shalt say unto them, &c.] In that part of the prophecy which next follows, the difference of speakers requires to be attended to; the transitions being quick and sudden, but full of life and energy. The Prophet at first in the name of God reproves the people's incorrigibility; he charges their wise ones with folly, and threatens them with grievous calamities, ver. 4—15. In the three next verses he seems to address his countrymen in his own person, and as one of the people who dwelt in the open towns, advising those, that were in the like situation, to retire with him into some of the fortified cities, and there wait the event with patience; since there was nothing but terrour abroad, and the noise of the enemy, who had already begun to ravage the country, ver. 16—18. God speaks, ver. 17; and threatens to bring foes against them that should be irresistible. The Prophet appears again in his own person, commiserating the daughter of his people, who is heard bewailing her forlorn case in a distant land; whilst the voice of God, like that of conscience, breaks in upon her complaints, and shews her that all this ruin is brought upon her by her own infidelities, ver. 18—20. The Prophet once more resumes the discourse, he regrets that no remedy can be found to close up the wounds of his countrymen, and pathetically weeps over the number of the slain, ver. 21; chap. ix. 1. Dr. Blayney.

—— Shall they fall, and not arise? shall he turn away, and not return?] See the note on Gen. xix. 26.

The day of Jerusalem's visitation drew near: destruction was coming upon her like a whirlwind out of the north. Jeremiah appeared with a commission from above to predict as much, and withal to assign the reason. It was, not that the people had sinned—more or less all have sinned: not that they had grievously sinned—all sin may be forgiven: but that they, having sinned, and having grievously sinned, refused to repent, without doing which no forgiveness can be obtained; it cannot indeed be expected. That had happened to Israel, which often happens to others: temptations to evil had prevailed; single acts had grown into habits, and habits had grown inveterate, till they had at length lost the power, and even the desire, to reform and amend. In this situation of things, the Almighty is introduced expostulating with His people; "Moreover thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord; Shall they fall, and not arise? shall he turn away, and not return?" In the whole circle of common life, where men are usually guided by common sense, is there any instance to be found of a similar conduct? Was it ever seen, was it ever heard, that when a man had experienced the misfortune of falling, he should not wish and endeavour to rise again; that when he had by mistake gone out of his way, he should not, upon better information, be desirous of returning into it?—"Why then is this people of Jerusalem slidden back by a perpetual backsliding," one that is never to cease, or have an end? "They hold fast deceit," and, knowing it to be but deceit, for such every sinner well knows it to be, yet "they refuse to return." Bp. Horne.

6. I hearkened and heard, &c.] God is next pleased to speak of Himself after the manner of men, as inclining His ear, and with the affection of a parent fondly listening to catch the first accents of sorrow and contrition that should break forth from the relenting heart of his offending child: "I hearkened and heard, but they spake not aright: no man repented him of his wickedness, saying, What have I done?" No remorse, no reflexion, no sensibility; hardened in vice, and regardless of danger, they pursued with fury and impetuosity their way to perdition; "every one turned to his course, as the horse rusheth into the battle." Bp. Horne.

7. Yea, the stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times; &c.] This earnest expostulation and tender complaint are succeeded by a beautiful allusion to the birds of the air, that species of them styled "birds of passage." They, by instinct, return annually, at a set time, to the country they had left; whereas, by all the reasoning, and all the exhortation in the world, obdurate man cannot be prevailed upon to forsake his iniquity, and return to God who made him. Bp. Horne.

—— her appointed times:] That is, such times as the Creator hath appointed these animals, and hath accordingly for this end imprinted on their natures such an instinct, as exciteth and moveth them thus, at proper times, to fly from one place to another more convenient for them. Dr. Derham.

—— the judgment of the Lord.] His law, or system of laws: that rule of moral conduct, which God prescribed for their observance; and which He furnished them with the means of knowing as certainly, as those birds of passage are taught by what we call natural instinct all that is convenient for them. See Is. i. 3. Dr. Blayney.

8. How do ye say, We are wise, &c.] How do ye priests and scribes say, "We are wise, and the law of the Lord is with us," when in the mean time ye live contrary to it? Certainly, if this be to know, and make a right use of the law, the law should seem to be to small purpose, either in the making or writing of it. Bp. Hall.

—— the pen of the scribes is in vain.] See notes at Ezra vii. 6: Matt. ii. 4. The expression in the text may relate to the answers, which those who were skilled in expounding the law gave in writing, when they were consulted in any difficult case: compare chap. xviii. 18. W. Lowth.

9. The wise men are ashamed, &c.] Those that have made their profession of wisdom have shamed themselves by their unanswerable practice: lo, they have cast off all care of doing that, which the word of God enjoins them; and how then can they challenge any true wisdom unto themselves? Bp. Hall.

10. — that shall inherit them:] Rather, that shall enter into possession. The Hebrew verb properly signifies to possess that which was the property of others, and therefore implies a dispossession of the former owners. Dr. Blayney.

13. — there shall be no grapes on the vine, &c.] These expressions appear to be metaphorical; signifying, that the nation should be deprived of all their real advantages, and also of what was ornamental, by a severe dispensation of God's providence. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

14. — let us be silent there:] The verb, rendered "be silent," implies forbearing to act, as well as to speak. The Prophet therefore hereby seems to advise, not to take measures of resistance, as they would be ineffectually employed against what God had determined. Dr. Blayney.

—— water of gall] Or, bitter water; that is, a severe judgment, which is often expressed by "the cup of God's wrath," or "displeasure." See chap. xxv. 15, 17; and ix. 15; xxiii. 15. W. Lowth.

16. — from Dan:] Nebuchadnezzar, having subdued Phenicia, passed through the tribe of Dan in his way to Jerusalem. Dr. Blayney.

—— strong ones;] The word, thus translated, signifies horses in several places: see chap. xlvii. 3; Judg. v. 22; and it is so understood here by the Seventy. W. Lowth.

17. — which will not be charmed,] See note at Ps. lviii. 4. That some persons possessed the power of rendering serpents harmless, is a well attested fact: but whether by certain herbs, or musical sounds, or by breaking out their teeth, or in what manner, is uncertain. Whatever were the methods commonly practised, the enemies of the Jews are here compared to such serpents as were not to be mollified or disarmed by any of those means: "They shall bite you, saith the Lord." Dr. Blayney.

19. Behold the voice of the cry &c.] For, behold, methinks I hear already the shrieks and cries of the Jews, because of the Babylonians, that are come in upon them from Chaldea; and yet they are still ready to presume upon their title and interest with God; and say, Is not the Lord worshipped by us in Zion? Bp. Hall.

20. The harvest is past, &c.] "The harvest is past, the summer is ended," which might have given us hopes and opportunities of succours; yet we hear of none from Egypt, or any other our associates: so that we have now lost all hopes of deliverance. Bp. Hall.

21. — I am black;] I look ghastly, as those who are dying: compare chap. xiv. 2; Joel ii. 6; Nahum ii. 10. W. Lowth.

22. Is there no balm in Gilead;] Either that particular balsam, now distinguished by the same name, and much celebrated by various ancient writers for its costliness and its medicinal virtues: or, as Bochart contends, the resin drawn from the terebinthus or turpentine tree, which was well known to have healing virtues; at least sufficient to answer the Prophet's question on this occasion: which was metaphorically to ask, if there were no salutary means within reach, or no persons that knew how to apply them, for the relief of his country from those miseries, with which it was afflicted. Dr. Blayney.

Chap. IX. ver. 2. Oh that I had &c.] The corrupt and profligate manners of the people are here set forth at large, and the denunciations of Divine vengeance are renewed against them, ver. 2—16. God summons the mourning women to bewail the calamities of the nation, ver. 17—22; forbids setting any value on personal endowments, except the knowledge of God and His attributes only, ver. 23, 24; and shews the punishment of the surrounding nations, circumcised and uncircumcised, to be near at hand. Dr. Blayney.

—— a lodging place of wayfaring men:] Travellers in the East are not, nor ever were, accommodated at inns on the road, after the manner of the European nations. In some towns indeed, but not in all, there are large publick buildings provided for their reception, which they call caravanseras: but these afford merely a covering, being absolutely without furniture, Judg. xix. 15. And, in passing through the desert, it is well if they can light upon a cave, or a hut, which some one before them may have erected for a temporary shelter. This is what appears to be here meant by "a lodging place;" a solitary, and not very comfortable, situation; but yet preferable to the chagrin of living continually in the society of men of profligate manners. Dr. Blayney.

6. Thine habitation is in the midst of deceit;] These are the words of God to the Prophet. W. Lowth.

——through deceit they refuse to know me, saith the Lord.] The knowledge of God, which is true religion, is incompatible with the habitual practice of any wickedness. And therefore it is natural enough for those, who are resolved at all events to abide in their evil courses, to endeavour, if possible, to divest themselves of all religious principles, which, if insufficient to restrain, will be sure at least to be very troublesome to them. For this cause they are ready to "say unto God, Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of Thy ways," Job xxi. 14. Dr. Blayney.

7. — Behold, I will melt them, and try them; &c.] In the fire of affliction. Bp. Hall.

10. — the habitations of the wilderness] This is more properly rendered in the margin, "the pastures of the wilderness." Compare Joel i. 19; ii. 22. "The wilderness" sometimes signifies the plain or champaign country, and is opposed to the mountains: see Isa. lxiii. 13; Lam. iv. 19; Joel i. 19. W. Lowth. It properly signifies a thinly inhabited country, used chiefly for sheep-walks. Dr. Blayney.

—— neither can men hear the voice of the cattle;] There shall be heard no more, in the plains or on the mountains, either the bleating of sheep, or the lowing of oxen: there shall no animal, wild or tame, be seen any more. Calmet.

11 — a den of dragons;] A place of horrour and desolation. Bp. Hall. The word, translated "dragons," among several other significations, is taken for a serpent, such as are usually found in ruins and desolate places. Compare chap. li. 37; Is. xiii. 21. xxxiv. 13; Ps. xliv. 19. W. Lowth.

12. Who is the wise man, &c.] In this style of interrogation the Prophet indirectly declares himself to be the person qualified by Divine inspiration to answer the question proposed in the latter part of the verse; which he accordingly does in the verse that follow. Dr. Blayney.

15. — I will feed them, — with wormwood, &c.] Compare this expression with Ps. lxxx. 5; 1 Kings xxii. 27. W. Lowth. See the note on Deut. xxix. 18.

17. — the mourning women, — cunning women,] It was an ancient custom of the Hebrews, at funerals, and on other like occasions, to make use of hired mourners, whose profession it was to exhibit in publick all the signs and gestures of immoderate and frantick grief, and by their loud outcries and doleful songs to excite and stir up a real passion of sorrow in others. Women were chiefly employed in this office; and St. Jerome, in his comment upon this verse, says, that the practice was continued in Judea down to his days. As it required a degree of skill to discharge this office for that reason these "mourning women" are likewise called "cunning;" that is, skilful women. Frequent allusions to this custom are to be met with in Scripture, particularly 2 Chron. xxxv. 25; Eccles. xii. 5; Amos v. 16; Matt. ix. 23; Mark v. 38. Nor was this practice peculiar to the Jews, as many instances of it occur in heathen writers. Dr. Blayney.

It is usual at funerals in Barbary to hire women, who, like "the mourning women" of old, are mistresses of the art, and indeed perform their parts with such proper gestures and commotions, that they rarely fail to work up the assembly into some extraordinary pitch of thoughtfulness and sorrow. Dr. Shaw.

Travellers inform us, that the same practice prevails in most of the provinces of the Levant. Calmet.

21. For death is come up into our windows, &c.] For the Chaldeans have scaled our walls, and entered into our cities; and are now breaking upon us in our houses, to inflict a sudden and cruel death upon us, wherein they will spare no age or sex, but put all without mercy to the sword. Bp. Hall.

22. — as the handful after the harvestman, &c.] This alludes to the manner of reaping corn in a field, where the reaper, as soon as he has cut what he can hold in his hand, lets it fall, and passes on; but is usually followed by another, who gathers what is cut, and binds it into sheaves. But here it is said, that there would be none to gather; and consequently the corn, after being cut, would lie neglected and rot on the ground: which renders the simile a very apt one. Dr. Blayney.

23. — Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, &c.] Let not men value themselves for their wisdom, strength, or riches, which are things of themselves of a very uncertain continuance, and such calamities are coming, (see ver. 25, 26,) in which they will stand the owners of them in very little stead. The only true valuable endowment is the knowledge of God, not as He is in Himself, which is too high an attainment for poor mortals to pretend to, but with respect to His dealings with man; to have a serious sense of His mercies to the penitent, of His judgments to the obstinate, and of His truth and integrity, in making good His promises and threatenings to both. 'Tis in the exercise of these attributes God chiefly delights; and 'tis by these He desires to make Himself known to the world; and he, that forms an apprehension of God chiefly with regard to these perfections, will always demean himself suitably towards Him. "Judgment" and "righteousness" are often equivalent terms; but if we distinguish them here, "judgment" denotes God's severity against the wicked, and "righteousness" His truth or holiness. W. Lowth.

26. Egypt, and Judah, and Edom, &c.] See these judgments denounced more at large, chap. xxv. 19, &c. The Prophet places Judah among the heathen nations, because the Jews were, in effect, that is, in a spiritual sense, uncircumcised as well as they: contenting themselves with the outward sign of circumcision, without endeavouring to procure the inward purity signified by it. W. Lowth.

— all that are in the utmost corners,] If we prefer the marginal reading, "they that have the corners of their hair polled," the expression denotes those Arabians who cut their hair upon the fore part of the head round, and let the hair behind grow long; which custom of theirs Herodotus mentions, and tells us, that they did it in imitation of Bacchus. It is probable, that the precept in Lev. xix. 27, "Ye shall not round the corners of your heads," hath reference to this custom, which was a rite in several countries near Judea, whereby they devoted themselves to the worship of some false god. W. Lowth.

Chap. X. The beginning of this chapter to the end of ver. 16 contains an earnest dissuasive against the practice of heathen idolatry, setting forth the vanity of idols in comparison with the true God. And this, no doubt, was designed by way of precaution to the Jews against the time of their removal out of their own land, to dwell amongst idolaters, as is predicted, ver. 17, 18. Jerusalem lamenteth the completion of her ruin, ver. 19; and humbly supplicateth the intervention of God's mercy, ver. 23 to the end. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 2. — be not dismayed at the signs of heaven; &c.] The word of God, far from encouraging groundless and superstitious horrours, cautions against them strongly. In all ages and nations, men have been terrified with eclipses of the sun and moon; in many, with conjunctions, oppositions, and aspects of the stars, and other celestial appearances: things altogether harmless. Therefore such groundless terrours the Prophet expressly condemns. But whatsoever things are real instruments of our Maker's will, we are to consider as such; and respect all that is wrought by them, as proceeding from His appointment. Abp. Secker.

— the signs of heaven;] The Chaldeans, among whom the Jews were destined to live in captivity, were particularly addicted to astrology, and attributed to the heavenly bodies a considerable influence over human affairs. This naturally tended to beget a religious dread and awe of those objects, from whence so much good or evil was supposed to be derived. Dr. Blayney.

5. They are upright as the palm tree,] This comparison agrees very well with those ancient statues which were seen in Egypt and elsewhere, before the Greeks had carried the art of sculpture to that perfection, to which it afterwards arrived. The Orientals, before the empire of the Greeks, had very little taste for things of this sort. Their figures were carved in a straight line, with their hands hanging down and fixed to their sides, their eyes closed, their feet joined: so that they differed little from the trunks of the palm trees, to which Jeremiah here compares them. Calmet.

7. — for to thee doth it appertain:] To Thee doth fear appertain. Dr. Durell.

—— among all the wise men of the nations, &c.] The phrase, "among all the wise," or the wisest, "of the nations," may signify, either all those nations which were most distinguished for the cultivation and improvement of their rational faculties; or else those from whom better notions of God and religion might have been expected, than from the rude and illiterate vulgar. And yet the fact was, that all their boasted wisdom and knowledge had failed of leading them to an object of worship, in any degree corresponding with the infinite perfections and majesty of the Divine nature. Dr. Blayney.

8. But they are altogether brutish &c.] "They that make images are like unto them," saith the Psalmist, Ps. cxv. 8; that is, they are equally stupid and insensible. An image is called "a teacher of lies," Hab. ii. 18. W. Lowth.

9. — Tarshish, — Uphaz,] For "Tarshish," see the notes at 1 Kings ix. 28; x. 22, Bochart supposes "Uphaz" to be the same with Ophir in India. W. Lowth. Concerning Ophir see the former note on Kings.

—— blue and purple is their clothing:] The excellency of the Tyrian purple is celebrated by both sacred and profane authors. And the blue, which from many passages in Scripture we find to have been in great request, was also imported from remote countries, as an article of elegant and expensive luxury. See Ezek. xxvii. 7, 24. Dr. Blayney.

—— they are all the work of cunning men.] As the insignificancy of idols may be argued from the vile and perishable matter out of which they are composed, (see Is. xliv. 19,) the same may be inferred from their being indebted to the art and labour of man for all their costly ornaments, their splendid outward shew. "They are all," says the Prophet, internally and externally, "the work of cunning" or skilful men. And so says the prophet Hosea, "All of it the work of the craftsmen," chap. xiii. 2. Upon what ground then could the thing formed pretend to a nature more excellent than its former? Dr. Blayney.

10. — at his wrath the earth shall tremble,] Jeremiah here represents the power and the greatness of God by the effects which they produce in nature. The things which strike men with most astonishment are earthquakes, thunder, lightning, the production of rain and winds, the creation of the universe. All these things are the work of the Lord. In His wrath He makes the earth tremble. When He speaks, He causes the thunder. If He make the lightning shine, it is to cause the rain to descend from the clouds. The winds are shut up in His treasures; He confines them by His power. He draws from the ends of the earth the materials, of which He forms the clouds. Such was the notion of the Hebrews concerning the production of these effects, which strike mortals with astonishment. They referred them immediately to God, as their natural cause. Calmet.

11. Thus shall ye say unto them, &c.] This verse is written in Chaldee, as if the Prophet designed to put these words in the mouths of the Jews, wherewith they might make a publick profession of their own faith in the true God, and be able to answer the heathens that would entice them to idolatry. W. Lowth. The title, "Creator of heaven and earth," that is, of the universe, (see note on Gen. i. 1,) is that which most especially characterizes and distinguishes the true God from all false and fictitious deities: see Ps. xcvi. 5; 2 Kings xix. 15, 19; Acts xiv. 15; xvii. 24. Dr. Isaac Barrow.

—— even they shall perish from the earth, &c.] The Prophet foretells, that there shall be a final period put to idolatry: see ver. 15; Is. ii. 18; xlv. 16; Zech. xiii. 2. God hath already blotted out the names of many of the heathen idols, as an earnest of the utter destruction of the remainders of idolatry in His due time. W. Lowth.

13. When he uttereth his voice, &c.] When God signifies His will and pleasure; (compare Job xxxviii. 34;) or when He sends His thunder, called in Scripture the "voice of God;" the clouds immediately fall down in abundance of rain; and that moisture, coming upon the ground that was scorched with heat before, does not only cool and refresh it, but makes all vegetables grow and flourish in it. *W. man is brutish, while he so employs his skill as to make a god to himself by his own art: every founder, if he had but reason to consider it, must needs be confounded in himself, at the sight of his own folly, in making that image which he will adore. Bp. Hall.

15. They are — the work of errors:] The making of them is owing to men's erroneous notions concerning the nature of God. See ver. 8. W. Lowth.

16. The portion of Jacob is not like them:] Upon the principles of heathenism, every nation was committed to the care and superintendency of its own tutelary god; who might with propriety be styled its own "portion," on account of the peculiar relation that subsisted between them. "The portion of Jacob" therefore is the same as the God of Jacob; He who had taken upon Himself the guardianship and protection of that family. But He was distinguished from all the rest, who, as before observed, were falsehood and vanity all of them, having no other existence than as lifeless images, the work of deluded men; whereas He was the Creator of the universe, of all that exists; and, that there might be no room to mistake the Being intended, He is further characterized as He who made choice of Israel for the special object of His concern, had marked him out for His own possession, as with a measuring rod; and to whom the name of Jehovah belonged. Dr. Blayney.

—— the rod of his inheritance:] This expression is taken from the first division of the land of Canaan, when the inheritance of each tribe and family was meted out with a line or a rod. W. Lowth.

17. Gather up thy wares out of the land, &c.] The Prophet here returns to his former denunciations against Jerusalem, and warns her to move her effects, and prepare for her going into captivity; compare Ezek. xii. 3; for though she thought herself secure, as dwelling in a place of great strength and well fortified, yet her enemies should prevail and take it. W. Lowth.

18. — Behold, I will sling out &c.] Behold, I will suddenly and violently cast out the inhabitants of the land, as a stone out of a sling. Bp. Hall.

—— at this once,] Or, "at this time." This implies, that though they had been often saved by God's providence from hostile attacks, they would however on this occasion find it otherwise. Dr. Blayney.

19. Woe is me &c.] In this and the following verses, the Prophet seems by anticipation to suggest motives of patience and consolation to his country, in regard to the evils that were coming upon her. These he puts into her own mouth, and makes her observe, first, that her affliction, though great, was such as by experience she had found to be tolerable: secondly, that she had less reason to complain of what she suffered, as it was no other than might have been expected from the misconduct of those who had the direction of her affairs: and lastly, that she was not without hope in the mercy of God, who, upon the humble supplication of His people, might be moved to mitigate their chastisement, and turn His hand against the heathen that oppressed them. Dr. Blayney.

20. My tabernacle is spoiled, &c.] My cities and houses are rifled and destroyed, as if they were so many shepherds' tents. See the note on chap. iv. 20. W. Lowth. By the breaking of the cords, the use of which is to fasten the tent on every side to stakes in the ground, and on the breaking of which the tent falls, it is implied that all the supports of city and country were gone. Poole.

23. O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself: &c.] Success does not depend upon human endeavours, but upon God's good pleasure; compare Ps. xxxvii. 23; Prov. xx. 24; and therefore Thou canst easily disappoint all the designs of our enemies. W. Lowth.

24. O Lord, correct me, but with judgment; &c.] O Lord, correct me, but in a gracious moderation; not in the extreme rigour of Thy justice; not, as we have deserved, in Thy wrath and displeasure. Bp. Hall.

The speaker here humbly entreats Almighty God to deal out His corrections in such a moderate degree, as to shew that He aimed at the amendment, and not the destruction, of the offender. The Hebrew word here translated "judgment," properly signifies "calm and dispassionate judgment," which stands opposed to the hasty sallies of anger and furious revenge. And though the latter cannot actually exist in God, it is sometimes however nominally attributed to Him, whenever the effects of His displeasure are so violent, as to stop nothing short of utter ruin; although such a proceeding may be justifiable upon the most solid principles of reason and equity. As therefore to "punish with anger," implies an unrelenting rigour and severity; so to "correct with judgment," admits the use of such moderation, as is consistent with the sinner's personal safety, whilst it promotes his reformation. Dr. Blayney.

25. Pour out thy fury upon the heathen &c.] Let Thy justice be made known, by bringing an exemplary punishment upon the Chaldeans and their allies, see chap. i. 15; who do not acknowledge Thy providence, but ascribe all their successes to their own idols. W. Lowth.

Chap. XI. ver. 1. The word that came to Jeremiah &c.] The prophecy contained in this and the following chapter may not improperly be assigned to the reign of Josiah; only to the latter end of it, when the people, who in the eighteenth year of that prince had solemnly engaged to perform the obligations of the Divine covenant, may in course of time be supposed to have relapsed into their former disregard and neglect. The Prophet is therefore sent to recall them to their duty, by proclaiming anew the terms of the covenant, and rebuking them sharply for their hereditary disobedience, ver. 1—8. He denounceth evil against the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem for their idolatrous apostacy, ver. 9—17; and being informed of the conspiracy of the men of Anathoth against his life by Divine revelation, he prayeth against them, and is authorized to foretell their utter destruction. Dr. Blayney.

3. — Cursed be the man &c.] It is a way of speaking usual in Scripture, to denounce God's judgments in the form of imprecation: so the Apostle pronounces an excommunication, by saying, "Let him be accursed," or "Anathema," Gal. i. 8; 1 Cor. xvi. 22. To the same sense St. Paul saith of Alexander the coppersmith, "The Lord reward him according to his works," 2 Tim. iv. 14. Thus the imprecations we meet with in several of the Psalms are to be understood as so many predictions, or denunciations of God's judgments. Accordingly St. Peter, speaking of the 109th Psalm, saith, that in it the Holy Ghost "spake before (or prophesied) by the mouth of David concerning Judas," Acts i. 16. W. Lowth.

A wholesome instruction is to be derived from the curse, which God denounces against those who keep not His covenant. Let us reflect on this, and remember that God hath made a more excellent covenant with us than with the Jews; and that this covenant engages us still more strictly to hear His voice, and to do all that He hath commanded us; so that, if we break it, we shall incur a much heavier punishment. We ought farther to consider, that it is not only by worshipping idols that the Divine covenant is broken; but that may be done likewise by breaking the vows which we have made to God, and by withdrawing our hearts from Him and giving them to the world. Osterwald.

5. — Then answered I, and said, So be it, O Lord.] The Prophet confirms the words of this curse, according to the form prescribed in Deut. xxvii. 26; and thereby approves the justice of it. W. Lowth.

9. — A conspiracy is found among the men of Judah, &c.] The men of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem have banded together and conspired wilfully in evil, and have resolved to encourage each other in wickedness. Bp. Hall.

11. — though they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them.] Their destruction was irreversible upon supposition of their continuance in their evil ways, which God foresaw they would do. W. Lowth.

and those sacrifices, which now they pretend to offer, are not holy oblations, but profane and common flesh? Yea, O My people, thou art come to that height of impiety, as that thou rejoicest in evil. Bp. Hall.

—— the holy flesh is passed from thee?] The flesh of thy sacrifices, which thou offerest up unto Me, as an atonement for thy sins, doth not at all profit thee, being polluted and rendered unacceptable to Me, through those many and great sins, in which thou continuest without remorse, and even takest a pride in committing them: see chap. vi; and compare Hag. ii. 12, 13, 14. W. Lowth.

16. The Lord called thy name, A green olive tree, &c.] St. Paul plainly alludes to this verse, Rom. xi. 17. The Jewish nation, in its flourishing state, is sometimes compared to a vine, sometimes to an olive tree, chiefly because of the fruits of good works, which God might justly expect from them, after all the care and pains He had bestowed upon them, to make them thrive and fructify. See Ps. lii. 8. W. Lowth.

18. And the Lord hath given me knowledge of it, &c.] This relates to the evil designs of the men of Anathoth against the Prophet, which, he saith, God had revealed to him. See the following verses. W. Lowth.

23. — the year of their visitation.] When I will visit their sins upon them: see chap. xxiii. 12; xlvi. 21; xlviii. 44; l. 27. The words "year" and "day" often signify a set or determined time. See Is. lxi. 2. W. Lowth.

Chap. XII. The Prophet here ventures freely, though with professions of confidence in the Divine justice, to expostulate with God concerning the prosperity of wicked men in general; whose punishment he solicits, attesting the mischiefs that were continually brought on the land by their unrestrained wickedness, ver. 1—4. In reply he is forewarned to expect, that, in proportion to the power of his enemies, his own personal grievances would naturally increase; whilst the distractions of the state, and the unkindness of his kinsfolks, precluded him all hopes of either publick or private redress, ver. 5, 6. But God expressly challenges the national calamities as the result of His own special determination and judgment. He had discarded His people for their malicious behaviour towards Him, and they were therefore given up to the outrage and devastation of fierce and merciless invaders, ver. 7—13. At last He promises them a restoration in future, and threatens punishment upon their heathen neighbours who had oppressed them; but with this reservation, that such of these, as would come over to His established worship, He would receive and incorporate into His Church; but the unbelieving part should be utterly extirpated. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. Righteous art thou, O Lord, &c.] Though I doubt not of Thy justice and holiness, yet suffer me to argue with Thee concerning the prosperity of the wicked, and the afflictions of the righteous: a dispensation, which hath in all ages been made an objection against Providence, and upon that account been a stumblingblock even to good men: see Job xii. 6; xxi. 7, &c.; Ps. xxxvii. and lxxiii. W. Lowth.

2. — thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins.] The true character of hypocrites, who, according to Isaiah's description of them, "honour God with their lips, but their heart is far from Him," Isaiah xxix. 13; Mark vii. 6. "The reins" in Scripture signify the thoughts and inward dispositions. W. Lowth.

4. — because they said, He shall not see our last end.] That is, He will not concern Himself about rewarding or punishing us hereafter. The inference, which bad men are apt to draw from God's past forbearance, is, that He is totally regardless of the moral conduct of mankind. Hence, promising themselves the same impunity in future, which they have hitherto experienced, they are led to a free indulgence of all their vicious inclinations. Accordingly the Psalmist, complaining, as the Prophet does here, of the prosperity of the wicked, represents their behaviour and their principles in terms exactly similar. See Ps. xciv. 5, 6, 7. Dr. Blayney.

5. If thou hast run with the footmen, &c.] Here God answers the complaint of the Prophet, and applies a proverbial expression to his case. W. Lowth. The sense of the proverb seems to be, If thou art not able to encounter less dangers, how wilt thou be able to overcome greater? Poole.

—— in the swelling of Jordan?] The ravages of war and hostile invasion are often represented in Scripture under the image of a river rising rapidly above its banks, and carrying all before it. To these inundations the river Jordan was very subject. Dr. Blayney.

9. Mine heritage is unto me as a speckled bird, &c.] My people are become wild and savage, (see ver. 8,) and not to be tamed; and, like "a speckled" or "taloned bird," are only fit for prey and deeds of violence. And as all the rest of the birds flock round such an one, and are ready to pull it to pieces; so I have stirred up all the enemies of My people to annoy them on every side; compared here to so many beasts of prey: see chap. ii. 15; Isa. lvi. 9; Hab. ii. 17. The word here rendered "speckled" is of an uncertain signification, being found but in this one place of the Bible, unless perhaps, 1 Sam. xiii. 18, where some look upon it as a proper name. The Septuagint understand it of the hyena, which sense is followed by Bochart. But if we take it in either signification, the sense is much the same. W. Lowth.

10. Many pastors have destroyed my vineyard,] By "many pastors" are meant the generals of the Chaldean army; so the Chaldee paraphrase rightly explains it: see ver. 12, and compare chap. vi. 3. God calls Judea "His vineyard and pleasant portion," because of the care He took to cultivate and improve it, and the fruit He might justly have expected from it: see the note on chap. xi. 16. W. Lowth.

12. — upon all high places through the wilderness:] Rather, "upon all the plains in the wilderness;" that is, the smooth plots of greensward in the waste or uncultivated country, which afford pasturage to the cattle. Dr. Blayney. See note on chap. iv. 10.

13. — they shall be ashamed of your revenues] Or, "Be ye ashamed of your increase." God's displeasure shall make all your designs abortive, they shall not bring forth their expected fruit, and you shall be seized with shame and confusion to see yourselves disappointed: compare chap. ii. 36, 37. The word "revenues," or "increase," alludes to the "reaping of thorns," mentioned in the foregoing part of the verse. W. Lowth.

14. Thus saith the Lord against all mine evil neighbours, &c.] This prophecy threatens chiefly Idumeans, Moabites, Ammonites, and Philistines, against whom Jeremiah prophesies, chap. xlvii, xlviii, and xlix; and Ezekiel, chap. xxv. These are called "evil neighbours," because of the spite and ill-will which they shewed toward the Jews on all occasions, at this time especially, when most of them joined with the Chaldeans and Syrians in opposing them: see 2 Kings xxiv. 2. This sin is particularly laid to their charge by the Prophets, and they are threatened with captivity chiefly on that account: see chap. xlix. 1, 2; Ezek. xxv. 3, 6, 8, 12, 15; Amos i. 11; Obad. ver. 10; Zeph. ii. 8. W. Lowth.

15. And it shall come to pass, after that I have plucked them out &c.] The captivity threatened to the Jews and their neighbours seems to be confined to seventy years: see chap. xxv. 11; xxvii. 7; Is. xxiii. 15. We may observe likewise, that after Jeremiah hath threatened severe judgments upon several countries, he com-

Before CHRIST about 608. have compassion on them, and will bring them again, every man to his heritage, and every man to his land.

16 And it shall come to pass, if they will diligently learn the ways of my people, to swear by my name, The LORD liveth; as they taught my people to swear by Baal; then shall they be built in the midst of my people.

[e] Jer. 60. 12. 17 But if they will not [e] obey, I will utterly pluck up and destroy that nation, saith the LORD.

CHAP. XIII.

1 In the type of a linen girdle, hidden at Euphrates, God prefigureth the destruction of his people. 12 Under the parable of the bottles filled with wine he foretelleth their drunkenness in misery. 15 He exhorteth to prevent their future judgments. 22 He sheweth their abominations are the cause thereof.

about 602. THUS saith the LORD unto me, Go and get thee a linen girdle, and put it upon thy loins, and put it not in water.

2 So I got a girdle according to the word of the LORD, and put it on my loins.

3 And the word of the LORD came unto me the second time, saying,

4 Take the girdle that thou hast got, which is upon thy loins, and arise, go to Euphrates, and hide it there in a hole of the rock.

5 So I went, and hid it by Euphrates, as the LORD commanded me.

6 And it came to pass after many days, Before CHRIST about 602. that the LORD said unto me, Arise, go to Euphrates, and take the girdle from thence, which I commanded thee to hide there.

7 Then I went to Euphrates, and digged, and took the girdle from the place where I had hid it: and, behold, the girdle was marred, it was profitable for nothing.

8 Then the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

9 Thus saith the LORD, After this manner will I mar the pride of Judah, and the great pride of Jerusalem.

10 This evil people, which refuse to hear my words, which walk in the ‖ imagination of their heart, and walk after other gods, to serve them, and to worship them, shall even be as this girdle, which is good for nothing.

‖ Or, stubbornness.

11 For as the girdle cleaveth to the loins of a man, so have I caused to cleave unto me the whole house of Israel and the whole house of Judah, saith the LORD; that they might be unto me for a people, and for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory: but they would not hear.

12 ¶ Therefore thou shalt speak unto them this word; Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Every bottle shall be filled with wine: and they shall say unto thee, Do we not certainly know that every bottle shall be filled with wine?

cludes with a general promise of returning from their captivity in the latter days: see chap. xlviii. 47; xlix. 6, 39. Which promise relates probably to their conversion under the Gospel, called in Scripture "the latter days." W. Lowth.

16. — then shall they be built in the midst of my people.] I will make one Church of Jews and Gentiles; and if those nations shall frame themselves to the true worship of My name, and to the profession of the religion of My people, then will I establish them in My Church, as true and lively members thereof. Bp. Hall. The acceptance of the believing Gentiles is here clearly intimated; and their union with the Church of God, the middle wall of partition being broken down. See concerning the actual accomplishment of this prophecy, Eph. ii. 13—22. Dr. Blayney.

17. But if they will not obey, &c.] Those that will not have God and Christ to reign over them, shall in the end be punished with everlasting destruction. See Is. lx. 12; Luke xix 27; compared with Rev. xix. 21. W. Lowth.

It is never to be believed, that the wicked and the hypocrites shall escape unpunished, or that they are truly happy, because God spares them for a while. The threatenings of the Lord have sooner or later their effect: nor are they less sure, because He defers the execution of them. Ostervald.

Chap. XIII. This chapter contains a single and distinct prophecy, which, under two symbols, a linen girdle left to rot, and all vessels being filled with wine, foretells the utter destruction that was destined to fall upon the whole Jewish nation, including individuals of every rank and denomination, ver. 15—21; and the cause of all the evils is assigned in the general corruption and profligacy of manners that prevailed without a prospect of amendment, ver. 22 to the end. The particular mention of the joint downfall of the king and queen (ver. 18) seems to justify the opinion which ascribes this prophecy to the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim, whose fate with that of his queen is in like manner noticed together. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. — and put it not in water.] God explains at ver. 11 what was meant by the symbol of the girdle or sash worn about the loins, namely, His people Israel, whom He purchased and redeemed of old, and attached to Himself by a special covenant; that as a girdle serveth for an ornament to the wearer, so they should be subservient to the honour and glory of His name. But, it is added, "they would not hear" or conform to His intentions; therefore being polluted with the guilt of their disobedience, they were in that state, and on that very account, to be carried into captivity; conformably to which the Prophet was directed, "not to put the girdle in water;" that is, not to wash it, but to leave it in that filthiness, which it had contracted in wearing. Dr. Blayney.

4. — arise, go to Euphrates.] God commanded the Prophet to hide the girdle by the bank of Euphrates, to signify the Jews being carried captive over that river, called "the waters of Babylon," Ps. cxxxvii. 1. Most commentators are of opinion, that this was performed by the Prophet only in a vision: it not being probable that God should send him on two such long journeys as are mentioned here, and ver. 6, merely upon this errand: see a like instance chap. xxv. 17. Several things are related in Scripture as actually done, which yet were only transacted in a vision. W. Lowth.

the brim with wine. Then shall the hearers take this prophecy in scorn, and say, What wonders are these thou tellest us? As if we knew not that the use of bottles is to be filled with wine! Bp. Hall.

13. — Behold, I will fill all the inhabitants &c.] Even thus every inhabitant of this land shall be filled up with the wine of God's wrath; and shall be, as it were, drunken therewith. Bp. Hall.

God's judgments are often represented under the figure of a cup full of intoxicating liquor: see this metaphor at large pursued, chap. xxv. 15, &c. W. Lowth. See Bp. Lowth's note on Is. li. 17.

14. And I will dash them one against another,] I will confound and destroy them all, as earthen vessels are broken to pieces, when they are dashed one against another. The words allude to the earthen bottles, which were to be filled with wine, ver. 12. Compare chap. xix. 10, 11; xlviii. 12. W. Lowth.

16. Give glory to the Lord your God, &c.] Confess your faults, (compare Josh. vii. 19,) and humble yourselves under His mighty hand, before He bring upon you the night of affliction. Light is the emblem of joy, and happy times are expressed by bright and pleasant days; as, on the contrary, troubles and calamities are represented by the night and darkness, when every thing looks melancholy and dismal: see chap. iv. 23; xv. 9; Is. v. 30; viii. 22; Joel ii. 10; Amos viii. 9, 10. W. Lowth.

——the dark mountains.] Before the time comes, when ye shall be forced to fly by night upon the mountains, for fear of your enemies. See chap. xvi. 16; Ps. xi. 1; Ezek. vii. 16; Matt. xxiv. 16. W. Lowth.

18. — Humble yourselves, sit down:] That sitting was a posture of humiliation under circumstances of affliction and distress, see Judg. xx. 26; Job ii. 8; Is. iii. 26. Dr. Blayney.

19. The cities of the south shall be shut up,] Judah lying south in respect of Chaldea, which in the next verse is characterized by the name of "the north," the "cities of the south" may mean the cities of Judah in general. Or, they may mean those cities in particular which lay in the southern parts of Judah, at the greatest distance from the enemy; which yet were subjected to the common calamity, as well as those which were nearer at hand. Dr. Blayney.

20. — where is the flock that was given thee,] Judah seems here to be addressed as a person, being asked with a sarcastical sneer what was become of all the numerous multitudes, which God had given her formerly, constituting, like flocks of sheep, the national wealth and glory? Dr. Blayney.

21. — for thou hast taught them to be captains, &c.] Some have understood the alliances, contracted heretofore with the Assyrians by Ahaz, and the conduct of Hezekiah towards the ambassadours of the king of Babylon, to be here alluded to, as having paved or prepared the way for the future invasion of the country by the Chaldeans. But I rather think the irreligious and wicked manners of the people are principally designed; which put them out of the protection of Almighty God, and rendered them an easy conquest to any enemy that came against them. Thus they taught their enemies to oppress and to be lords over them; against whom, but for their own faults, they might have maintained their security and independence. Dr. Blayney.

22. — are thy skirts discovered, and thy heels made bare.] Those enormous crimes deserve no less punishment than that of captivity; when thou shalt be carried away unto a strange country, stripped and bare, without any covering to thy nakedness; for such was the barbarous cruelty of conquerours to their captives: see Is. iii. 17; xx. 4; xlvii. 3; Lam. i. 8; iv. 21; Nahum iii. 5. W. Lowth.

23. — then may ye also do good, &c.] The meaning of this is, that they who are accustomed to do evil will find the work of repentance and reformation to be, not indeed impossible, but extremely difficult. The genius of sublime and figurative language requires such lively expressions, and describes things which are hard to be accomplished as quite impossible. That the words are to be thus understood appears from the whole chapter, which contains terrible denunciations against the Jews, of evils which should come upon them for their impiety. These threats are mixed with exhortations to repentance, and then follow the words, "Can the Ethiopian &c;" which must not therefore be taken as a declaration that they could not possibly repent: for then the Prophet ought not to have pressed them in the same discourse to amend their ways, and to give glory to the Lord, before He caused darkness, and before their feet stumbled, and they should fall to rise no more. Dr. Jortin.

Chap. XIV. It may be presumed, that this prophecy was delivered in the beginning of Jehoiakim's reign, not long after the foregoing. The six first verses of this chapter foretell great distress that should be occasioned in Judah by means of a long drought. The Prophet in the name of the people makes a confession of sins, and supplicates the Divine mercy, ver. 7—9. God declareth His resolution to punish, and will not be entreated, ver. 10—12. Jeremiah complains of false prophets, who amuse the people with contrary predictions; God disclaimeth them, and threatens both them, and the people who listen to them, with sword and famine, ver. 13—18. The Prophet renews his supplications in the people's name and behalf, ver. 19 to the end of the chapter. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. — concerning the dearth.] Or, "the drought:" so the word is rendered by the Greek, Chaldee, and Syriack versions; and so it is rendered by our translators also in chap. xvii. 8. The Hebrew word signifies restraint; that is, "when the heaven is shut up, that there is no rain," as the Scriptures express it, Deut. xi. 17; 1 Kings viii. 35. W. Lowth. That drought was a calamity incident to the land of Israel, and applied as a punishment for sin, may be seen from comparing Deut. xi. 17; xxviii. 23; 1 Kings viii. 35. Dr. Blayney.

2. — the gates thereof languish;] The gates of cities, being places of publick resort, where the courts of justice were held, and other common business transacted, seem here to be put for the persons that meet there: as when we say, "the court is in mourning," we mean the persons that attend the court or king's palace. So by this passage we are to understand, that all the persons who appear in publick are dejected, and put on black or mourning, on account of the national distress. Dr. Blayney. Or, that they look black and ghastly, and cast themselves down upon the ground out of grief and despair. Compare chap. viii. 21; xiii. 18. W. Lowth.
